Ticket Speculators Get Right to Soak Playgoers to Limit

The New York law enacted to curb the profits of the theater ticket brokers was held unconstitutional by the U. S. Supreme Court yesterday. The decision was 5 to 4 with Justices Holmes, Stone, Brandeis and Sanford dissenting.

The case was appealed by Tyson and Brother, United Ticket Officers, who alleged the law which prohibited them from reselling tickets at more than fifty cents in excess of the regular price, violated the Fourtbe to the Amendment by depriving them of property without due process of law.

Night Workers To Meet.

Cloakmakers Ball At I. L. D. Bazaar to Help Defense Fund

All proceeds from the cloakmakers' Ladies' Garment Workers' ball at the International Labor Defense bazaar in Star Casino, 107th St. and Park Avenue, March 10-11 are going to the defense of the cloakmakers. Realizing the urgent need for funds, the I. L. D. set aside this special booth for the defense of the cloakmakers.

If the employing class who use the police, Judge Rosalsky and others against the workers, have to be fought successfully, all working class forces must cooperate in the fight.

This year the I. L. D. bazaar is going to be a demonstration of solidarity and protest against persecution the world over. Cloakmakers, persecuted workers in Lithuania, class war prisoners and their dependents, political refugees in America, will all benefit. With the bazaar taking on such a wide and immediate appeal workers must take part. The I. L. D. office, 799 Broadway, Room 422, is open day and night to receive donations and assistance.

Coney Island Party Will Meet on March 1

A special meeting of the Coney Island branch of the Workers' Party will be held March 1, at 2802 Mermaid Avenue.

Arrangements have been made for two classes to be held every Thursday at 8 p. m. One will be English for beginners and the other a class in Fundamentals of Communism. Nonparty members are welcome.

CHINESE LEADER BILLED TO SPEAK AT IRISH MEETING

Irish Workers to Honor Martyr's Memory

Samuel Chang, member of the editorial staff of the Chinese Nationalist Daily, a member of the Kuomintang Party and active worker in the movement for the liberation of China from world imperialism will be one of the principal speakers at a mass meeting in Bryant Hall, 42nd Street and 6th Avenue on Friday evening, March 4, to honor the memory of Robert Emmett, Irish revolutionary leader who was murdered by the British government in 1803 for leading the Irish masses in a revolt against British rule.

Actor to Speak.

In addition to Mr. Chang, Lieutenant Charles Underwood, member of the Actor's Equality Association, formerly of the British army will represent the sentiments of millions of British workers who aim to establish a Workers Republic on the ruins of British capitalism.

William F. Dunne, editor of The DAILY WORKER will speak on James Connolly, the leader of the Irish rebellion of 1916. T. J. O'Flaherty will preside.

The meeting is being arranged by the Irish Workers Republican Alliance which aims to assist the Irish workers in achieving political and economic independence.

Baffled British Toryism

The British imperialist press adopts a tone of baffled fury in its comment on the note sent by the Soviet Union in reply to that of Sir Austen Chamberlain.

According to the London correspondent of the New York Times, "hypocritical," "impudent," "insolent," "evasive," "mendacious" and "defiant" are some of the adjectives used in their comment on the Soviet reply to the British note."

The "diehard" organs run the gamut of abuse but the Daily News has a more realistic tone. It says:

"If we were to break with Russia tomorrow we should lose, as we can ill afford to do, a useful market and one with incalculable potentialities, and instead of destroying the anti-British campaign of a government which fanatically regards Great Britain as the main obstacle in its ideal of world revolution, we should increase it a hundred fold. There is no escape from the dilemma."

The Daily Express is also cautious:

"Russia, whatever we may think about her hateful political and social system, remains an enormous part of the world. She would not mysteriously disappear if we broke off official relations. On the contrary her efforts at propaganda and subversion would be relieved of all pretense of restraint."

The New York Evening Post tries in its editorial comment to inject a comedy note. It pictures the writers of the Soviet Union note as burlesque diplomats. But this view, it is apparent from the extracts quoted above, is not widely held in Great Britain.

As the Daily Express says in effect, after all Russia is THERE. The workers' and peasants' government of the Soviet Union is the most tremendous fact in the world and the second great fact, as British imperialism is learning to its sorrow, is that it is an inexhaustible source of inspiration to the oppressed masses ruled by Britain. The third fact is that war on the Soviet Union is not popular among the world's working class and would in itself be a powerful factor in bringing into being new uprisings in British colonies.

The conclusion is that unless British imperialism is prepared to stake the empire in a war which is a challenge to the whole working class and all colonial peoples and from which the social revolution would quite probably arise, it has to recognize the Soviet Union as a force more powerful than the British empire.

So far Great Britain has come off second best in the exchange of notes and while we do not believe in omens, we are convinced that she will suffer the same fate in the far more serious business of war.

British imperialism may as well understand that in talking to the Soviet Union it is not talking to the representatives of unarmed and helpless masses but to a government which has the most loyal population in the world and whose crimson banner flies over one-sixth of the earth's surface.

Filipino Independence and the Chinese Liberation Movement

The Filipino nationalists are talking right out in meeting since the Chinese revolution has shown to the hundreds of millions of colonial people that imperialism is far from invulnerable. Speaking at a dinner given to welcome him back to Manila, Commissioner Gabaldon said:

To abdicate now from the ideal of complete independence when the Orient is on the crest of intense nationalism—Java and Sumatra agitating the overthrow of foreign control, India clamoring for the right to stand by herself and China fighting against allen interference—would be the blackest stain on the escutcheon of the Filipino people.

Up to a short time ago the Filipino independence movement was based almost entirely on the promise of independence contained in the preamble to the Jones Bill—a promise which the Coolidge administration has repudiated in fact if not in words by the introduction of the Bacon Bill and the report of Carmi Thompson.

The Filipino masses, if their leaders have told them the truth, will understand now that the 50 or more U. S. warships in the Far East are a demonstration against their efforts toward independence as well as a threat to the Chinese liberation movement.

But if the new defiant and more realistic attitude of the Filipino leaders is to mean anything it must be given practical expression in the organization of a powerful labor and peasant movement.

This is the base of the Chinese liberation movement and this is the main lesson to be drawn from it by the Filipino masses.

The financial editor of the New York Evening Post (controlled by Thomas W. Lamont of the house of Morgan) says:

All in all the McFadden measure is a distinctively constructive measure and is so regarded by a majority of the Wall Street authorities.

This is the bill which Coolidge signed while vetoing the farm relief bill. Both bills were passed by a united front of bankers and "progressive" congressmen and senators.

The bankers got theirs and are much relieved. The farmers, it is to be hoped, have been relieved of their confidence in men and methods which make bankers beneficiaries and farmers bankrupts.

A Socialist in Search of a Workers' Party

By ALEX BITTELMAN.

Of the many contradictions that have been disturbing the socialist party of America since and after the imperialist war, one particular contradiction is coming to forefront of late with ever increasing intensity. This is the conflict between general pre-war philosophy of the socialist party based on the principle of the class struggle and its actual practices during the same period which constitute a betrayal of the class struggle and a surrender to capitalism.

This contradiction between the class struggle theory (however confused it may be) and class collaborationist practice of the American socialist party is demanding a solution. This demand had been voiced on various occasions by various elements in the party: right wing, center and so-called left wing. But no solution had been found up to date, except that the reformist practices of the socialist party are becoming ever more dominant while its theory of pre-war days is receding farther and farther into the dim past. Even a cursory glance at the symposium ran in the New Leader (socialist weekly, New York) on the task and function of the socialist party would be sufficient to prove our contention. A detailed analysis of this symposium would undoubtedly prove very instructive and characteristic of the members of the socialist party, particularly its few proletarian elements, and for this reason we shall yet come back to this symposium at some future date. Here we shall deal only with one of the articles in the symposium, the one by Louis Francis Budenz on the socialist party and the trade unions (New Leader, February 12, 1927).

Wants S. P. to Penetrate Unions.

Louis Budenz criticizes the socialist party for ignoring the industrial struggles of the workers and the trade unions. He says:

"If one comes to a survey of the position and activities of the socialist party in America from the viewpoint of furthering the industrial struggle plenty of facts can be mustered to show that the party has not done all that it should have done. Lost in the mazes of parliamentarism, it has all too long neglected the obvious fact that the primary struggle of the American workers for control of industry is still on the industrial field rather than in the halls of congress, and probably always will be.

Hence, Budenz concludes, the socialist party must turn its attention away from parliamentarism and toward industrial action and trade unionism correctly, he proposes "that the socialist party begin to penetrate the trade unions, which he considers "the chief hope of the workers," promote the struggles of the unions which should include the socialization of industry with workers' control "as the full fruition of the workers' hopes," and also to work for a labor party. He holds out before the socialists an independent labor party in Great Britain and urges the S. P. of A. to attempt to play the same role in America.

What kind of penetration is it that Budenz is urging upon the S. P.? He explains as follows:

"Now, it is perfectly clear that this is a plea not for the CAPTURE of the unions by certain socialists or radical groups or leaders—a policy doomed to complete defeat—but for a PENETRATION of the unions by a radical philosophy, based on a sympathetic desire to attain victory for the workers now and in the future.

Fine Sentiments and Poor Reasoning.

It seems to us, from the article under consideration, that Budenz is being moved to his reflections by something which is both basic and vital for the workers and the labor movement. But his reasoning is deeply confused showing a lack of clear understanding as to what he really wants.

Take his criticisms of the socialist party. Not only are they incomplete with regard to presenting a true picture of everyday socialist practices but they fail totally to expose the basic reasons for these non-working class practices.

Is it true, as Budenz says, that the S. P. got lost in the "mazes of parliamentarism"? Yes, it is. But is that the whole truth? No, it is not. To make Budenz's statement reflect the whole truth, one must formulate it this way: the socialist party got hopelessly lost in the mazes of petty-bourgeois, middle-class parliamentarism. This is what happened to the socialist party. It abandoned the position of class struggle political action, including the revolutionary use of parliamentary action, and substituted for it reformist parliamentarism. It ceased to be a political party of the workers and degenerated into a parliamentary club of petty bourgeois reformists.

Budenz must have had some such feeling himself when he qualified his article as "a plea for activity among the real workers as the first objective of the radical movement, rather than highfalutin lectures before little groups of middle class folks, seeking to impress their wisdom and derive their social consciousness."

The mistake that Budenz seems to be making is this: that together with the futile, middle class parliamentarism of the socialist party he also proposes to discard the correct, the working class, the revolutionary use of parliamentary action as advocated by Lenin and followed in the interests of the struggle against capitalism by the Communist parties in all capitalist countries.

Socialist Party Surrendered to Trade Union Reactionaries.

The second mistake that Budenz makes is his half-truth criticism of the industrial policies of the socialist party.

It is true, as Budenz says, that the S. P. "has all too long neglected the obvious fact that the primary struggle of the American workers for control of industry is still on the industrial field rather than in the halls of congress?" It is and it is not. What is true in this statement? It is true that the S. P. has all too long neglected the primary struggles of the American workers. But it neglected these struggles on all fields, political as well as industrial. And it did so for the reason that it ceased to be a working class party and hence ceased to be interested in the struggles of the American workers, primary and others. This is how Budenz must be supplemented to make his statements reflect the whole truth.

But even this is not a complete statement of the case. For while it is true that the socialist party had no positive policy in favor of the struggles of the American workers it had invariably had a negative policy which worked against the struggles of the American workers.

Speaking more concretely, it means this. The socialist party, as a party, has abandoned the sphere of industrial struggles, and by doing so has left the field completely in the hands of the reactionary trade union bureaucracy. But this is only one phase. The next phase is more positive. It shows the socialist party as a party and through its various leaders in the unions) in close alliance with the most reactionary and corrupt elements among the trade union bureaucracy. The recorded history of the American labor movement during the last ten years will prove conclusively that every time a conflict arose between progress and reaction in the unions, most of the socialist party trade unionists and the party as such were invariably lined up on the side of reaction and against progress.

And the third mistake that Budenz makes is when he says that the primary struggle of the American workers for control of industry "is still on the industrial field rather than in the halls of congress, and probably always will be."

This formulation is confusing. What does one mean by struggle for workers' control of industry? It means a struggle against capitalist control of industry, i. e., a revolutionary struggle for the overthrow of the capitalist system and the establishment of socialism as a step toward Communism. That such a revolutionary change cannot be accomplished from within "the halls of congress" is quite obvious, although in the preparation of the working revolutionary use of parliamentary struggles is of vital importance.

But the basic thing to remember is that the struggle for workers' control of industry, if it is to be successful, must inevitably lead to struggle for power and the establishment of the proletarian dictatorship. This is a political struggle (not to be confused with pure parliamentarism) in which all the struggles of the workers on the industrial field find their concentrated expression. It is quite true that this conception of the class struggle is not the conception of the socialist party. As was shown above, the socialist party has abandoned the proletarian class struggle altogether. But this only proves that the entire plea of Budenz was sadly misdirected. The socialist party can no longer respond to pleas which call for struggle along any kind.

A Slogan Full of Dangers.

Budenz proposes penetration of the unions "by a radical philosophy," but warns against the capture of the unions "by certain socialist or radical groups." He considers the latter "a policy doomed to complete defeat." This slogan of "penetration but no capture" may sound nice but it is full of dangers. Moreover, too strict a devotion to such a policy inevitably leads to compromise with and surrender to the reactionary bureaucracy, which makes penetration sheer mockery.

To attempt really to penetrate the unions with a radical philosophy "based on a sympathetic desire to attain victory for the workers," means to engage in the most intensive struggle with the policy of class collaboration, compromise, betrayal, corruption and surrender to the bosses which is now dominating the American trade union movement. This means a life and death struggle against the reactionary trade union bureaucracy. Why? Because any attempt at progressive action in the trade unions, however mild provided it is sincere and consistent, meets the bitterest and most unscrupulous attacks of the reactionaries. The latter stop before nothing to stem the advance of progressive and working class ideology in the unions. Isn't Budenz aware of that? Isn't he familiar with the history of the American labor movement? Right now, today, the trade union reactionaries are bending heaven and earth to expel, destroy and rid the unions of every progressive element even at the cost of destroying the unions? What lesson can we learn from even the most timid attempts of the progressives and left wingers in the Miners' Union and in the Needle Trades Unions, to mention only two?

The only lesson to be derived from these and other experiences is this: that in order to make the unions what they ought to be—organs of struggle for the interests of the workers—unions must be wrested completely out of the hands of the reactionaries and placed where they belong, in the hands of the rank and file, led by progressive and left wing leadership. This must be the program of every true and honest progressive in the trade unions. This is the program of the Trade Union Educational League. And it is to these elements that Budenz must turn for a solution of the problems which confront the American trade union movement at the present time.

The Rand School:

A Letter from James Fuchs and a Reply

Editors of The DAILY WORKER:

Your contributor, S. A. Garlin, in an exceptionally interesting and well-written article entitled, "The Rand School: A Memory," commits a mistake common to a good many radical publicists—he impairs the usefulness of his article by submitting an indictment in general terms rather than a verifiable bill of particulars. A great many readers with whom I discussed the article want to know:

1. Why and how and when was Benjamin Glassberg (the Brooklyn high school teacher alluded to) dismissed? There is a story current that he was discharged upon the express demand of Morris Hillquit, who refused to defend the Rand School in a very plain case involving an invasion of its civil liberties, unless it purged its staff first of "left-wingers." Query: Is this story true or false? If false, what are the true facts in the case? Until quite recently, I thought this account of Glassberg's dismissal so plainly calumnious that I didn't take the trouble to make inquiry.

2. When did the incident of the three typists and office-clerks occur? Were they the only ones connected with the school who were asked to consent to a redurtion of pay, for the good of the cause?

3. Your contributor mentions "fat salaries." Just how "fat" are they and who gets them? I should think that all parties concerned would be glad to have the facts plainly stated.

JAMES FUCHS.

The Facts Are Available.

My comment on the Rand School was obviously "impressionistic." It was not my job to fortify my impressions with documentary evidence. It was merely my desire to describe a particular kind of atmosphere of "revolutionary" decadence.

I am convinced that the implications of my article were justified from the facts with which I am familiar. As to a "verifiable bill of particulars,"—such a request is quite legitimate. There are several individuals formerly on the instructional staff of the Rand School, and also on its board of directors who can speak with personal authority on the points raised by James Fuchs. I am sure that they would be willing to make their knowledge public.

Might I suggest, parenthetically, that during the early period of the Rand School its directors were in the habit of boasting of the large number of cloakmakers, iron workers and printers who attended their classes. Of late, I understand, they have become proud of the number of persons who come to the lectures on literature and poetry possessing an A. B. degree.—S. A. GARLIN.

INDUSTRY AND SEX

THE NEW MASSES for March displays itself both at its best and at its worst. The absurd symposium on the "correct proletarian, revolutionary attitude on sex" is being continued, and the jassy, pseudo-Mercurian "Peaches and Scream" kind of frothy humor is still conspicuous.

Powers Hapgood reveals himself to be both clear-headed and modest in his article "Gangsterism Rules the Miners." Hapgood—Harvard '20, Phi Beta Kappa, and a member of W. E. Hearst's Norman Hapgood—has worked in the coal mines of Great Britain, Japan, France, Germany, Russia, China, and the United States. He was a delegate from a local in western Pennsylvania to the recent convention of the United Mine Workers of America, held in Indianapolis. The technique of the Lewis machine in disposing of the progressive leadership was unique and courageous. First, the officialdom refused to give young Hapgood his seat as a duly elected delegate to the convention. Then he was beat up by the thugs of the ruling clique with monotonous regularity.

Powers, with a tolerance which is exasperating, recites the events during the sessions of the convention. His tells, with great vividness, of the machinations of the reactionary mine-union leadership in preventing criticism by the minority. "Meanwhile," writes Hapgood, "the wage agreement is nearing its expiration. As usual in the labor movement, no matter how bitter the factional quarrels, internal dissensions will be subordinated in the event of a strike, and a united front can be expected from the miners."

(Maybe. Refar: New York needle trades).

Michael Gold has some rhapsodical comments which he calls "Loud Speaker and Other Essays." This is just the medium for him—free, spacious, and anarchic. His stuff is always sweeping, vivid, and full of fine color; but ha is sometimes hysterical. His essay "Knockout" is a neat example:

"It must come it must come his body is red as eczema he looks sick he can't see his eya is a jelly O good his legs like lead his arms like mountains drowned in sweat and despair he staggers under the terrible white lamps he knows the world is a beast and nothing can soften Americans but the knockout It must come it must come cowardly clerks flunkey bricklayers tip-whining taxi-drivers sneak thieves pimps coke fiends newspapermen lawyers parlor whores society dames all pant for tragedy."

Floyd Dell, V. F. Calverton, and Upton Sinclair all contribute to the discussion on the subject of "Sex and Revolution." Dell singles out two gifts of the machine age: (1) The freedom from the patriarchal yoke of the previous generation which the younger generation has achieved; (2) The machine age "has destroyed the old patriarchal concept of the importance of virginity in young women; and with their giving up their old-fashioned cure for 'purity,' commercialized prostitution tends to become obsolescent."

Calverton's paper entitled "Sex and Economics" presents once again the example of a writer who has the correct method of analysis, and the lack of horse sense to apply it to specific situations.

After a labored "historical survey" of the attitudes of the best minds since Aristotle on the subject of sex, Calverton, with the heavy artillery of terrifying scholarship, concludes with the friendly admonition that revolutionists must be as revolutionary in their attitude toward sex as they are toward the "private-property-ethic."

Upton Sinclair's prescription on the sex problem is a little lacking in vigor because he says that to answer the question "What is the correct revolutionary proletarian attitude towards sex," with general principles is the only alternative to the writing of a book. "But the trouble is," writes Sinclair, "it will sound like preaching, and I understand this is not good form among your readers."

After making a distinction between "revolutionary proletarians and trifiars and poseurs," Sinclair asserts that the best thing that revolutionists can do is to have sound children—if they intend to have any at all.

"The New Masses" is devoting thousands of words to this mighty subject—in a noble effort to thrash it out. Last month it gave Charles W. Wood permission to write 4,000 words on it. And his article wasn't so good, either. It seems to me (and I speak with great humility) that there are other themes on the contemporary battlefield equally vital and momentous.

The artists are fortunately represented in full force in the March number. Hugo Gellert, Louis Lozowick, Art Young, and Otto Soglow are all here. William Siegel has a fine drawing. But the most compelling is the one by Diego Rivera, which describes the distribution of land among the Mexican peons.

There is an interesting story by Joseph Freeman dealing with the decency of the Russian monarchist "nobility." There are some bright book reviews by Kenneth Fearing, Charles Erskine Scott Wood, and John Dos Passos. Also an absurd poem entitled "Empire" by the author of that popular one-act play, "Lima Beans"—Alfred Kreymbourg.

SENDER GARLIN

A LITERARY COMPLAINT

"In your BOOKS column this morning," writes A. Henry Schneer, "you have a comment by H. F., to the effect that the books by Floyd Dell, V. F. Calverton and Upton Sinclair are the 'only books published in the U. S. which attempt to tie up literary with social movements.'

"May I correct this statement? Not merely because it is not an exact one, but primarily because we do not wish our readers to ignore the significant work of Randolph Bourne ("History of a Literary Radical"); of Van Wyck Brooks ("Letters and Leadership," etc.) and one of the most significant and timely lances of the most recent of this school, Lewis Mumford ("The Golden Day").

"While it is true that the Bourne-Brooks-Mumford group do not accept the sociology of historic materialism, they do NOT accept the pragmatic acquiescence of political democracy. In fact they are breaking new ground against the vested interests. We should not ignore this group who are indigenous to this country. Nor should we accept blindly the writers whom H. F. mentions with so much gusto. Does he know that Greenwich Village streak in Floyd Dell, or the Milton-fiasco in "Mammonart," and the Russian-complex of Calverton? We are not trying here to discourage either group; for both have their functions in present-day America. Let us not forget the pacifism of Dell and Sinclair, nor yet the socialistic articles of Calverton in the New Leader."

Schneer is correct. I did omit Randolph Bourne, Van Wyck Brooks and Lewis Mumford, all of whom made valuable contributions to a social critique of literature. Bourne, however, was a courageous pioneer, who pointed out but never exploited the social interpretation of literature; and Van Wyck Brooks' studies are considerably diluted with sexuo-psychological hokum. I have not read Mumford's "Golden Day."

Furthermore, I do not accept blindly the works of Sinclair, Calverton and Dell. I quite agree with Schneer when he says that they "are not only guilty of scientific ignorance, but morose, even in their understanding of Marxism-Leninism." What I mean to say, however, is that these men are the only ones who have consistently tried to interpret literature in social terms. They have often been guilty of grotesque errors. (Calverton, for instance, regards Sherwood Anderson and Edith Wharton as "proletarian artists.") But they happen to have a monopoly on the social interpretation of literature in this country.

CURRENT EVENTS

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

BRITAIN will not reply to the Soviet government's note in answer to Chamberlain's. The foreign office got itself into a bad mess but the wing of the cabinet that Chamberlain belongs to strengthened itself against the die-hards led by Winston Churchill that want a break with the Soviet Union. In quoting anti-imperialist speeches delivered by leaders of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union Chamberlain rightly stressed that the Soviet foreign office would come back with a whole collection of venomous anti-Soviet attacks delivered by Churchill and his gang. Since Churchill does not care how he can ease Chamberlain and Baldwin out of the tory leadership the wily Chamberlain was willing to allow the prestige of his office to suffer deflation in return for a strengthening of his position at home.

Even the British tory newspapers admit that the Litvinoff reply was clever. This does not necessarily mean that Litvinoff has more brains than Chamberlain. First of all, he has a better case and secondly, the internal position of the Soviet government is stronger than that of Britain and Litvinoff was not obliged to write the note with a view to dropping a few peoples' commissars into the soup. The conflicts within the various capitalist groups make it extremely difficult for them to act with unanimity.

On the other hand the people of the Soviet Union, represented by the industrial workers and the peasantry, are behind the government, which guards their interests against the howling wolves of imperialism. We are informed by a Moscow dispatch that Leon Trotsky, former Commissar of War, was cheered for fifteen minutes when he appeared to speak in Peabody Union Hall, formerly the home of dissolute Russian nobles. Trotsky declared that the Soviet Government had good reason to protest against anti-Soviet propaganda and said that Chamberlain not only applauded the hanging of Lithuanian Communists but that he urged to grease the ropes. The opportunistic capitalist-hacks that protected Trotsky and others who disagreed with the majority of the Communist Party on policy would welcome revolts against the Soviet government will receive little consolation from this news item.

THE British government has agreed to accept the fake naval disarmament conference proposed by Calvin Coolidge. But while Coolidge gives the olive leaf of peace, Congress hammers on the anvil of war. Coolidge proposes that the naval powers reduce naval armament. The house turns around and votes to elevate the guns on United States battleships, something that Great Britain does not at all like. It is a great game of deceit and hypocrisy. The two greatest imperialist powers in the world, England and the United States, pretend to be on good terms, and are ostentatiously friendly, yet they are preparing to leap at each other's throats. They will eventually.

SENATOR BORAH appears to have definitely broken with Coolidge. The senator is chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, a committee that is clothed with considerable power. But Wall Street looks on it as a nuisance since Borah became chairman. The Idahoan, the supporter of the capitalist system, is somewhat of a bull in the administration's China shop. Chen Hopes U.S. Will Not Land Soldiers

Reminds Washington of Great Britain's "Mistake"

WASHINGTON, March 1. — Hope that the United States will not land troops in China was expressed in a cablegram received from Eugene Chen, foreign minister of the Canton government, made public today.

Expressing appreciation for the action of the house in urging abrogation of the concert of powers, Chen expressed "the hope that the American government will not repeat the British government's mistake in procedure."

Fire In Arsenal.

SHANGHAI, March 1. — An outbreak of fire near the Lungwha arsenal on the outskirts of Shanghai caused panic conditions in part of the native city today, detracting from the general tension of the military situation.

Fusing of an electric wire is believed to have been responsible for the fire which destroyed ten out-buildings of the arsenal. Fears of explosions, due to the huge stores of munitions in the arsenal, caused a panic among the native residents near the arsenal.

Situation Unchanged.

While the military situation is unchanged the Fengtien troops continue to stream down from the north and Nanking, by way of Changchow, to Sunkiang, apparently planning an attack on the left flank of the Cantonese.

There are reports here that the Cantonese are planning a counter-drive in the direction of Nanking thus hoping to split the northern armies, cutting off the southern flank from its base of supplies.

The transport Radjala arrived from Bombay bringing 510 officers and men of the Royal Artillery, with mules and horses and portion of a heavy battery. These troops were disembarked and proceeded to the Yangtsepoo district. The border battalion has been disembarked from the Mercantile and is encamped in the Yangtsepoo district while the Bedfords and the Hertfords'hires are encamped on the race course.

RAILWAY CLERKS UNION DEMANDS WAGE INCREASE

The United States Board of Arbitration today took up cross-examination of data presented by representatives of 20,000 railway clerks, freight handlers and station employes of the New York Central who are asking a 12 per cent increase in wages, which would amount to about $3,000,000 annually.

STRIKE FOR MORE WAGES TIES UP ALL BUILDING IN PITTSBURG, PA.

(Special to The Daily Worker).

PITTSBURG, March 1.—The building trades unions here have struck and tied up a hundred million dollars worth of work. Four crafts are out for increase in wages over the 1926 scale. About one thousand five hundred workers are involved, belonging to the Brotherhood of Structural Iron Workers, the Hoisting Engineers, Steam Fitters and Cement Finishers.

The workers demand an increase of from fifty cents in some lines to two dollars in others, a day, over the 1926 wage scale.

Structural iron workers are also demanding a five-day week.

Others Must Stop Soon.

The other crafts are still working, including the bricklayers and carpenters. They are making no demands, and their contracts do not expire at this time. It is predicted, however, that they will soon have to cease operation, as they cannot go on much further without the four crafts that are striking.

According to reports to the union offices, all building operations are paralyzed, and the employers will not agree to anything except a continuation of the 1926 scale, and the present 44-hour week.

Kerensky Reaches New York Today; Purpose Of Visit Not Stated

Rumors current for several days that Alexander Kerensky, Menshevik leader, is coming to the United States upon the White Star liner Olympic, were confirmed yesterday afternoon. The Olympic will dock early this morning.

A message from Captain W. Marshall of the Olympic definitely stated that Kerensky was on board. The purpose of his visit is not known.

Kerensky came into power in Russia in 1917, but his sway was brief. When the Communists gained control and Kerensky's counter revolution failed, he fled and has lived since then in Berlin, London and Paris, taking part in various activities against the workers and peasants of his native land.

Kill 68 British Miners by Poor Inspection

Fire and Gas in Wales; Fall In Nottinghamshire

EBBW VALE, Wales, March 1.—At least fifty-two men are entombed in the gun mines, with all hope of their rescue abandoned.

Nearly a hundred other miners have been brought to the surface suffering from gas.

The tragedy was caused by the explosion of gas in one of the chambers of the mine, and the presence of "after damp" made it necessary to stop rescue work at 1:30 this afternoon.

The explosion occurred in one of the main galleries of the mine and brought down much of the roof, this blocking the exits. The hole town of Ebbw Vale was immediately mobilized for rescue work but clouds of poisonous gases arising from the wrecked shaft seriously impeded the workers.

There were many harrowing scenes at the pithead as more than 200 women gathered to learn the news of their men-folk who were trapped in the mine.

More Deaths.

As the rescue crews finally abandoned their efforts at 7 p.m., reports reached here of another fatal accident at the Bills-Thorpe mines in Nottinghamshire. Sixteen miners were killed when a stagging on which they were standing while working in a new shaft, collapsed, and hurled them to the bottom.

The British mines, the safest in the world due to work while the shorter day prevailed and the union was strong enough to enforce its conditions, are now becoming nearly as dangerous as the American coal mines.

Bitter comment is heard among miners today over the recent deaths, and gloomy forebodings are made of more to be killed in the near future. As is well known, gas explosions and falling staging do not occur when proper inspections are made. The British coal industry, which now produces up to normal with at least a hundred thousand fewer miners, is becoming a slaughter house for its overworked, underpaid and bullied miners.

May Force Action.

Constant recurrence of fatal accidents may have, since miners say, the effect of forcing action by the miners on a national scale sooner than could be otherwise expected. The unions were badly injured by their long strike, supported effectively only by the gifts of the coal miners of Russia, and betrayed by the leaders of the General Council of the British Trade Union Congress. They have been gradually recuperating, and it was not expected that a new struggle would take place for some time.

Espionage System For Hotels.

ALBANY, N. These lists would be open to the public authorities.

Thousand Ready For Left Wing Picketing

Joint Committee of Needle Trades to Defy Gangs

"Out of this fight must come amalgamation of the needle trades," said Charles S. Zimmerman of the Dressmakers' Union, speaking last night to the furriers, cloakmakers and dressmakers who gathered in Webster Hall to volunteer as members of a "left wing" picket committee.

"The Joint Boards of the furriers, and the cloak and dressmakers, have already formed a joint administration committee to carry on the fight against the reactionary bureaucrats of their unions.

More Joint Committees.

"Now we must continue this united front by having a joint picket committee, a joint defense committee to free our prisoners, joint legal machinery and one union paper for furriers, dressmakers, and cloakmakers.

"Out of the Joint Action fight two years ago, we gained one step toward proportional representation in the Joint Board. Out of this fight we must gain not only proportional representation for both unions, but we must get amalgamation of all the needle trades including the mens' clothing workers, capmakers and all other progressive workers."

Thousand Pickets.

Over a thousand workers responded last night to the call for pickets. Ben Gold, general manager of the Furriers' Joint Board, who was one of the speakers, warned the workers that only those should volunteer who were willing to submit to discipline, and serve actively in the work of protecting the workers of the fur, cloak and dress trades.

Gold announced that those in charge of the picket committee would be S. Mencher, J. Schneider and J. Rosen of the Furriers' Union, I. Moskewitz of the cloakmakers, and H. Korsti of the dressmakers.

Will Drive Out Gangs.

"With these workers at its head, the picket committee," said Gold, "will drive the gangsters from the picket lines while the other joint committees force Sigman, Beckerman and Schachtman from the unions for all time."

Joseph Goretzky, manager of Local 35 of the I. L. G. W. U., pointed out that the Forward is still carrying on a campaign of provocation, as it did last night before his arrest several weeks ago, and this should serve as a warning to the progressive workers to be on their guard.

United We Stand.

"It is all the more important now for us to join forces," said Goretzky, "and the cloak and dressmakers, with the furriers, will be more than a match for their gangsters."

"We must picket the shops, we must protect the workers who are supporting the Joint Boards; and together we

Evidently Need Lawyer To Rent Heights' Room

By WILL DE KALB.

The writer will not dwell long on Washington Heights or Inwood, for they are not essentially workers' communities, nor are they typical localities of the ruling class. They are merely "respectable" places in which to live; more high class than the west side, more comfortable than the east.

Few tenements are found in the district above 145th street. Nice looking apartment houses, renting at an average of $20 a room or $60, clean streets, no crowding.

Something Wrong.

Houses aren't built directly next to each other, so the blank spaces give the place an atmosphere of airiness that even becomes apparent to the other senses. But the moment one enters the houses, one "gets a hunch" something is wrong. Most of the rooms are built on the old plan, one room opening into another, so of course privacy is thrown by the board. Since there are as many as six and eight tenants on a floor, the rooms are smaller than clothes closets used to be. And they cost $20 more.

COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL EXPOSES WALL STREET'S WAR ON NICARAGUA

The executive committee of the Communist International has issued the following appeal:

The army of the United States occupies Nicaragua. North American imperialism, throwing aside its democratic mask, cynically and openly announces its intention to convert the countries of Latin America into colonies. North American capitalism has long obtained possession of the natural riches, the industry and the means of transport of Central and South America and brought its governments into economic and financial dependence.

Encounters Resistance.

The capturing of Republican Latin America by North American capital under the mask of liberalism and of democracy, is encountering the resistance of the doubly exploited masses of the people. The workers and peasants of Mexico have been the first to come forward against suppression by the United States. The national people's government, under the constant pressure of the masses, proclaimed Mexico's free right of disposal over the petroleum springs, on account of which the Washington government threatened them with military intervention.

An additional contribution of $45 has been sent in by the branches of the Lithuanian Working Class Women's Alliance; an addition $100, from Branch 155 of the Workmen's Circle of Toledo, Ohio.

From a group of left wing sympathizers at the Ferrer Colony of Stelton, N. J., a contribution of $65 has been received as part payment on a pledge of $100. New and Secret Note Sent Into Mexico by Kellogg and Coolidge

WASHINGTON, March 1. — A new note has been transmitted to the Mexican government. It was learned at the state department today.

The department declined to state what the contents were. It is reported not to have dealt with the land and petroleum law controversy.

There are reports in diplomatic chassels that the note scolds the Calles government for giving facts about oil companies' compliance with the law to Senator Borah. These facts placed the state department in a humiliating position, as they exposed falsity of reports given by Kellogg to the senate.

CAPMAKERS WILL MEET TO PROTEST LOOTING OF FUND

"Why Should the Right Wing Get That $1,000?"

Just why should the capmakers' union, which is already heavily in debt, contribute $1,000 from its treasury to help the reactionary needle trades officials in their efforts to smash the unions?

This is what the progressive capmakers want to know, and what they are coming to discuss at a meeting to be held tonight in Manhattan Lyceum, 66 East 4th Street, right after work.

The speakers who will talk on this important problem are Louis Hyman, general manager of the Cloak and Dressmakers' Joint Board; Ben Gold, general manager of the Furriers Joint Board and A. Sazar of the capmakers' union.

Called By T. U. E. L.

The meeting has been arranged by the Capmakers' Section of the Trade Union Educational League, which in its call to all progressive capmakers says:

"We are living in a very critical period in the labor movement. A corrupt bureaucracy, which is hated by the membership of the unions, is trying to keep itself in power by force. They stop at nothing, not even acts of provocation against the devoted leaders of the working class in whom the workers have full confidence.

"Legally elected officers in various organizations are being forcibly expelled, and the bureaucrats are putting their own henchmen in these places.

"In spite of the fact that our union owes a lot of money, our officers have decided to give Sigman $1,000 from the treasury without even consulting the membership, in order to help Sigman and his clique break the cloak and dressmakers' union.

"Our officers instead of devoting their time to union activities in the interest of the workers, are giving their time to helping the union destroyers like Sigman, Schachtman, Fraynе and other who are breaking the unions for the sake of their own personal ambitions."

Borah in Open Rupture with Coolidge

Flays Administration's Latin American Policy

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 1.—Senator Borah's differences with the administration reached an open rupture today when the chairman of the senate committee on foreign relations denounced in no uncertain terms the Latin-American policy of the Coolidge administration.

Stung by the senator's letter of inquiry, to President Calles of Mexico relative to the number of foreign oil companies that had complied with the Mexican decrees, the administration retaliated by deciding to defeat Borah's proposal for an inquiry into the situation existing in Mexico and Nicaragua and to conduct an examination into the policy of the state department with relation to both countries.

This proposal was really at the base of the administration's indignation, though the state department wants to give out the impression that Borah's action was irregular and an attempt to discredit the state department.

Oily Trouble Makers.

Senator Borah charged openly that the Sinclair, Mellon, Doheny oil interests were back of the trouble with Mexico and cited the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Doheny cases proof of his contention that leases gained under circumstances indicative of fraud were null and void. The supreme court of Mexico should have the same right to pass on the legality of foreign concessions in Mexico as the United States supreme court has on leases in the United States.

The senator claims that there is ample precedent for his action in communicating with the executive of a foreign government. He cited the cases of Charles Sumner who occupied the same position during the Civil War and to Henry Cabot Lodge's correspondence with Viscount Grey during the fight over the Lodge reservations to the Treaty of Versailles.

Only A Smoke Screen.

Borah makes it quite clear that he thinks the administration's objection to his correspondence with Callas is only a smoke screen designed to cover up the unsavory Latin-American mess.

The present congress dies by mandate at noon on Friday and Borah's resolution is expected to die with it.

"What earthly objection," Borah said today in an explosive manner, "is there to having this committee in session here during the summer unless the administration proposes doing something which will not bear scrutiny?"

Pravda Calls British Cabinet Well Answered; But Sees Some Dangers

MOSCOW, March 1. — Pravda, commenting on the note of the Soviet government to the British government, in answer to the recent note of the Baldwin government to the Soviets, points out that the Soviet government's note defeats completely every argument brought forward by the British note.

The Soviet note stresses the fact that the only concrete accusation against the Soviet government was connected with the alleged Zinoviev letter. But this letter to which the present British government owes its election victory, was fabricated by Scotland Yard. And the world is still waiting for the punishment of the perpetrators of this most dastardly forgery. This forgery has contributed toward a possible break in the relations between the Soviet government and Great Britain, and was directed against peace between these two nations.

AUTHORITY RAPS SACCO-VANZETTI TRIAL METHODS

Felix Frankfurter in Lengthy Analysis

BOSTON.—(FP).—Sacco and Vanzetti get important aid in their fight for freedom in a most careful 23-page analysis of their remarkable case by Felix Frankfurter, professor at Harvard Law School. Frankfurter publishes his study in the March Atlantic Monthly, old conservative publication.

Case Still Open.

Particular value comes from Frankfurter's statements at this time, because the case is still before the Massachusetts supreme court. Decision is awaited on a second appeal from trial judge Webster Thayer's denial of motions for new trial.

Thayer's conduct of the original trial and his later ruling against new trial are strongly attacked. Thayer's last opinion is called "a farrago of misquotations, misrepresentations, suppressions, and mutilations.... The opinion is literally honeycombed with demonstrable errors, and a spirit alien to judicial utterance permeates the whole."

Scores Court.

Frankfurter does not spare the supreme court for its upholding of Thayer and his decisions on the first appeal. He shows the inconsistency of the crime of which Sacco and Vanzetti were convicted in 1921 with their previous lives as a skilled shoe worker and fish peddler. He links up their radical views with the red raid period of their arrest.

The law expert tells briefly the case built up by the defense against the Morelli gang of Providence as the real payroll robbers and murderers. The unsolicited confession of a criminal, Celestino Madeiros, who risked his own safety by his act, gave the lead to defense attorney William G. Thompson Laws Imperfect.

Frankfurter was one of five members appointed by the Massachusetts legislature as a commission to work out a prospective revision of the Pay State legal code. Such ancient laws as that against blasphemy and other blue laws still stand, as the Scopes case brought out over a year ago. The Sacco-Vanzetti case has made clear other deficiencies, chiefly that the supreme court cannot judge on evidence but only on points of law.

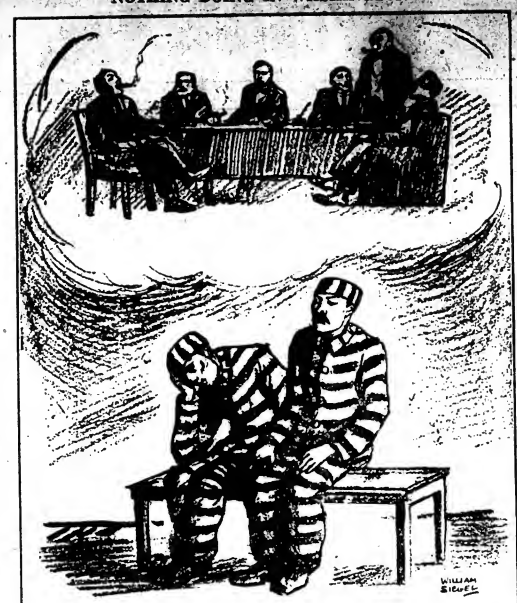
After a year's heroic struggle of the Passaic textile workers, the mill barons were forced to submit to a union in the textile industry of Passaic. They are however putting obstacles in the way of maintaining such an organization. Although the strike is almost over, they are taking the workers back very slowly, with the result that thousands of families are without means of existence. Their children are hungry.



There are many families whose sole supporters were sent to jail for long periods because of their activities in the strike. You must come to their rescue. Relief must go on with full speed!

The General Relief Committee, who is maintaining a few food stores in Passaic, appeals to all those who have taken milk coupons to send in their money as soon as possible, no matter how much you have collected. WARDEN LAWES OF SING SING HITS DEATH SENTENCES

Capital Punishment as Modern Class Weapon

The League for the Abolition of Capital Punishment laid a definite basis for activity at its yesterday's meeting in the Hotel Pennsylvania when Warden Lewis E. Lawes of Sing Sing in a speech depicted the fact that modern society still seeks revenge by taking a prisoner's life.

Analysing the origin of capital punishment Lawes declared that "the death penalty is a relic of savagery, perpetuated by custom and ignorance, maintained on false assumption and consummated in the killing that is legal in the name only."

Hitting at the class character of capital punishment he asked his audience if they had ever heard of a wealthy man or woman being executed, this in spite of the fact that the largest number of murders are committed by the rich. Yet, he stated, it is the poor and friendless, the physically handicapped and feeble-minded who die at the hand of the law, because their poverty prevents them from engaging the necessary legal defendants, which usually rescue the rich from suffering the same fate.

"What will it profit us to destroy one man," he said, "if we permit the social conditions which influenced him to continue and breed additional murderers."

Declaring also the fact that the very men who impose death sentences do not have to execute their victims, Lawes continued by stating: "How many executions do you think there would be if the law made it necessary for the judge or some member of the jury to "pull the switch," that, in the flash of an eye, turns a fellow human being into a mere mess of senseless clay? Have we the right to pass laws that make it necessary for some one else to do that our convenience would not permit us to do?"

The meeting was presided over by Arthur Garfield Hayes. The League elected its new officers for the coming year and is determined that active work is going to be conducted to finally realize the ambition of abolishing capital punishment.

diers interfere in Latin American to protect the interests of Wall Street. Having caught Kellogg lying more than once, Borah, communicated directly with President Calles of Mexico and the reply convinced the senator that Kellogg could not be depended on to give the facts.

Borah favored the senate committee on foreign relations taking a trip to Latin America to study the situation at first hand. The administration is opposed to this plan, evidently intending to spring a couple of little wars on the country while congress is not in session. As we pointed out yesterday the test of Borah's sincerity will be proven by his willingness to go to the mat with the truth about the conspiracy between the administration and the imperialist plunderers of Latin America.

Bill for Longshoremen Be Compensated When Hurt, Killed, by Sponser

WASHINGTON (FP). — Chairman Graham of the House Judiciary Committee has waited for the closing days of the session to fatally knife his own measure—the longshoremen's industrial accident compensation bill.

The House Rules Committee nodded and Chairman Snell to report out a rule that would bring the bill to a vote in the house. It had already passed the senate. Hostile amendments had been dropped. Then Rep. Free of California, leading anti-labor republican, announced that he would offer on the floor an amendment restoring the seamen to the group affected by the bill. This was a hostile move, as the seamen protest against being brought into the measure. Graham then notified Snell that he need not report the rule—thereby preventing action on the bill in this congress.

It seems to Graham from the legislative council of the labor unions at the capital was in vain. His treachery is not yet explained, by his long record of hostility to humane legislation. The unions induced him to sponsor this bill in the hope that thereby his opposition would be avoided.

TURN CHURCHES INTO CABARETS, AIMEE'S ADVICE

Keep Butter and Egg Men Out of City

The only way the churches can compete with the night clubs is to stay open all night, Aimee Semple McPherson, notorious California evangelist, announced yesterday on her arrival from an up-state tour.

"The people of this country are crying for salvation," she said, "but they aren't going to go out and look for it.

"Keen the churches open so that there will be other places to go besides cabarets and wicked shows. The churches are lagging behind with sudden shows while the rest of the world is flying ahead with magic carpets."

The evangelist plans to rest here until Thursday, when she will start for the Pacific coast.

"My upstate tour convinced me," she stated, "that the big butter and egg men from out of town are the ones who are branding New York as wicked. The people of New York are not responsible for the obscene plays. The butter and egg men are.

"If censorship will keep these people out of New York it will do a wonderful thing for the city."

DOLLAR PATRIOTS DINNER A FIZZLE; NO MONEY RAISED

American Citizens in Scrap at Affair

By CARL HAESSLER.
(Federated Press).

CHICAGO.—An admiral dubbed a mobocrat, a rabbi branded a demagog of poor taste, and miscellaneous epithets of Bolshevist, fool, Teapot Dome, pacifist, scandal, and disloyalty are the principal fruits of a Washington birthday dinner that was intended to initiate a $2,000,000 drive for politico blacklist purposes.

Cash Desired.

The dinner was given by the American Citizenship Foundation in Chicago, Feb. 22, as a belated effort for cash that has been distressingly slow in materializing. In fact the cash is many months overdue. The organization, which ostensibly encourages good citizenship, but is actually a militarist snooping outfit, had announced a victory dinner for Dec. 14 last year, at which the corralling of the $2,000,000 was to have been celebroted. That day came, but neither the dinner nor the cash.

Admiral Snarls.

And on Washington's birthday there was another fluke. A number of good people, taken in by the foundation's false front, had accepted invitations to hear the old navy autocrat, Admiral Wm. A. Moffett.

The admiral, possibly under the influence of patriotic toasts, threw off the lamb's wool and revealed himself as a ripsnorting sea-wolf baring his fangs at pastors, pacifists, liberals and their like. Rabbi Louis I. Mann, one of the good people, got angry at the fraud practised on him by the foundation and let loose with real pulpit thunder.

The dinner became interesting to guests, but the slick promoters of the foundation felt as though they had swallowed a barrel of tabasco sauce. They saw their $2,000,000 dwindling to a non-union barbershop tip. So the Chicago Tribune trotted over to their rescue a few days later and Rabbi Mann is now branded editorially with the scarlet mark of "clerical demagogy."

Is He Mad?

The Federated Press last December exposed the American Citizenship Foundation as the organizer of a blacklist directed against labor, liberal and pacifist personalities, spying on their movements, preventing their appearance as speakers wherever possible and filling the land with hatreds in the name of patriotism. In the February issue of The American Citizen, the foundation's publication, President George Edmund Foss of the organization writes:

"Someone has said that the American citizen is a great man if you can only get him mad enough. Isn't there enough to be mad at."

Lots of Hatreds.

Among those blacklisted, as revealed by inspection of the foundation's private files, are Jane Addams, H. L. Mencken, Mary McDowell, Victor L. Berger, Robert Minor, Scott Nearing, Norman Hapgood, O. G. Saden shoen while the rest of the Villard, The Federated Press, the Socialist Party, Workers Party, Farmer-Labor Party, League of Women Voters and the American Association of University Women.

FARM BILL VETO AROUSE FARMERS OF MIDDLE WEST

Cal Is Losing Supporters to Lowden

CHICAGO—(FP)—The middle west is aflame with anger over President Coolidge's veto of the McNary-Haugen farm relief bill, which had passed both houses of congress and had been indorsed by farm organizations and by public sentiment in general in the agricultural states. The old sectional feeling against the tariff-protected eastern seaboard, where financial capital is concentrated and where the policies of the national government are set against labor and the farmer, is once more at fever heat.

Newspapers ordinarily pro-Coolidge are busy launching the presidential boom of former Governor Frank Lowden of Illinois, who poses as a farm supporter though he is chiefly known as the son-in-law of the Pullman millions and as a republican politician and lawyer. His lieutenants attempted in 1920 to buy delegates for him to the national convention that finally nominated Warren Harding.

No Hope To Farmers.

Nowhere in his long veto message did Coolidge give the farmers any hope beyond that cautiously expressed in his message to congress of Dec. 8, when he cynically said: "While the government is not to be blamed for failure to perform the impossible, the agricultural regions are entitled to know that they have its constant solicitude and sympathy."

Speaking for the joint interests represented in the Farmer-Labor exchange, manager C. F. Lowrie says of the Coolidge veto message: "The veto means that Coolidge wants to permanently handicap the farmer as against the protected position of the big eastern industrial corporations and finance."

Farmer's Family Burns.

HUBBING, Minn., March 1.—Four children of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Passford, a farmer living south of here, and the father of Passford were burned in a fire which destroyed their home today. The mother was rescued by her husband.

The fire is said to have started from an overheated stove.

The children ranged in aged from 5 to 10 years.

Lita Grey More Bitter.

LOS ANGELES, March 1.—A well known Hollywood motion picture actress will be named as co-respondent in the amended divorce complaint of Lita Grey Chaplin against her famous husband, Charles Chaplin, film comedian, Lyndol L. STRIKE NEARING IN ANTHRACITE; PAY BEING CUT

Cappellini Sits on Lid Defending Companies

(Special to The DAILY WORKER)

SCRANTON, March 1.—Goaded into desperation by the callous neglect of union affairs by district officials, by the onward sweep of the vicious contract system, serious wage reductions and widespread unemployment, the rank and file hard coal miners are girding for a fight.

Hudson Coal Co., employing 20,000 miners, has shut down indefinitely, while Lehigh Valley Coal Co., down a long time, has just reopened on a three to four day a week basis. Miners are seeking work in vain up and down the entire anthracite region.

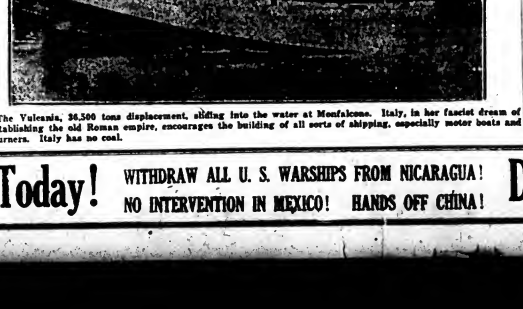
Cappellini on Job.

Rinaldo Cappellini, reactionary president of District 1, has just broken a strike of Lehigh Valley miners. This strike, called because the company insisted on cutting the former flat rate for rock contracting from $4.70 a yard to $2.34, was featured by loud protestations of company loyalty from Cappellini, who insisted on "honorable" contracts.

His claims were punctured by George Gould, secretary of the Lehigh Valley general grievance committee. In a statement replying to Cappellini he wrote:

"Mr. Cappellini in o statement to the newspapers in regard to the strike at Henry colliery of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., which is threatening to develop into a general strike of Lehigh Valley Co. employes, declares that district officials were not notified of the grievance in question which concerns a matter of rock contract wages. It is true that the district officials were uninformed as to the state of affairs but this was through no fault of the men in charge of the grievance who went to the Miners Bank office and found the United Mine Workers room was locked and that all officers had left for the convention at Indianapolis, without arranging for the protection of whatever for the workers who remained at home.

District Officials Not There.



"As secretary of the general grievance committee I happen to know that the Henry committee did all in their power to come to a satisfactory settlement with the colliery officials but this settlement could not be arranged as the district office was closed. When informed of the absence of district officials the Lehigh Valley Coal officials refused to meet with the Henry committee, as they considered the affairs of the district to be conducted in a slipshod manner.

"Cappellini claims that the miners at the Henry colliery violated the miners' and operators' agreement by striking but I differ with him, as the operators violated the terms of the contract by cutting the wage on rock contracting from $4.70 to $2.34 per yard. I also happen to be a miner that filed a grievance against a wage reduction at the Prospect colliery in March, 1926, and a decision was handed down in favor of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., by Umpire Neil which I contend was an outrage.

"This decision concerned a decrease in wages amounting to approximately $20 per month and that sum means considerable to a miner who has no way or regaining the money. Such unfair decisions have occurred and our district officials have done nothing about the matter in any way."

(Signed),
George Gould, Secretary,
Lehigh Valley General Grievance Committee.

SACASA'S AID SAYS BRITAIN AND U. S. PLOT

British Charge Thinks May Recognize Diaz

By LAURENCE TODD.
Federated Press.

WASHINGTON — Collusion between the governments of the United States and Great Britain in robbing Nicaragua of her independence and her last chance for freedom is seen by Dr. T. S. Vaca, agent in Washington for the Sacasa Liberal government of that republic, in the sending of a British warship to Corinto.

Just after President Coolidge had explained to the press, through his rhythical spokesman, that he saw nothing improper in the British move, Dr. Vaca issued a statement.

England Follows U. S.

"It is ridiculous and too absurd to believe that England would make the least move in the Caribbean region without previous and full accord with the United States, especially in Nicaragua where intervention has grown far beyond its stated aims.

"The cooperation of the British charge d'affaire was obtained from the beginning to ask protection for his subjects of the American minister, in order to justify the landing of marines.

Funny Monroe Doctrine

"This is the first time, though, that a European power is taken into active cooperation to help justify the policy of the United States toward an American nation, and seems quite a departure from the ways of James Monroe.

"It is regrettable that the foreign diplomats at Managua hastened to recognize a regime that so publicly has confessed from the beginning its inability to protect their system."

This last shot is aimed at Adolfo Diaz's appeals for American armed forces to maintain him in power—appeals issued when he was recognized last November and repeated in mid-February when he was in danger of complete collapse and was ready to sign a treaty for a 100-year surrender to the United States of sovereign power in Nicaragua. Diaz's minister at Washington has published the surrender terms.

Britain May Recognize Diaz.

CORINTO, Nicaragua, March 1.—Harold Patteson, British Charge d' Affaire, held a conference with Captain Leeky, commanding the British cruiser Colombo, and then announced that Britain, "if necessary, will recognize Adolfo Diaz as president of Nicaragua."

He thanked the American government for "such measures as have been taken" to save Nicaragua from anarchy", and paid a call to Admiral Latimer.

It is reported here that U. S. marines, part of the invading army in Nicaragua, were fired on by Nicaraguans. After receiving this report, Captain Clarke H. Woodward, U. S. N., ordered the marines to "chase, shoot and capture" any Nicaraguans who resisted them.

Workers Battle With Police Who Guard Embassy.

A heavy police guard has been thrown around the Italian embassy due to Communist and socialist protests against the threatened execution of Sacco and Vanzetti.

The workers delegation telephoned Ambassador Herrick asking him to give them an audience. Herrick refused, stating that he had no power in the case. This, however did not please the delegation who informed the ambassador that they would be around to see him.

Herrick notified the police who came in force and surrounded the building, reserves being kept nearby for an emergency.

ploiting North American imperialism. The people of Nicaragua rose against the creature of American capital, "President" Diaz. The United States fears a second Mexico. It intends to cut a second canal through Nicaragua and for this reason desires to subjugate the entire country.

The occupation of Nicaragua, under the pretext of protecting American citizens, is intended at the same time to intimidate Mexico. To the protest on the part of Latin America and of broad strata of the population of North America, Kellogg replied that intervention is necessary in order to fight against Bolshevism, against the Third International and to save civilization. The whole world laughed at this philistine who raised the Bolshevik bogey in order to conceal the predatory intentions of Yankee imperialism.

Always Against Imperialism.

The Communist International has always fought imperialism, not excluding the most shameless and strongest imperialism—that of the United States. It calls upon all anti-imperialist forces to support the little country of Nicaragua. Kellogg discovered the anti-imperialist policy of the Communist International precisely when the colonizing plans of the United States are taking a more definite form. The League of Nations is again exposing itself as the defender of the interests of the great imperialist powers and maintains silence. The Second International likewise maintains silence.

Must Have Support.

The peoples of Latin America must have the support of the international proletariat in their fight for independence. Their fight for independence is only a part of the great world battle of the peoples suppressed by imperialism against their suppressors. China, India, Central America form the central point of this struggle. The masses of the population of Latin America raise their protest against their plundering by the United States. The proletarians of North America must protest against American imperialism. The workers and peasants of the whole world must prove their solidarity with the people of Nicaragua.

Down with the imperialism of the United States!

Long live the fight for independence of the suppressed peoples against imperialism!

Long live the international solidarity of the workers and peasants and of the enslaved peoples against their common enemy!

Filipinos Oppose Plan For More Wood's Men On the Banking Board

MANILA, March 1.— Filipinos are determined to fight Governor-General Woods' autocratic rule. They are seeking to prevent Wood from seating three directors of the Philippine National Bank, appointed by the Filipino legislature, and installing three of his own followers.

The Filipino supreme court, where the case is being heard, was elected by Francisco Delgado, attorney for three members against whom the proceedings are directed, who declared that the issue was a struggle between Wood and Quezon, independent leader, and not between the government and the bank's directors.

Right Winger Resigned.

LONDON, March 1.— Dr. Leslie Haden Guest, labor member of parliament for the north division of Southwark, has resigned from the labor party owing to disagreement over the Chinese policy of the party. The policies of Guest, McDonald, Snowden and Thomas were similar. They favored supporting the government, but Guest was the only one to refuse to abide by the party decision. MacDonald and other right wing socialists preferred to "bore from within" for the empire.

Dr. Guest created a scene in the house of commons recently when he charged that a boycott on a tea-house in the habit of drinking to excess in the refreshment room.

St. Paul Mass Meeting To Protest Deportation

ST. PAUL, March 1.—A mass meeting will be held at the Labor Temple here on Thursday, March 3, at 8 p. m. to protest against the activities of the department of labor in cooperation with Minnesota in searching out and deporting foreign elements in the country to have them deported back to Italy.

Deportation will mean only a certain terrible persecution for these people.

It has been arranged by the local section of the International Labor Defense.

Ernest Lundeen, former congressman from Minneapolis, who opposed the entry of the United States into the world war, will speak on "Shall the United States Be Mussolini's Bloodhound?" J. F. Emme will speak on "Fascism and Imperialism." The imperialistic moves of the government in Nicaragua, Mexico and China and the threats of war involved in them will be dealt with by both speakers. The public is cordially invited to attend. The admission is 10 cents.

SLAUGHTER OF AIRMEN RAISES PITY OF LATINS

Argentine Flyer Also Dies at Funeral

BUENOS AIRES, March 1. — Tragedy that seems to stalk the flight of the American army goodwill fliers today caused a postponement of the flight to Asuncion, out of respect to Captain Arturo Cuto, who died suddenly yesterday after the funeral of the two American aviators killed here on Saturday.

Captain Cuto, director of naval avlation for Argentine, collapsed while acting as pall-bearer for Captain Woolsey, one of the dead Americans flyers. At the body of Captain Woolsey was being removed from the military club, Captain Cuto attempted to carry too much of the weight of the coffin and in the excessive heat he collapsed. He was removed to the naval club and attended by army and navy physicians but died at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

Capitalize Death.

Pro-American newspapers here are attempting a campaign to increase friendliness for the American policy towards Latin America by lavishing proise on the American fliers.

Some of the unattached papers are falling in, suddenly, with this program, and several of the anti-imperialistic papers are apparently touched by the sympathies and swept away by the wave of sentimentalism.

Tragic Sentimentalism.

La Razon, which has previously attacked the United States, today published an editorial under the caption "Fidelity," declaring "in the presence of death it is necessary to admit the heroic conquerors of the air, after crossing the mountains and seas were not received in Buenos Ayre with the enthusiasm commensurate with their bravery. This was because the flag covering them was thought to be the symbol of an international policy that created hostilities.

"Death has come and touched the victorious heroes. We have cried with them and we embrace them and their countrymen. They must be brave men.

"We now love, in their sadness, those to whom we were indifferent during their joy and success."

Will Risk Two More.

Apparently in eagerness to take advantage of this situation, the war department at Washington has sent the remaining flyers the orders to proceed immediately. Major Rargue and his companion are professional soldiers, anxious to make a record, and are willing to go ahead.

Their friends are protesting that whatever good may be done American policy in South America by killing them too, their efforts thus far are sufficient and they deserve a little time to recuperate nervous systems by their part in the collusion that annihilated two of their associates in the flight.

He said Smith's certificate to the six-year term, however, would be reported to the senate "as being in the regular order." A separate report will be made at the same time on the credentials of Senator-elect William S. Vare (R) of Pennsylvania, Ernst added, calling attention to the irregular manner in which the then Governor Gifford Pinchot "certified" the winner of Pennsylvania's senatorial campaign.

The democrats were studying the testimony of Insull about his contributions to Smith's campaign fund in order to use it in fighting to unseat the Illinois senator in the seventieth congress, next December. The most significant part of Insull's testimony, they said, was his admission that he wrote a $190,000 check on June 30 last year to "repay" funds taken from the "till" of the Commonwealth Edison Company.

Sam Covers Up.

This occurred four days after Senator Caraway (D) of Arkansas, had openly charged Insull with spending $500,000 in the Illinois campaign. In his speech, Caraway said: "It is openly charged that being chairman of the utilities commission, the successful candidate (Smith) received enormous contributions from the heads of public utilities of the state and that Samuel Insull either individually or through his utility organization, contributed over $500,000." Four days later Insull wrote the check repaying his utility corporation for the funds advanced to Smith.

Private Traders in Russia Going Into Eclipse

By JACK HARDY.

HOW is the private trader faring in the Soviet Union?

At the beginning of the NEP period the State, having at its disposal only very limited resources, decided to concentrate these upon the restoration of basic capital in industry, fulfilling the electrification program, fighting the famine and other important functions. Whatever available capital was at hand became absorbed in these tasks and, at the time, there was none left for commercial turnover. The State was therefore compelled to permit a large share of the internal trading operations to fall into the hands of private capital. Until the present time, private capital may engage in internal trade without any formalities. In no other sphere of the national economy is private capital granted so free a hand.

The agents of International capitalism have been gloating and warming rubbing their hands ever since this concession was made. Pictures have been painted in the press of a complete return to capitalism, of the gradual passage of the Soviet State out of the economic picture, etc., ad nauseum. Savel Zimand, in a volume published recently by the Foreign Policy Association entitled State Capitalism in Russia treats us to the following interesting bit of news (p. 52): "From the end of 1922 private trade not only maintained its position but encroached upon cooperative business and even that of the state. During 1922 private capital made its way into wholesale trade, and by 1924 private traders were progressively supplanting both the state and cooperative trading bodies." Virtually the same phrases are echoed in another volume, The Cooperative Movement in Soviet Russia, published in 1925 by the International Labour Office at Geneva (p. 258).

There's one very fundamental objection to these wish-fulfilments of the bourgeoisie—they're not, true. Official statistics which have recently reached this country from Russia concerning the real conditions of internal trade reveal quite an opposite state of affairs.

As soon as the industries of the Union were restored, State syndicates were formed, which began actively to engage in trade in the interests of the state and, in addition, special state trading agencies have been created. The shares in these are held exclusively by government institutions and enterprises. These, in alliance with the cooperative societies, have been waging a "united front" campaign against private trade which has been meeting with outstanding success.

The State Planning Commission has recently issued its Control Figures of the National Economy of the U. S. S. R. for 1926-27 (second revised edition, in Russian). On page 374 we find the following statistics for the internal trade of the Union since 1923:

WHOLESALE TRADE

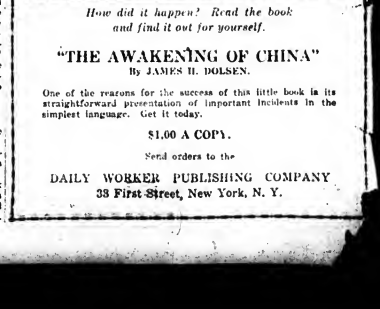
Year	State	Cooperative	Total Socialized	% Socialized	Private	% Private
1923-24	2,459	1,235	3,697	78.2	1,030	21.8
1924-25	3,500	2,951	6,151	90.5	644	9.5
1925-26	5,109	4,382	9,482	90.6	981	9.4
1926-27 (forecast)	6,504	5,406	11,710	91.0	1,159	9.0
			RETAIL TRADE
1923-24	503	1,515	2,081	41.4	2,946	58.6
1924-25	1,355	2,486	3,841	55.7	3,056	44.3
1925-26	1,754	4,370	6,124	61.2	3,879	38.8
1926-27 (forecast)	1,992	5,452	7,444	64.5	4,087	35.5

If therefore, we average together retail and wholesale trade, the participation of the private trader has dropped from 40.2 percent in 1923-24 to 22.2 percent. Such a drop of nearly 60 percent in three years contrasts strangely with Mr. Zimand's contentions that "private trade not only maintained its position but encroached upon cooperative business and even that of the state."

LENIN MAUSOLEUM AT I. L. D. BAZAAR, MANY OTHER INTERESTING FEATURES



An exact replica of the Lenin Mausoleum in Moscow has been donated to the International Labor Defense. It is a work of art cut from a solid block of pink Italian marble. All who have seen it are anxious to make it their own. Realizing that workers rarely get the opportunity of securing such a treasure the I. L. D. has decided to dispose of it at the Bazaar on March 10-13 in the Bay Casino 107th Street and Park Avenue. In spite of repeated offers the Mausoleum will positively not be sold until the Bazaar. Only those attending will have the opportunity of securing this splendid object which is doubly valuable because it presents vividly before one the last resting place of the leading working class leader of this epoch. Come and take your chance.

There will be another reproduction of the Mausoleum standing about 4 ft. high and built in proportion. This will be the top piece of the Russian Booth and will display twinkling red lights just as in the original at Moscow.

Chinese Display At I. L. D. Bazaar.

The Orient will play a big part. Chinese and Japanese workers are combining to bring the Eastern atmosphere among us. There will be a special booth featuring the craftmanship of the East. Delicate vases, beautiful porcelains, intriguing burners, gorgeous kimones and exquisite pictures in the haunting appealing riot of color so vividly associated with the Orient will be on sale. The prominent part being played by the Eastern workers on the world stage will add to the interest of this booth. There will be concrete demonstration of the awakening of the exploited East. New York workers are preparing to take advantage of this opportunity to secure many rare Oriental curios and at the same time express their solidarity with the fighting Chinese.

In and Around Shanghai

The transfer of northern troops under the Shangtung militarist Chang Tsung Chang seems to have created dissension among the forces opposing the People's Armies around Shanghai which discounts to a great extent their increased numerical strength.

Dispatches tell of desertion and mutinies affecting not only the rank and file but high officers as well. In addition the civil population resents the influx of the "allies" and strikes and demonstrations are on the increase throughout China.

The imperialist powers, America included, continue to rush gunboats to Chinese waters and increase their troop strength. The Chinese population, students, workers and peasants, understand perfectly that the imperialists and the northern armies are allied against the national liberation movement.

Meanwhile the People's Armies continue to win victories and the advance guard of the Kuomintang, agitators and organizers, are preparing the way for their advance even at the cost of their lives as in Shanghai where the neutrality of the foreign concessions has been violated with the consent of the imperialist agents in order to hunt them down.

South of the Yangtsze river China is a nation of workers and peasants in arms. If Great Britain, heading the imperialist forces, is successful in keeping Shanghai in the hands of China's enemies for a time, there is still the mighty weapon of the boycott which the People's government, holding power now in more than half of China, can use with deadly effect.

Our prediction is that when the fighting for Shanghai actually begins on the huge scale which the concentration of forces indicates will take place, that mass desertions from the northern forces will again put before the imperialists the question of withdrawing all armed forces or of starting a war which will still further unify the Chinese nation.

Britain Following a War Policy

The government of the Soviet Union accuses the British government of plotting with and financing various countries for war on Russia.

Great Britain's foreign office is enraged and sends an insulting note.

The ink on the British reply is not yet dry when every capitalist paper of any importance carries the news of the Lithuanian-Polish agreement and states openly that it is being negotiated as the result of British pressure.

The Soviet Union did not have to wait twenty-four hours for public proof of its case.

So much for the honesty of imperialist diplomacy.

As for the agreement itself it closes the last gap in the corridor composed of little countries running from Roumania to Finland. Britain has its Balkan-Baltic bloc against the Soviet Union.

But Germany is incurably hostile to the Lithuanian Polish line-up. It is a threat to her eastern frontier and strengthens Poland's hold on East Prussia.

France will not welcome this new evidence of the growing influence of Great Britain in eastern Europe and as the new alliance under her auspices certainly cannot balance in any way the loss of British power in China, her profit and loss account in the field of international politics continues to show a huge deficit.

To this must be added the hostility aroused among the British workers by these two maneuvers.

It is becoming more and more apparent that Great Britain, having lost influence in central Europe is basing herself more and more on Italy and the Balkan and Baltic states.

Such a base, composed of countries all of whom desire contiguous territories and colonies (as the case with Italy) means that Great Britain is following a war policy and that the heated tone of the British note to the Soviet Union is partly the result of the complete exposure made of this policy by the revolutionary, diplomacy of the workers' and peasants' government.

The Moron Legislature of South Carolina

By NORMAN SILBER.

THE body of scientists known as "The Legislature of South Carolina" is now in session. It is composed of the most idiotic morons in the state. Election depends chiefly on the candidate's narrow-mindedness, his inhuman disregard for the Negro, his general aversion to progress and a natural antipathy for paying personal debts.

EVERY year the body meets and passes a lot of worthless, silly and vicious laws and considers the budget. By the time the primitive politicians steal their little graft there is nothing left for the support of state institutions. There are not many institutions supported by the state and these do not receive the support they should have, yet the tax burden is enormous. Two years ago the legislature was in session for weeks deciding how to meet the necessary appropriations. They considered every imaginable tax and finally passed a bill taxing baby talcum powder at 20% of its retail value while shaving cream was exempt.

THIS year the legislature had many serious problems which should have been over the state at a faster rate than the bank examiner can record their names. One bank wrote the bank examiner to close it up, and that worthy official couldn't find time to do so in over a year. The cotton crop was taken away from the farmers and they were left without means for either planting a new crop or keeping their bellies filled, in the meantime. In the truck farming sections conditions are worse. But the state's legislature could not interest itself in such trifles. It had more important matters to occupy its time.

ONE of the important laws it passed this year is a law prohibiting Negro barbers from cutting the hair of a white woman. The barber shops were already divided into two classes, one serving white patrons and the other catering to colored people. However, the best barbers in the shops catering to white trade were usually Negroes, and under the new law, these barbers will be prohibited to serve white women.

THE Negro leaders are not putting up more than a mild protest to this piece of outrageous and unconstitutional race legislation. They accept it as they did the "grandfather clause" which permits the illiterate white man to vote and yet disbars many an intellectual Negro. The "grandfather clause" contained in most of the state constitutions in the South provide that unless a man's forefathers voted prior to 1860, the citizen must prove his literacy before he is permitted to vote. It is assumed that the white ancestors voted prior to 1860, but since the Negroes did not have that right, their descendents must prove literacy. A literacy test in this case could be made an impossible one and very often is.

Night fall. The householder who occupied the apartment opposite their window came home and had his supper, and now, comfortable in his shirtsleeves, with pipe in mouth, he sat by a deep wicker chair in front of his radio set, and proceeded to explore the circumcumcambient aither. So the watchers by Paul's bedside got the news of the election without leaving their posts. Owing to difference in time, California gets returns from the east before it gets its own; but it was all the same this Tuesday evening, east and west, the fifty million dollar campaign fund of dons is work, and wherever you listened, you learned that more voters had cast their ballots for the strong silent statesman than for all his opponents put together. And since that was the thing ardently desired by the broadcasting stations, and the great newspapers and churches and temples and tabernacles which own them, there was a tone of jocularity in the announcements, and after you had learned that Massachusetts was going three to one for her favorite son, you would hear the Six Jolly Jazz Boys proclaiming, "Got a lot gal in a railroad town"—or perhaps the Chicago Grand Radio Trio, "My cutie's due at two-to-two"; it made a cheerful atmosphere to die in; but unfortunately Paul wasn't hearing it.

The Tabernacle of the Third Revelation on the air. Eli's followers were not concerned with elections, being soon to wing their way to celestial regions which are conducted upon the monarchical principle. They opened with an organ recital, and the householder didn't care for that, but after that Radio VKZ, program sponsored by the Snow Baby Soap Company, introducing the first appearance in Angel City of the lovely Lily Trio singing their latest popular melody hit, "My Little Jazz-baby, Razzbaby Coon." But later the householder tried the Tabernacle, and there was the bellowing voice of Eli, that all California householders love. So Bunny and Rachel learned what Rad been the meaning of Eli's visit.

"Brethren, the Lord has vouchsafed a wonderful proof of His mercy to me. Glorious tidings He gives to the world tonight! I have an older brother, the helpmate of my boyhood, Paul by name, and he was brought up in the fear of the Lord; the voice of the Most High was familiar to him on the lonely hills where we tendered our father's flocks together, shepherd boys we were, sitting under the stars, awaiting a sign of the Lord's mercy, and praying for the lost ones of this world to be saved from the devices of the great Tempter.

"Brethren, this brother grew up, and he strayed from the faith of his childhood, he fell into evil company, and became a scoffer at the Lord's Word. The love of our Master Jesus Christ was no longer in his heart, but hatred and envy and jealousy of those to whom the Lord has revealed His Truth. And, brethren, the ruin which this misguided brother sought to bring upon others has fallen upon his own head, and tonight he lies dying, struck down by the evil passions which he himself incited. It was my painful task to go to his bedside, and see him lying in a stupor.

"But oh my friends, who can foresee the Wisdom of the Lord? Who can understand His ways? It was His Will to answer my prayers, and permit my lost brother to open his eyes, and hear the voice of the Lord speaking by my lips, and to answer, and confess his transgressions, and repent, and be healed, and washed in the Blood of the Lamb. Glory hallelujah! Glory! Though thy sins be as scarlet they shall become as white as snow, blessed be the name of the Lord! Brethren, rejoice with me; for I have found my sheep which was lost. I say unto you that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons, which need no repentance. Hallelujah! Hallelujah!

All through this discourse you were aware of the murmur and stir of a great crowd. They would break into ejaculations at every pause in the prophet's words; and now at the end they drowned him out with a chorus of rejoicing. "Glory! Glory, hallelujah!" And in the doorway of the hospital room stood Ruth Watkins, having awakened from her sleep. She was staring at Bunny with horrified eyes, and whispering, "Oh, what is it?"

Yes, Bunny suspected that it was a lie; but he could not prove it; and even if he could, what then? The radio is a one-sided instrument, you can listen, but you cannot answer back. In that lies its enormous usefulness to the capitalist system. The householder sits at home and takes what is handed to him, like an infant being fed through a tube. It is a basis upon which to build the greatest slave empire in history.

The Manager's Corner

ON THE SUSTAINING FUND

Dear Comrade:

I am enloving the pledge cards of Comrade Klein and myself and check in advance for first month.

I am glad that a constructive measure such as the SUSTAINING FUND is at last going to be given a trial. I am certain that it has a strong chance of becoming the real guarantee for the permanent appearance of THE DAILY WORKER, providing of course that it has the unflagging support of every Party member and sympathizer.

Surely we can order our affairs better than the anarchical, haphazard methods we have been pursuing in the past, and rather than expect the periodical threat of suspension, which comes all too inevitably each year, we can by employing some business-like measures, insure long life to the only National Labor Daily.

With every wish for a successful campaign, I am

Comradely yours,
HENRY L. GAGE.

Bert Miller, New York, N. Y.

Comrade:—Your letter written 18th of February received. Cannot remain silent. My answer is here. Many by this time realize the importance of our Communist DAILY WORKER. The DAILY WORKER must stand and become better than ever.

I have no work nor prospects to get any. Especially in this locality, but as soon as I find a master, will pay for the sustaining fund of The DAILY WORKER, 10% of my earnings, till we can put The DAILY WORKER on a sound financial condition.

Comrade, I do not think it will be long. The DAILY WORKER will become the most important.—Must say, it already has done tremendous work amongst the masses.

REVEAL HILLQUIT DOUBLECROSSED UNION IN GRABBING BANK CONTROL

Violated Pledged Word to Return Stock When Loan Was Repaid; Local Officers Kept in Ignorance of Legal Moves

The gross mismanagement of the International Union Bank and the amazing breach of faith of Morris Hillquit were revealed today in affidavits filed by attorneys for the joint board in the Supreme Court in the action of the Joint Board and affiliated unions against the bank and Frederick F. Umhey by which they are attempting to regain control of their property given as security on a loan and surreptitiously transferred to Umhrey.

A photostatic copy of a letter to Louis Hyman, manager of the joint board, from Morris Hillquit was submitted with the affidavits, in which he gave Hyman his "personal assurance" that the stock of the International Bank and four union buildings, which were placed in the hands of his clerk, Frederick Umhey, to be held as security for a loan of $300,000, will be returned to the Joint Board and the affiliated locals upon the payment of the loan regardless of any claims which the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union or anybody else in its behalf make to such stock."

Perfidy by Hillquit.

Notwithstanding this personal assurance by Hillquit, his clerk, Umhey, has now sworn, in answering the Joint Board's complaint in court, that he transferred the shares to himself at the direction of the International and to bolster up his right to do so, he presents an affidavit from Morris Sigman claiming that the International is the real owner of the shares. In other words, Hillquit's clerk did exactly what Hillquit solemnly promised he would not do, and Hillquit now appears in court to defend Mr. Umhey's right to do it.

That the transfer of the stock to Umhey did not in any way help the bank is admitted by Umhey himself, and affidavits submitted by the Joint Board show that this action has actually destroyed the security which the bank had for the $383,000, which is more than its entire capital stock.

Made Almost Valueless.

The affidavits of Louis Hyman and A. S. Negun, business manager for the real estate corporation of Local 9, show that the transfers have resulted in so tying the real estate that it has practically become valueless, although it was the main item of security which the bank received. They point out that as soon as the Joint Board and the unions involved discovered Umhey's surreptitious transfer of the property to his own name, they brought actions to set it aside, with the result that the property is tied up in litigation that may last for years, and instalments and interest on mortgages are lapsing. The equity of the bank in the property may thus be entirely wiped out because of its effort to manipulate the security to aid the Sigman clique in the union.

Joint Board Kept in Dark.

Besides the startling revelations of Hillquit's actions and the disregard of the International Union Bank for the interests of its depositors, the affidavits filed today point out other breaches of faith. It is shown that the transfers of the securities were made without the knowledge of the proper officers, although Morris Sigman deposed that they had full knowledge of the transfer of the shares of the Joint Board building. Although Sigman stated that the transfers were made after the joint board had defaulted on payment of the loan, it is shown that they were arranged before the note came due.

The entire matter was brought before Justice Bijur of the Supreme Court on February 21 on a motion of the Joint Board to stop further fraudulent transfers. Both sides having submitted affidavits and arguments, a decision can be expected within a few days.

WORKERS' CO-OPERATIVE BOARD IN REPORT ON PAST YEAR'S ACTIVITY

By A. LOSSEFF.

A well attended meeting was held by the United Workers Cooperatives at the Manhattan Lyceum, 4th Street, S. C. Cohen, secretary, gave a detailed account of the last years' accomplishments, beginning with the Workers' Camp in 1925, its improvements and the plans for the buildings of the coming year. The camp can now accomodate from 600 to 700 people and is open all year.

He then spoke about the workers colony nt the Bronx, how difficult it was to build the first square block of housings, and how now, after its completion, the problem of efficient management is of utmost importance.

The stores which are now being built will soon be ready, and plans are being made to organize a central purchasing agency to supply food and articles for all cooperative stores in the city. A second block of buildings has now been started adjoining the first one. Mr. Cohen concluded by showing the two fold responsibility of the present enterprise, first its own development and second its guide to other cooperative establishments thruout the country.

D. Girsen, organizer, stated that with the help and influence of the Workers' Party in general and the Freiheit in particular, it had been made possible to develop the idea of workers' cooperatives. He showed how difficult it had been before the Freiheit had been established, to advertise even a single line, in the Forward.

Within a comparatively short time the building program has advanced to such a stage that it can compare favorably with any other institution, especially with the Rockefeller charity houses where a deposit of $300 is required with a rent of $16 a room per month.

A. Locter, manager, reported that the sale of second mortgage gold bonds at 6% interest is making good progress and that $100,000 worth of bonds have already been sold.

A motion to accept the reports was carried unanimously. A motion was made to increase the board of directors from 15 to 25, and an increase in the number of the control committee from 3 to 5 was also made. A motion, that permanent paid officers with the exception of the secretary, should not be members of the board, also carried.

DRAMA

Paper-Mache Roast and Stuffing

Sidney Howard's Two Plays at the Theatre Guild Look Good, But They Aren't Filling

Reviewed by HARBOR ALLEN.

ACCORDING to certain critics, Eugene O'Neill' solitary grandeur as America's only dramatist is already challenged if not adumbrated by Sidney Howard. There is no denying Howard knows his theatre. Before his two plays at the Theatre Guild's supplementary playhouse, the spectator sits tense, swooped along by sheer craftsmanship. Climaxes rise and burst like sky-rockets. Dialogue crackles, glitters. Characters unfold like glowing pyrotechnic roses. Niagaras of passion pour over the footlights. It is a perfect spectacle. Inside the theatre you are satisfied. You feel that you have seen something great and thrilling and human.

It is when you go outside that you begin to doubt. Outside, in the brassreality of Broadway, you feel hungry. What seemed to be a feast was set before you, you ate heartily, and yet you are hungry. You are seldom hungry after you have feasted on O'Neill. O'Neill gives you meat and bread—raw and coarse, maybe, but filling. What is the matter, you ask, with Sidney Howard? Is he only stuffing? Is his roast only a papier-mache roast, such as you see in the grill window on lower Broadway? Is his sky-rocket just an inflated roman candle, and his Niagara just sputtering gunpowder?

Harsh as it may sound, I suspect that Howard is merely clever fireworks. He has his virtues. He knows how to set his stage. He knows how to bring down his curtain. He knows how to keep you on the edge of your seat. He knows how to add the popular modern touch. He knows how to write "la piece bien faite"—the well-made play. And a well-built house in a city of creaking, clumsy, tumbling theatrical shanties is not to be sneezed at. Even if it is built of second-hand lumber and painted by a camouflage artist.

All this refers especially to "The Silver Cord." "Ned McCobb's Daughter," a thumping old-fashioned melodrama, glossed over with a little enamel of bootleggers, stirs you but there the varnishing process is so apparent that you feel less annoyed. "The Silver Cord" arouses your ire because it seems such a shame to see a man who might hurl thunder content to flash electric signs.

"The Silver Cord" is the story of an "old-fashioned" mother who loves her sons so much that she cannot bear to see them grow up and away from her. This comes in the shape of a scientific young wife who applies the Freudian scapel to the whole family. She succeeds in severing the umbilical cord of the elder son, her husband. The youngest remains mentally attached to his mother's navel. The diagnosis and the operation take place in a parlor and a bedroom. The job is done with a certain air of bravado, but with gentility for all that.

What originality the play pretends to is purely deceptive. It is old Ibsen in a new bottle. Sudermann was writing "Tendenz-Dramen" when I was still in school. "Damaged Goods" was very bold about "sex problems" when I was just learning what a theatre looked like. Freud has been prompting from the wings a good many years. Tear the new tissue wrapping off "The Silver Cord"—as well as "Ned McCobb's Daughter"—and you find an old bundle of tricks; a villian without a redeeming feature, a heroine pure and virtuous and noble-minded, and Virtue Triumphant in the End. The only difference is that the labels have been shuffled a bit. The pious, devoted mother is now a Sinister Freudian Complex. The realistic matters-of-fact young wife is now the Brave Modern Spirit. You call the King the Knave, and the Knave the king, but you play the game in the same old way.

Well, what do you want?

We want a new game. We want a new chess board. We're tired of parlors and bedrooms. We're tired of the people who sit in them and chew and chew on their sex kinks. We want not just fresh names, but fresh scenes, fresh people, fresh acts. Why only parlors? Where are the factories, the subways, the offices, the farms, the schools, the stores, the meeting halls, the tenements. Why only "refined" people? Where are the street sweepers, the car conductors, the plumbers, the miners, the factory hands, the working girls, the teeming masses, full of raw life, full of fire?

And, you people of the Theatre Guild, where are the experiments you promised us? Where are your new playwrights? Why are you playing so safe? Why don't you produce something that hasn't already got the O. K. of Europe or the sure-fire insurance of Broadway? Are you afraid to leave your grown old and tired and ready to curl up in a comfortable corner of the bank? Have you lost the boldness that made you once the hope of the American drama? Look out. There are rumbles in your neighborhood. They may be the groans of a new birth. And the cart-wheels that will roll your honorable remains to a bronze and marble mausoleum.

AGAIN ARREST GIRL PICKETS AT BRILL SHOP

"Picketing Still Firm," Announces Hyman

Mollie Cooperstein, Rose Midoff and Pearl Kleinman, members of Dressmakers' Local 22, were arrested yesterday morning for the second time in the last ten days for picketing, at the Louis Brill Dress shop, 335 West 38th street. The militant pickets were arraigned in Jefferson Market Court before Judge Smith, who adjourned their hearing until Tuesday.

The girls were arrested on February 20 in front of the same shop, and received two day sentences, during which they telegraphed to their brothers and sisters of Local 22 that they would be on the picket lines again on Monday.

Sam Hyman, a worker in the Style Headgear Shop at 519 Eighth Ave. was arrested, by police yesterday morning as he was pasting the Millare and Mandell shop at 519 Eighth Ave. on his way to work. He was fined five, dollars in the Jefferson Market Court. Picket demonstrations have been spirited at this shop during the past week. Three gangsters were arrested as they were beating up pickets in front of this shop last Friday.

Louis Hyman manager of the Joint Board, declared today that "picketing demonstrations have been firm and have impressed upon both workers and employers the power of the Joint Board.

"In spite of the busy season and the long, exhausting strike, the workers have responded enthusiastically to the call of the Joint Board for mass picketing," he said.

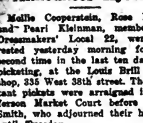
Local 25 will hold a membership meeting in Manhattan Lyceum on Saturday afternoon at one o'clock according to Joseph Goretzky, the manager of the pressers' local.

JIMMY'S UP IN ALBANY TO FIX SUBWAY FENCE

With no promise as to how the money will be spent, Mayor Walker went to Albany yesterday to work for the passage, for a second time, of the proposed amendment to the state constitution, allowing New York City to borrow for subway construction $200,000,000 beyond its legal debt limit.

This amendment has already been passed by one legislature, and if it passes this week, it will be submitted to the voters in the fall. Early in the year, it looked as though there might be trouble about this passage because someone—probably just for political reasons—began to question how the money was to be used.

Jimmy Anxious.



It was because of this questioning that Mayor Walker was so desperately anxious to pass his bus franchise scheme through the board of estimate here, for this would indicate that he had backing for any subway plan he proposed. Incidentally part of his subway plan concerned one of the firms to whom he wanted to give a bus franchise.

Mayor Walker has not been able to settle the bus business; but in spite of this, it is believed he has enough personal pull at Albany to get the amendment passed without questions.

UNION'S RECORDS SHOW "FORWARD" EXPERT ON WORKERS PARTY SCABBED IN 1919 STRIKE

Case No. _____ Date _____

Name of Member Jos. Levenson

Local No. 41 Ledger 1354 Address 401 Second Ave.

Employed by Morewitz Bros. 265 Grand St.

Nature of Complaint Escalting

Decision fined with $50 Paid $450

Case was appealed (date) 12/6/1926 to 27-926

Decision of A. C. Rejected & re appeal

Decision I. L. G. W. U. July 1925 Granted

$50 reproceed 12/21/25

CASE # 886 see 877

Upon the Appeal Committee's request that Brother Schoenfeld, Secretary, make a thorough investigation in the case of Levenson, Fredkin, & Zeyer, Brother Schoenfeld reports that he has investigated the books of the firm, which prove that during the general strike of 1919, the three in question were working, in the shop of Morowitz, 265 Grand St.,

The records obtained as to the pay received during the strike reads as follows:

May, 4th, 1919, Fredkin received ($2.48; Meltzer $24.70; Rubstein $28.80; presser Margulis $48.20); and finisher Glass $23.80)

May 4th, 1919, Zeyer received $55.00; The above also received pay for this week.

May 20th, 1919, Meltzer received $22.85; Schneider ($18.90) and Mrs. Schneider $10.00;

May 21, 1919, Fredkin and Levenson together, received the sum of $143.70; Zeyer ($31.45; presser Margulin $38.85; and finisher Glass received 17.50.

May 27th:- Fredkin and Levenson and Zeyer = all

CASE #877 and see 886

Louis Zeyer, Joe Levenson and Phineas Fredkin appeal against the decision of the Joint Board Grievance Committee, they were fined $50 each for working in the shop of Morowitz, 265 Grampe St., during the general strike.

Operator Levenson, Local #41, ledger #1354 states that he receives a $100.00 per week and the firm is trying their utmost to get rid of him. He is therefore positive that the designer of that shop, who brought charges against them, made a conspiracy in order to have him out of the shop, He furth claims that during the time of the strike, he as a very active member of the Fourth Avenue Branch of the "Socialist Party", and so busy that he hardly had a spare moment. And as a result of working hard in different committees of the branch, he took sick and had to leave the city to improve his health. During the strike, he was also elected as a delegate from the mentioned to the Detroit Convention,

Louis Zeyer, Local #1, Ledger #2127, asserts that during the strike, he had a candy store and was occupied every day until 1 A. M. There was therefore no possibility for him to work at night as accused of. While up in the shop one time, he saw some duplicates. The boss then told him that his brother who has a cloak shop gave them to him to be pressed.

P. Fredkin, Local #1, Ledger #1031, absolutely denies the charge, and corroborates the statement of Lu Zeyer.

Brother Lapidus, Executive Board member of Local #1 appears as a witness for Brother Levenson, stating, that the latter spent about all of his evenings in his house, there a committee of this branch met.

S. Duboff, Local 1, Ledger 10412, also a witness in behalf of Levenson, maintains that he and the latter belong to the same branch, and during the strike, Levenson was so busy that he never had a chance ever to visit the shop.

DECISION: As the process of the Grievance Committee could not be obtained, the decision was postponed, and Brother Schoenfeld Sec'y of said Committee shall make a thorough investigation of this case.

Three together received the sum of $72.00 " Rubstein 115.30, June 6th, Fredkin, Levenson & Zeyer, the three together received $36.00;

" June 17th, Fredkin, Levenson & Zeyer $33.80;

" July 26th, presser worked by piece receiving 70% per Garment his pay for this week was $107. 20;

Sorry to say since that this piece was on strike, Levenson, Fredkin & Zeyer, all together received stotal of $316.60;

" When Zeyer was asked the reason for receiving money from the firm during the time of the strike he answered as follows:

"When a man down on strike the boss did not have enough money to pay us for all the tickets we had. The latter therefore paid us a part of the money and asked us to come the next time for the rest."

" How much money do you think one due to all three of you together, after getting paid when you send down on strike?

" Its not a hundred dollars, maybe seventy and twenty.

Brother Levenson is asked the same question, and he states that he does not believe that the boss of the firm, because the latter could very easily have falsified their books.

DECISION: Appeal rejected.

SCAB IS NOW ACE OF REACTIONARY "FORWARD" GANG

Strikebreaker Used to Attack Communists

The Jewish Daily Forward recently has been playing up absurd stuff purporting to "expose" Communism and the Workers Party coming from Joseph Levenson. This fellow is the "bargain" on the Forward's shelves today, selling his wares to all and sundry who feed on anti-Communist meat.

Levenson is exposed today by The DAILY WORKER as a scab during the cloakmakers' strike of 1919-20. Records in the safes of the Joint Board, published below, tell the story of his scabbery. But that doesn't fease the Forward, which uses any club to beat a Communist, even though he is a traitor to his union.

Levenson managed to maintain membership in the Brownsville branch of the Communist Party when it was recuperating from the Palmer raids and could not scrutinize its membership as it does today. The Brownsville branch, however, was suspicious and brought charges at the time to the Joint Board, then under right wing control. The right wingers refused to act. Later the Joint Board made a secret investigation. A search through the files just completed by the present left wing Joint Board reveals the true facts about Levenson as a scab. Yet this is the man whom Abe Cahan calls an "innocent soul".

The first hearing is dated August 26, 1920 and the second on Sept. 2

Photographic copies of the hearare reproduced below:

"Pygmalion" Is Most Successful of Bernard Shaw's Guild Revivals

By LEON BLUMENFELD.

Judging by the attendance it generally receives, and particularly by season, "Pygmalion," Bernard Shaw's brilliant comedy-satire must be one of his most favorite works. At present it is being revived by the self-effacing Theatre Guild, and is being played at the Guild's own theatre on West 52nd Street by a group of players that practically defy criticism. It has proved not only an artistic, but a financial success as well. The DAILY WORKER has just completed arrangement's whereby it will offer to its readers and sympathizers for the entire week of March 21 to 27, inclusive the play "Pygmalion."

Performances will be given at the Guild Theatre and the original cast will be retained. Lynn Fontanne, leading lady for numerous Guild productions, and well known on the dramatic stage, will portray the role of Eliza Doolittle, the flower-girl. Reginald Mason will play the role of Henry Higgins; Winifred Manby will characterize Mrs. Hill. The other players comprising Phillip Conrad, Charles Carden, Charles Courtenay, J. W. Austin, Bernard Spence, Leigh Lovel, etc. are more or less known in the theatre.

Tickets purchased at The DAILY WORKER office at 108 East 14th Street will be of benefit to the paper. A list of special reasonable prices will prevail for this limited showing—ranging from $1 to $3 plus the tax. Readers and Comrades will have an opportunity of viewing Shaw's noted masterpiece as interpreted by the inimitable style of the Theatre Guild. In addition, they will prove their loyalty to a great human cause, a cause which needs no introductory comment here, and which is being advocated by workers everywhere.

The dramatic critics on The New York Sun commented thus on "Pygmalion": "There is delight in every line of it, the tingle of a great comic test, the relish of a fine performance. It is a privilege to report that at the close there were several loud and unmistakable "bravos".

The verdict of every drama reviewer in New York strikes a similar note in his appreciation of "Pygmalion."

CUSTOM TAILORS START DRIVE TO BUILD UP UNION

Ask Unorganized to Come Into Ranks

The campaign to organize the custom tailors is now in full swing under the direction of business agent Oscar Wilens, assisted by two special organizers, appointed by Local 1 of the Journeyman Tailors' Union.

In a statement to the unorganized custom tailors of this city the union calls attention to the fact that only by unionization will their conditions be improved.

It reads in part, as follows:

"Many of you say that custom tailors in New York cannot be organised; saying that the union is no good. They refer to past defeats; the national and race prejudices that are fostered. Remember: All this is bosses propaganda, intended to prevent the tailors from organizing. Tailors in New York can be organized once again; the union is as good as the membership makes it; in all of the strikes we also have won something; national difference is ridiculous, if it exists, as workers we only have common interests. Bosses 'finks' those that get few cents more, are whispering these sly suspicions in your ear, and many well meaning hot temple tailors are spreading the 'finks' propaganda, without knowing that they are propagading in the bosses benefit and harming their own case.

"Tailors should agitate unionism—because it is the only protection that the workers have against the absolute will and exploitation of the master.

"It means shorter hours, better wages and working conditions, more freedom, happier homes, high r intelligence and whenever life is general; all what every tailor should strive for.

"Organize! Because unorganized workers are nothing; but organized they are everything.

"Come in the office and have a chat with us! When out of the job consult us! Talk unionism! Organize!"

The union office is located at 202 East 47th Street and is open from 10 to 11 a. m. and 5 to 7 p. m. Saturdays 12 to 2 p. m.

Milk Scandal Inquiry Behind Closed Doors

Mayor James J. Walker was a witness today before the grand jury investigating alleged health department graft in "bootleg" milk and cream. Neither the mayor nor any other official would reveal the nature of the testimony. According to allegations milk and cream were sold that were not wholesome. It is anticipated that the grand jury will complete its inquiry within the next 48 hours and possibly hand down one or more presentments.

Downtown I.L.D.Branch To Hold Meeting

ALBANY, N. Y., March 1.—A bill reducing the daylight saving period in New York was up for issue in the assembly today. It was defeated by a vote of 48 to 36. It was sponsored by Assemblyman Rogers, republican, of Herkimer.

House Passes Bill Allowing Mellon to Set Up Liquor Trust

WASHINGTON, March 1.—The house today passed, 209 to 151, the Hawley Medical Liquor Bill. Under it, the treasury may grant licenses to not less than two or more than six distilleries to make whiskey.

Amendments were adopted to limit profits of the distilleries and retailers.

However, as Secretary of the Treasury Andrew Mellon, himself a big distiller, is given the task of deciding most matters of dispute concerned with the new liquor monopoly, it is believed there is a good profit to be made.

The bill was bitterly fought in the house, but the minority was too weak to do more than point out the impropriety of placing Mellon at the head of it. An amendment beginning, "This act is for the relief of Andrew Mellon and associates. . . ." was killed by a vote of 86 to 44.

GREENWICH VILLAGER EVEN DENIED GAS PLATE AT $70 A ROOM A MONTH

"Intelligentsia" Explodes Myth About Artists Paying Fabulous Sums for Tenement Cubbyholes

By INTELLIGENSIA

Pity the poor Greenwich Villager! After he pays $70 a month for one room in the famous "Twin Peaks," supposed to be haven for artists, —or some other Greenwich Village haunt—he is to be prevented from doing his own cooking.

The Bureau of Building and the Tanement House Department are beginning to investigate with a vengeance, and they find hundreds of buildings which are violating the laws against cooking in "non-housekeeping" apartments.

Certain houses are passed by building inspectors provided cooking is allowed in only two apartments. If there are more house-keeping arrangements than that, the building comes under the tenament house laws—meaning that it has to have fire escapes readily accessible, and certain other fire-proof measures.

Artists in Village?

The strange thing is, that the less fire-proofing there is, the higher the rents. Imagine $70 a room in what is supposed to be an artist's house! The theory still persists that artists live in Greenwich Village and that Greenwich Village could not have anything so inartistic as tenements.

Truth to tell, there are mighty few artists who can afford to live in Greenwich Village nowadays, and they are not living in $70 rooms either. Those who are enjoying these rooms are lured by the idea that artists inhabit these parts, and as usual the landlord makes the most of this legend.

Incidentally he saves the expense of making the buildings comply with the regulations for house-keeping buildings, and winks his eye when the tenants violate the law and introduce a gas or electric stove.

Up in East Side Lofts.

It won't be the "poor artist" who will suffer in this wave of law enforcement. He long ago left these parts for a real tenement, or an East Side loft.

And it won't be the landlord who will suffer, even tho he has to remodel his "non-housekeeping" building. He will just tack on a bit more to the rent, and they'll be paying $80 instead of seventy for a room next winter.

The amazing thing is that lots of people seem to have that much to spend for rent. Where do they get it?

Sentence Furriers.

Two more furriers paid the penalty, yesterday, for helping to win the fur strike of last spring.

In general sessions, Judge Cornelius Collins sentenced Abraham Weiss to 4 months in the workhouse, and A. Reiter to 2 months. Other strike cases were postponed until today.

Right after work tonight, the shop chairmen of the Furriers' Joint Board will meet in Manhattan Lyceum to discuss the present situation in the union.

Tomorrow night, Locals 1, 5, 10 and 15 will meet to take up the question of levying a tax on the membership.

Heated controversies between "rights" and "lefts" in tha Friedman & Finer shop had been going on for some time; but finally the workers decided that as good union members they must settle this matter if union conditions were to be maintained. They held a meeting in Manhattan Lyceum several weeks ago and by vote of the majority it was decided that the shop should support the Joint Board and that a thousand dollars should be raised for the bonds.

This meeting was followed by a banquet, and the shop is now pulling together for the preservation of the union.

A general membership meeting of the Dressmakers' Local No. 22 is called for Thursday, March 3rd, at 7 p. m., at Webster Hall, 11th street, between 3rd and 4th avenues.

The meeting is called for the purpose of discussing the latest developments in the present situation in the union. Every member is urged to be present.

New American History Class Opens Tonight at Workers' School, N. Y.

A new course in American history is being offered by the Workers School to begin tonight at 6:15 p. m., with James Cork as the instructor. This makes three courses in various phases of American history being offered by the Workers School, the other two being more advanced and intended for those who have completed the course given by Mr. Cork.

The course in "History of the United States," is a general survey of the development of the social, economic and political institutions of America, its class divisions and class conflicts and a background for understanding the political problems that America presents today.

The fee for this course will be $3.50 for three months.

Dredge Beached Off Staten Island

Middle Class Able to Keep Rents Low

The percentage of wages spent for rent is proportionately lower here than in other parts of the city, for the bourgoisie seem to be able to bully the landlords in some manner. Most apartments are leased, so I suppose the tenants' lawyers must be responsible for the low rents charged. With the average wage at $56, it will be easily seen that the middle class has nothing to kick about; that it is the poor worker who needs the emergency rent laws.

In a previous article, I described conditions in Brownsville. The same might be said for the poorer localities in Brooklyn. Of course, some, like Williamsburgh, have slums that cry to the high heavens for eradication. In Newtown, on Marcy Ave. I think it was, I found a row of four-story wooden frame houses that would incinerate scores of people if a fire ever broke out.

Brooklyn is full of rows of wooden houses. Some day a big fire is going to break out, and scores of lives will be lost. Then, and much belatedly, Brooklyn builders will tear down the wooden firetraps and erect fire-proof structures. But not before.

Even though the wooden houses are firetraps, they have no fire-escapes. Where are the tenament house inspectors? In some speakeasy, drinking up the receipts of a day's work shaking down the rent-gougers?

I am not going to give an average wage or rental for the entire borough of Brooklyn, for the variations are so great and irregular, that they result would be worthless. Suffice it to say that if there were over a hundred "Apartment To Let" signs in the borough, the immigration authorities would let down the bars and fill them up. There aren't, I don't believe, for I spent an entire morning trying to find one.

Harlem Young Workers To Meet.

A special meeting of the Harlem Y. W. L. section is called for Thursday, March 3d, at 1553 Madison Ave. (between 104th & 105th Streets) at 8 p. m. sharp. A district representative will speak on the industrial work of the league.

Borah Learns That It Is Dangerous to Challenge Lies of Secret Diplomats

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

LIES are the chief stock in trade of secret diplomacy. When pushed into the open, the secret diplomats continue with their lies.

It is, therefore, easily understood why Secretary of State Kellogg peddled a lot of buncombe when he was forced to give some information to the senate foreign relations committee relative to what proportion of the holders of oil lands and concessions have complied with the new Mexican land laws which the Wall Street government at Washington holds are confiscatory.

Kellogg was merely peddling a lot of diplomatic propaganda, in the form of brazen falsehoods, in order to bulwark the imperialist aggressions, not only against Mexico and Nicaragua, but against all of Latin-America.

Kellogg has been caught in the mesh of his falsehoods. Senator Borah sent a little cable down to Mexico City and got the facts from President Calles. The New York World is forced to comment:

"The discrepancies between Secretary Kellogg's report and that of President Calles are glaring."

At War With Kellogg

"Nervous Nellie" Kellogg openly confesses to the predicament in which he has been caught by claiming he has a "bad cold," which necessitates his rushing off to Florida, where the more balmy and quiet atmosphere is supposed to aid in his recuperation. Congress will adjourn on Friday, after which he can be expected to return. Kellogg is more nervous than brazen in these little matters of diplomatic prevarication, so he has a very difficult time of it putting up a brave front.

Senator William E. Borah.

In the meantime, however, the whole bankers' press and Wall Street's parliamentary hirelings in Washington are all roaring in chorus at the outrage that has been perpetrated. Senator Borah is denounced for daring to leap over the hydra-headed Coolidge-Mellon-Morgan-Kellogg government and communicate with the officials of a foreign power with which Wall Street rule has a dispute. Senator Borah is all but attacked as a traitor who ought to be taken out immediately to face a firing squad or at least be subjected to a mob attack. Wrath is also directed to which Borah's cable to Calles is put in the famous category of "trading with the enemy."

This whole tumult merely reveals the great difficulty encountered in getting at the facts in the present imperialist maneuvers against Latin-America. It was early shown that the state department, with the Associated Press Service, and tried to use the other capitalist news services to spread its lies against Latin-America, especially the falsehood that the troubles in Nicaragua grew out of a Communist plot hatched in Mexico City to drive a Bolshevist wedge between Continental United States and the Panama Canal. The half-hearted demand made in congress that this whole procedure of Wall Street's secret diplomacy be investigated was quickly squelched, even Borah quitting this particular front of the struggle with the state department.

It was Kellogg's victory in scotching this attack on his department that no doubt gave him courage to make Admiral Latimer supreme dictator over Nicaragua, establishing a censorship over the Central American republic that the state department at first denied but, being caught in another lie, had to openly admit. Again the anti-administration senators failed to take advantage of this new opportunity to rake the White House and the state, war and navy departments as mere accessories of Wall Street imperialism.

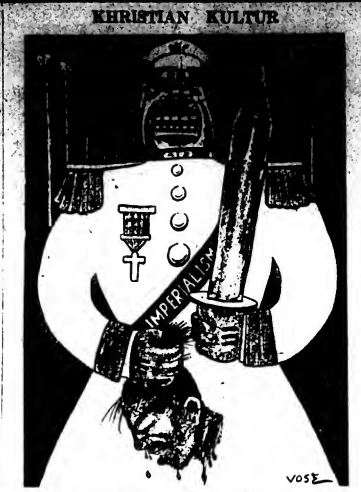
It is no wonder that now, with a straight face, the administration spokesmen and the bought press denounce Senator Borah for his alleged audacity in communicating with a foreign power. Borah is supposed to take his information from Kellogg and be content, is the view taken. In the words of The New York Times, speaking of Mexico, "Abundant material is not lacking to the inquisitive senatorial mind," with the addition that, "Secretary Kellogg has offered everything relating to the matter in the archives of the state department." That, of course, is the worst possible slam that The Times could take at the state department, since it has offered nothing of value as yet.

All the old "war stuff" is trotted out, that Borah's action tends to encourage Mexico in its opposition to Wall Street rule, that it "throws discredit" on the Coolidge-Kellogg policies, while a law dating back to 1798—the so-called Logan law—is uncovered and dusted off for use in the effort to discourage this treason.



Dr. George Logan, of Philadelphia, a Quaker and a democrat, who had been a member of the Pennsylvania legislature and afterward a United States senator, had gone to France where he had had interviews with Talleyrand, minister of foreign affairs, and members of the directory, in an effort to heal the breach that prevailed at the time between this country and Paris. George Washington, then president, resented this course, as an interference with his own job.

The best that Senator Borah can do is to reply that there is an almost unbroken record of the chairmen of Senate Foreign Relations Committees communicating with foreign officials, from 1798 down to Senator Lodge. Borah cites the conspicuous precedent set by Charles Sumner, who was chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee from 1861 to 1869. Throughout the whole of the Civil War he conducted an almost continuous correspondence with members of the British cabinet on subjects that were in controversy between the two nations. He also pointed out that he wrote to the heads of other governments.

But that was in the days of the infancy of American capitalism when it had not yet launched upon its world imperialist ventures. Borah faces a different day than that which confronted Sumner. The only question that remains is, "How far will Borah go in his fight against imperialism." It seems that so far he has merely blundered into every struggle he has been compelled to make. The real fight will not be waged until militant spokesmen of the working class—the class enemies of the imperialists—are sent to Washington to take up the attack that burns Borah's fingers every time he comes within hailing distance of it.

"Civilization" According to Wall Street.

Bloody Struggles of the Chilean Masses

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

RULED until 1920 by a combination of big land owners and wealthy city elements in alliance with the clericals, the Chilean working class has been forced to travel a bloody path since it in combination with the middle class, elected President Alexandri.

Mining, producing mostly nitrates and copper, is the principal industry of Chile. The workers engaged in this industry form the backbone of the Chilean labor movement.

At a conference held April 26, 1925, there were represented delegates from other organized groups, such as railroad and trans-port workers, printer, teachers, salaried workers, etc.

The clash between the ruling Chilean labor movement, the stronger section of which, the labor federation, is affiliated with the Red International of Labor Unions, which has some connection with farm workers and the old semi-feudal landlords, native capitalist and American interests represented by the powerful Guggenheim and Anaconda Copper Mining Company interests, produced first the alliance with middle class elements resulting in the election of President Alexandri.

Alexandri was expelled subsequently by the reactionary forces, but was returned as a result of mass pressure on the government. He was welcomed back by the masses in January, 1925.

In June of the same year a great strike against low wages and inhuman living conditions occurred in the nitrate fields. The gunmen of the companies acted with unprecedented brutality and fired on the headquarters of the unions. Before the strike the nitrate company manager had blacklisted and deported all active unionists.

Labor and Communist papers were suppressed.

Then the Alexandri government, which the workers had believed friendly to them, sent troops and artillery to the nitrate fields, bombarded the workers' quarters, shooting women and children indiscriminately and murdering many of the strikers after they had been made prisoners.

A trade union commission which investigated the massacre reported that there had been 2,000 deaths—mostly women and children.

Alexandri was forced to resign on October 1.

The workers formulated their own program and ran their own candidate for president.

The elections were accompanied by terror and displays of military force —the workers' candidate being given 70,606 votes as against 171,278 for the reactionary candidate. Because of the brutality practised during the election, the workers coalition demanded that the election be annulled and new elections held.

Strikes and demonstrations took place and a state of siege was proclaimed in the two provinces of Antofagasta and Tarapacca on October 27.

The police and military fired into the crowds of workers who were holding a huge demonstration, wounding 23. A two days protest general strike followed in Santiago.

Since these occurrences there have been sporadic strikes and outbreakings with the labor and revolutionary movement developing a wider base among the Chilean population at large 4,000,000.

Detailed information is lacking but there is little doubt that the present dictatorship which is now terrorizing all opposition elements of the population more than 300 arrests and deportations of trade union and Communist leaders and even among the middle class groups having been recorded to date has the backing of the big industrialists as well as foreign.

The great bulk of Chile's trade is with the United States. Exports to United States total more than to all other countries combined.

Chile in 1925 ranked second in copper production. The low labor cost of enterprises supplying raw materials is shown by the fact that the Anaconda Mining Company is said to be able to deliver copper from its Chilean properties in New York at six cents per pound whereas it claims that it cannot produce copper from its Montana properties at less than 11 cents per pound.

Copper and nitrate in Chile take the place of oil in Mexico as an incentive for imperialist penetration and conquest and as in Mexico where the working class is in a minority it will be necessary for the workers, the most decisive section of whom support the Communist Party, to make the closest possible alliance with the peasantry in the struggle against American imperialism and its fascist puppets.

It is necessary also that the American working class pay more attention to the struggles of the Latin American labor movements and in the present case by determined protest to the Chilean dictator and the United States government to whose agents are fully aware of the bloody persecution of the Chilean working class—prevent the execution of the leaders, the Chilean masses and stop what is far worse—the living death to which Ibanez would consign them by deportation to Easter Island, 2,000 miles off the Chilean coast.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

Dear Friends: I congratulate The DAILY WORKER at having come to New York, the centre of world imperialism, and where the trade union movement is being attacked by the yellow bureaucracy, aided by police and gangsters.

I have a few suggestions for the improvement and building up the circulation. I submit these for your examination.

1.—Open-air or street meetings should be undertaken to campaign for The DAILY WORKER (also other militant working class papers of foreign languages). At trade union meetings The DAILY WORKER should be sold and, if possible, debated upon.

At labor councils and conventions The DAILY WORKER should be there.

At socialist, farmor and scientific lectures, where workers assemble (such as Cooper Union) it should be represented.

2.—Squads of workers to distribute leaflets in subway and elevated trains, and all places where workers travel to work.

3.—Large posters (with glaring headlines of immediate problems) at all news-stands where The DAILY WORKER is sold, and at all public meetings of the working class, which should be placed in a conspicuous place.

I believe when these suggestions are put into operation and persistently continued the result will be at least double the present influence and circulation within a short time.

MARK STONE, New York.

A Proletarian Life

By MARK STONE.

JACK PATRICK woke up in his miserable room on East Broadway. The snow was streaking the dirty window pane and outside the wind was whining down the streets. It was cold out and he felt very weak. But he can't be particular with three dollars in one's pocket.

He'd have to get out of bed, and wait in line for a snow-shoveller's job if he wanted to eat. He'd have to get with a gang of fellows in the same position as his and shovel snow ten hours a day. It wasn't a very pleasant prospect but what else could he do?

Jack Patrick had no relatives, no one to whom he could turn in a pinch. His father had been killed ten years ago in the coal pits. It was then that he had become the mainstay of the family.

He wasn't very strong then either, but he had to work very hard to support the family.

Finally he broke down. His frail body couldn't stand the damp air of the pits, the long hours, continual undernourishment.

The doctor told him that he needed a long rest. He was run down, the doctor said.

Jack Patrick couldn't afford a long rest. That was the privilege of the rich. Instead he left the small mining town where he was living and got a job on a nearby farm. Two months later he returned to the pits, where he could earn more money. But he was still rather weak.

Now his mother, a frail woman of forty-seven, went to work. She toiled in a laundry—and between the two of them they supported the family.

Then came the death of his mother and sister. They were living in a match-box shack owned by the coal company. One night a fire broke out in the shack and his mother and sister were burned to death. Jack Patrick escaped.

He couldn't stand the Illinois mining town now. It was saturated with blood. The coal barons had taken his father; now they had murdered his mother. He couldn't stand the town where he had lived his whole life —and he lit out. He was through with mining. He crammed east and landed a job on a farm outside of New York.

In the fall when the hay had been stacked in the barns, his job was over. He hit out for New York, the Golden City, where jobs are to be had for the asking. But Jack didn't get a job.

Jack got up and waited on line for his job. He was assigned to a squad at 23rd street and 6th avenue. He shovelled snow. No gloves, his shoes all shot and a biting wind whistling down the street.

He had eaten one meal in the last three days and he felt weak. Too weak to lift the heavy shovel clinging to his hands.

Slowly the shovel slipped from Jack Patrick's hands. He slumped down in the snow which he had been shovelling.

Babson Wants to Know

By ROBERT DUNN.

DO you see signs of a tendency of the capitalistic interests abusing their power? This question is being asked by the Babson Statistical Organization of Wellesley Hills, Mass., a questionnaire being sent to users all over the country.

As the prophet of the business class Roger Babson and his statistical staff always have their ears to the ground. They think they hear a "wave of radicalism" as they call it rumbling somewhere in the distance.

Now a wave of radicalism, Babson argues, "is always bad for legitimate business." And he continues, "waves of radicalism, however, are always reactions from periods when the capitalistic group has taken "undue advantage of its power." Is that happening now? If so, Babson wants to know. For "if such a bitter feeling is being fostered it should be known and, so far as possible, eliminated."

In what direction might this abuse of capitalistic power become evident? Mr. Babson suggests a few on his questionnaire. His queries on this point run as follows: "Among the banks? Thru the newspapers? By means of trade associations? Thru fraternal organizations? Thru labor leaders?"

Just what Babson has in mind when he hints at the abuses of the "capitalistic interests" thru labor leaders, is not clear.

Does he mean to inquire if Matthew Woll is abusing the power of the "capitalistic interests" when he wars on the Left Wing? Does he refer to the corruption in the high places of the United Mine Workers? Does he refer to the labor leaders who are acting as informants to the Industrial Squad and private espionage agencies?

When the questionnaires are all in Babson will publish the results of his investigation in a later bulletin.

A LITERARY MENU.—More and more people are getting into the habit of reading at their meals. Comrade M. G. thinks that this tendency should be regulated. There should be some sort of harmony between the food and the book. As a beginning she suggests the following list, and asks that customers of this column make additional suggestions:

1. Any standard anthology makes excellent reading while eating hash.

2. If the hash is served by the Ritz-Carltons, read "Mystery De Luxe" by Rufus King.

3. For a spaghetti dinner get Dorothy Parker's new volume, "Enough Rope."

4. With the dessert—"Little Pitchers," by Isa Glenn.

5. James Oneal's book on American Communism should go well with calves' brains.

6. For the average one-arm beanery: "I'll Have a Fine Funeral," by Pierre La Maziere.

Another Authority on Communism.—Here is Arthur Brisbane in a pungent commentary on Marxian economics: "Even the good Communist who believes that everything should belong to the people and be divided will admit that it is better to have one man of intelligence gather a thousand millions and spend the money intelligently, than to have a million people get it and spend it in small driblets for soda water and ice cream, with nothing to show for it afterwards." All this as an apology for the Rockefeller accumulations. The intelligence with which John D. spends his millions is dramatically exhibited by some such incident, from time to time, as the Ludlow massacres, the Western Maryland strike, etc.

An Authority on Destiny.—For some refreshing honesty, and as an antidote to the hypocritical piffle coming out of Washington, turn to "Liberty" magazine. It makes no bones about American imperialism. It makes no apologies. It stands four-square on the inalienable right to rob our neighbors. In an editorial it recalls the glorious American conquests in the past, concluding: "Our conduct was possibly vicious and depraved, morally—but it was progress. Destiny was at work behind the selfishness of immoral politicians. Destiny is still busy, and seventy-five years from now the inhabitants of Nicaragua, Mexico, et al, will be singing the Star-Spangled Banner and scoffing at the idea that anyone would return to the old governments." The pious hopes of liberals, the lukewarm sentimentalities of social-democrats, the self-delusions of progressives—how futile and funny they are when faced with the reality.

RUTHENBERG IS DEAD.

Workers' Leaders Mourn Ruthenberg

Many Elements Represented, But All Praise Him As Entirely Devoted to Labor's Cause

As soon as news of the death of C. E. Ruthenberg reached men and women prominent in the labor movement, they began to send in to the offices of the Workers Party and to its press statements of regret and regard. Below are some of those received, others are left out merely because of the inability to prepare them in time for publication.

COMES AS SHOCK TO SCHLOSSBERG.

JOSEPH SCHLOSSBERG, General Secretary, Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America:

"His death is a shock to me. I was informed a short time ago that he had pulled through. This is so sudden I hardly know what to say."

HAYS ADMIRED RUTHENBERG, THE FIGHTER.

ARTHUR GARFIELD HAYS, noted attorney of the American Civil Liberties Union: "Personally I have always been very fond of Ruthenberg. While I did not agree with his views I always have admired a good fighter and he was one."

CHINESE EDITOR JOINS IN SORROW.

H. LINSON, editor-in-chief, "Chinese Nationalist Daily," organ of the Kuomintang (Chinese Nationalist Party): "We are very sorry that such an able man as C. E. Ruthenberg leaves us so soon."

"WORKERS' GREATEST LOSS," SAYS BRODSKY.

JOSEPH R. BRODSKY, noted labor attorney,—"The death of Ruthenberg is the greatest loss that the working class of America could sustain.

"His entire life was devoted to the workers' interests fegardless of his self interests."

FURRIER STRIKE LEADER MISSES GREAT FIGHTER.

BEN GOLD, General Manager of the Furriers Joint Board,—"The death of C. E. Ruthenberg is a great loss to the entire movement that strives for the liberation of the working class, and particularly to the American labor movement.

"Charles E. Ruthenberg had been a valiant fighter for the best interests of the workers of this country. The loss of such a man is especially great at this time when the need of militant and uncompromising leadership is urgent, and the fight against the imperialistic designs of the American capitalist class calls for energetic and fearless working class opposition.

"The self-sacrificing career of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg will serve as an inspiration in all the struggles of the American workers against their exploiters."

The Joint Board building at 22 East 22nd street, is draped in black and red and bears the slogan, "We mourn the loss of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg. Brave fighter for the working class."

"HIS MEMORY WILL LIVE," SAYS TRACHTENBURG.

ALEXANDER TRACHTENBURG.—"Those who have been affiliated with the revolutionary socialist and Communist movements of the United States during the past twenty years know of Ruthenberg's political and organizational activities.

"He was always on the left in the socialist party. Whether in the fight of 1912 or 1917 and 1919, he stood for revolutionary socialism against reformism.

"Ruthenberg died a felon in the eyes of the capitalist state. His memory will live in the hearts of the American workers in whose behalf he gave the best years of his life."

INSPIRED WORKING CLASS WOMEN.

The United Council of Working Class Housewives issued the following statement:

"We mourn the loss of our devoted leader, Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg, secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party of America, who inspired to action the working class women to take their place in the struggle, side by side with the working men, for the liberation of the exploited masses.

Signed—UNITED COUNCIL OF WORKING CLASS HOUSEWIVES, Kate Gitlow, Secretary.

GITLOW SAYS, "HE ALWAYS OPPOSED IMPERIALISM.

"Comrade Ruthenberg is dead. The revolutionary proletariat of the world and particularly the American working class has lost a great leader, a courageous fighter and a most loyal champion. Comrade Ruthenberg's death deprived the capitalist ruling class of the United States in its effort to again send him to prison this time to the Michigan penitentiary for a long period of time. Comrade Ruthenberg gave his whole life to the cause of the working class. Comrade Ruthenberg devotedly served the revolutionary movement of the workers to overthrow capitalism. All the oppressed and exploited masses found in him a determination and indefatigableness to serve their cause.

"Comrade Ruthenberg was a bitter and uncompromising opponent of imperialism, its wars of plunder and butchery of the producing masses. He

CURRENT EVENTS By T. J. O'FLAHERTY

THE death of C. E. Ruthenberg brings a feeling of loss to the revolutionary movement and a sense of personal loss to those who were closely acquainted with him. Only two weeks ago comrade Ruthenberg walked into this office and gave us a cheery greeting. He looked the picture of health and seemed ustined to play a leading role in party councils for many years to come rather than to be stricken down by the grim reaper in the prime of his life and at the height of his revolutionary career.

RUTHENBERG'S life was full of incident, particularly since his arrest in the early days of the war for anti-war activities. Since then he was under constant indictment and spent much time in prison. I recall very distinctly the famous Bridgeman raid when sixteen Communists were arrested on the morning of August 22, and herded in Berrien County jail. It was a beautiful morning after a rainy night. Most of the delegates to the convention had gotten away during the night as news of the intended raid reached us. Ruthenberg was one of those that remained.

NOTHING could be more peaceful than the scene as automobiles laden with federal officers and local deputy sheriffs appeared. Several of us were taking a nap while waiting for a train; others were laying on the grass chatting. Then the detectives arrived. I can still see Ruthenberg sitting on the grass with a smile on his face as the blustering agents tried to awe the little band. It was not necessary for them to ask for his name; he was well known among that fraternity.

WE were taken to the county jail. The small-town bailiffs expected to see a gang of bearded ruffians, armed to the teeth and it was with no little concern they approached the pen that held us. However after a few glimpses their fears vanished. They found a group of

Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg

General Secretary, Workers (Communist) Party

DEATH has taken from the ranks of the revolutionary movement in America, Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg, the leader of the Workers (Communist) Party, the vanguard of the American proletariat.

Comrade Ruthenberg was best known to and most hated by the American capitalists as a Communist, as an implacable foe of capitalist exploitation and oppression.

He died on March 2, 1927, after being operated on for an acute attack of appendicitis which developed into peritonitis. He made a valiant fight to the last to continue so as to be able to render unceasingly his best and his all towards the victory of the American working class and the international proletariat.

Comrade Ruthenberg was the leader of the left wing and the anti-war movement in the socialist party in 1917. He was most instrumental in drawing up and securing the adoption of the famous St. Louis anti-war manifesto of the socialist party. It was Comrade Ruthenberg who led the fight against Hillquit, Berger and the other right wing leaders and inspired and organized the left wing forces in the socialist party in 1919. Soon Comrade Ruthenberg became the leader of the Communist Party of America, organized in September, 1919.

The courageous fight made by Comrade Ruthenberg before the Michigan court where he was charged with participating in a convention of the Communist Party of America, gained for the American Communist Party the recognition of its legality.

Comrade Ruthenberg was born on July 9, 1882, in Cleveland. He was the son of a longshoreman. He was a factory worker, clerk, newspaper correspondent and then gave his whole time to the revolutionary proletarian movement, beginning with his work as organizer and secretary of the socialist party in the city of Cleveland from 1909 to 1919. Comrade Ruthenberg has been a member of the Executive Committee of the Communist Party and the Workers (Communist) Party of America from their very inception. He has been executive secretary of the Communist Party from the day of its organization until his imprisonment in New York State Prison. He became general secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party of America and has been secretary until the day of his death. Since 1921 Comrade Ruthenberg has been a member of the Executive Committee and the Presidium of the Communist International, the highest bodies of the International Communist movement. In his revolutionary activity Comrade Ruthenberg showed unflinching determination and indomitable courage. His term of penal servitude in the jail of Canton, Ohio, for his opposition to the great imperialist war only served to inspire him to mightier effort in the class war against capitalism. The many months he spent in Sing Sing prison for playing the leading role in the organization of the left wing movement in the socialist party only steeled his revolutionary ardor. His conviction as a Communist in the State Court of Michigan, now under consideration by the United States Supreme Court, was a signal for Comrade Ruthenberg and all of his followers to battle harder than ever against American capitalist tyranny.

The Workers (Communist) Party of America is conscious of its tasks as the vanguard of the American working class. We recognize our severe loss in the death of Comrade Ruthenberg, who was the most dynamic force in our campaign for the development of the labor party movement, the building of the left wing in the trade unions, the campaign for the protection of the foreign-born workers, the struggle against American imperialism and other major campaigns of our party. We pledge ourselves to prosecute with greater vigor than ever all of these campaigns.

Comrade Ruthenberg was a Bolshevik. His life and efforts have been an inspiration to the militant and revolutionary workers of America. His death will only serve to steel our revolutionary purpose, to close our ranks, to fight on until the victory of the American working class is assured, until the establishment of the Workers' and Farmers' Soviet Republic of the United States.

Comrade Ruthenberg's last words to the members of the Workers (Communist) Party and the other American workers were:

"TELL THE COMRADES TO CLOSE THEIR RANKS, TO BUILD THE PARTY. THE AMERICAN WORKING CLASS, UNDER THE LEADERSHIP OF OUR PARTY AND THE COMINTERN, WILL WIN. LET'S FIGHT ON!"

The Central Executive Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party of America pledges itself and the entire membership of the Workers (Communist) Party to fight on in the spirit and determination of our dead leader, Comrade Ruthenberg.

IN MEMORIAM

The sudden death of Charles Emil Ruthenberg, General Secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party, leaves a great gap in its ranks and takes from the revolutionary movement of the United States one of its most devoted, capable and energetic leaders.

In Ruthenberg was expressed, as perhaps in no other personality, the continuity of the American revolutionary movement. He was the sole outstanding figure who carried over into our party the very best traditions of the pre-war socialist movement. As secretary of the Cleveland section of the socialist party, Ruthenberg consistently fought the opportunist tendencies and the opportunist leaders of the socialist movement.

The knowledge and skill which he developed in the struggle against American capitalism and its allies in the ranks of the workers he brought to the young Communist party and our party will feel his absence deeply.

Ruthenberg lived in and for the Communist Party as no section of the party knows better than the staff of The DAILY WORKER. This is not the time nor do we intend to try to fully appraise the contribution of our dead comrade to our party, the American working class and the international revolutionary movement.

It is enough for the moment to say that he lived and died a revolutionist and that our grief is great. We grieve not so much for ourselves, although the personal loss is poignant, but for our party and the American working class which has all too few of the type of Ruthenberg—able, far-seeing and courageous.

Upon The DAILY WORKER staff in the three years of its existence has fallen the burden of chronicling the deaths of Comrades Lenin, Frunze and Krasnin. It has been a task we have carried out with heavy hearts but the history of the class struggle takes no account of the sorrow of individuals.

Once more we have to tell of the death of a loved and respected comrade, representative of our party in the Executive Committee of the Communist International, as part of our daily routine.

We wish it were not so. So close has been our association with C. E. Ruthenberg that we can hardly force ourselves to believe that we shall work with him no more.

We expected to write soon that he had gone to prison because of his loyalty to the cause of the workers. He would have been removed from active struggle for a time but he would have returned and this we could have stated.

But death does not release its prisoners. Death cannot deprive us of Ruthenberg's memory or of the fruits of his lifetime of endeavor for his class.

The DAILY WORKER will continue to speak and fight for Communism as did Ruthenberg and will honor his memory by ever pressing forward in the struggle for the conquest of power by the American working class and its most conscious and disciplined section—The Workers (Communist) Party of America.

Charles Emil Ruthenberg, our comrade, is dead.

Long live the Communist Party of America!

Long live the Communist International!

"Let's Fight On" His Last Behest

While Dying, After Operation in Chicago, Urged Comrades to Build the Party

Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg, General Secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party of America, died yesterday morning in the American Hospital at Chicago, after an operation for acute appendicitis, developing into peritonitis.

His last words, when he knew that death was near were; "TELL THE COMRADES TO CLOSE THEIR RANKS, TO BUILD THE PARTY. THE AMERICAN WORKING CLASS, UNDER THE LEADERSHIP OF OUR PARTY AND THE COMINTERN, WILL WIN. LET'S FIGHT ON!"

Members of the Political Committee, signing for the Central Executive Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party, have issued a statement which appears on this page, giving a brief history of Comrade Ruthenberg's many activities in the workers' cause, and pledging the party to fulfill faithfully his last request.

Funeral Sunday.

The funeral of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg will take place Sunday, March 6, at 1 p. m., from the Ashland Boulevard Auditorium, at which a mass memorial service will be held. The speakers will be Wm. Z. Foster, Jay Lovestone, Max Bedacht, Nat Kaplan and Arne Swabeck.

Comrades and friends will have an opportunity to view the body of Comrade Ruthenberg at this memorial service from where it will be taken to the crematory.

Fell In Action.

Comrade Ruthenberg died at his post. Until the moment of his sudden and fatal illness, he was giving his entire time and great energy to the task of leading the very vanguard of the militant workers of America in their struggle for a class farmer labor party, and for working class activity by the trade unions, as well as engaging in the multitudinous duties of education and organization which the Workers (Communist) Party is carrying on.

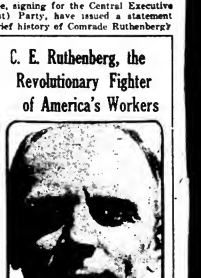
An International Figure.

Ruthenberg's death has its international significance. One of his last official acts was to sign as general secretary of the party the manifesto calling upon the American Federation of Labor to state clearly its position in the present situation, when Wall Street's marines are invading both China and Latin America.

His Own Policy.

In issuing this statement, at the orders of the central executive committee, Ruthenberg was merely carrying on the policy of anti-imperialism which he had always pursued.

He was the one most responsible for the drawing up and adoption of the St. Louis anti-war manifesto of the socialist party, in the days when it was dangerous for anybody to oppose the capitalist slaughter being waged in Europe, and Ruthenberg was leader, of the left wing of the socialist party.



Trusted Leader.

When he died, and since 1924, Comrade Ruthenberg has been a member of the executive committee and the Presidium of the Communist International, the highest bodies of the International Communist movement.

As soon as news of Ruthenberg's death reached the prominent members of the working class movement in America, they began to send in messages of regret and commemoration to the party offices of the Workers (Communist) Party, and to its press.

Albert Welsbord, successful leader of the famous Passaic strike called for redoubled effort of the American workers, to make up for the loss of the genius of Ruthenberg.

C. E. RUTHENBERG.

John Ballam, active party trade unionist, spoke of the long career of absolute devotion to the working class exemplified by Ruthenberg.

Freda Kirchwey, managing editor of The Nation, said, "The American working class loses one of its most fearless leaders."

Alexander Trachtenberg told of Ruthenberg's always standing "for revolutionary socialism against reformism."

Charles Krumbein, New York industrial organizer, spoke of Ruthenberg "fighting when it meant much to fight," in the days of persecution.

Bertram D. Wolfe, head of the New York Workers School, praised the indominatable spirit of the Ruthenberg, who declared, only a few weeks before his death, "Since 1917, there is one period of only 6 months during which I have not been in jail or under indictment."

Ben Gitlow referred to the pioneer work done by Ruthenberg in organizing the Communist movement in America, and declared the party members pledge themselves, "to build up in the United States a powerful section of the Communist International," as the best tribute to Ruthenberg.

DETROIT FEELS THE LOSS OF OUR FIGHTING COMMUNIST LEADER

By CYRIL LAMBKIN.
(Special To The DAILY WORKER.)

DETROIT, Mich., March 2.—The shock caused by the death of C. E. Ruthenberg will reverberate thru thousands of Detroit Communists and militant workers generally.

He was well known in Detroit. When he spoke to an audience of 5000 which filled Arena Garden on the occasion of the first Lenin memorial meeting in February, 1924, they listened to him with rapt attention.

Twice every year he addressed mass meetings here and always hundreds of workers, attracted by his eloquence and devotion to the cause, attended. He was the principal speaker at the "Save Sacco and Vanzetti" meeting held here last June.

He will be remembered also for his courageous and intelligent defense at his trial at St. Joseph which was featured on first pages of the Michigan newspapers.

Many Pay Tribute to C. E. Ruthenberg fought most bitterly the imperialist butchery of 1914-1918 and for his opposition to the entry of the United States in the war was sent to prison.

"The Russian proletarian revolution immediately enrolled Comrade Ruthenberg in its ranks. He fought the reformist socialists and was thrown out of the Socialist Party for so doing. He was one of the pioneers in the organization of the Communist Party in the United States. For his defiance and opposition to American capitalism and its ruling class he was sent to prison in 1919 for a long number of years.

"We bend our heads in sorrow at the great loss we have suffered. How ever, we draw from the entire of his life and activities that inspiration and determination which will give us the will in this, the United States, the bulwark of capitalism and reaction, to carry on the fight where Comrade Ruthenberg too soon had to leave off. That we pledge ourselves to build up in the United States a powerful section of the Communist Internationl, a mass Communist Party and that united we will mobilize the workers and all the exploited and oppressed to give capitalism its death blow and to herald in the victory of the proletarian revolution."

LOSS TO RADICAL MOVEMENT, SAYS THOMAS.

NORMAN THOMAS, Director of the League for Industrial Democracy, writing in the New Leader.—Just as I was finishing this column I was informed of Ruthenberg's sudden death. Sharply as I differed in my view of tactics I always found him sincere and engaging in personal relations and absolutely devoted to his cause.

He was certainly one of the ablest and sanest men in the Communist Party and one from whom constructive leadership might be hoped.

His death is a loss to the radical movement as well as to his own Party.

RUTHENBERG DIED AT HIS POST.

JAMES P. CANNON, Member of the Central Executive Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party.—"Comrade Ruthenberg died at his post.

"Death cheated the warden. Comrade Ruthenberg died at his post before the honorable judges of the Supreme Court put the seal on his latest prison sentence. We will not deny the shock of grief that comes to every one of us at the first news of the death of Comrade Ruthenberg; but just the same we hold our heads up in pride that he who embodied so many of the finest qualities of soldier manhood belonged to us.

"He was an American who did not go the easiest way of corruption but remained true to principle at all costs—and the cost for him was very great indeed.

"Courage, devotion, self-sacrifice, faith in the workers and the future—these were the qualities that made Ruthenberg a towering figure in the movement for which he lived and died.

"Comrade Ruthenberg's life was a full and fruitful one. All the future is on the side of the cause he served. His life and work were invested in the movement which will prevail in the end.

"The example of Comrade Ruthenberg's life is worth a great deal to the labor movement. The party which he helped to found and build will cherish this heritage."

THE REPRESENTATIVE OF THE OPPRESSED.

JACK STACHEL, Organization Secretary, New York District, Workers (Communist) Party.—"In the death of C. E. Ruthenberg, the Workers (Communist) Party has lost its foremost leader. In the labor movement he was the symbol of the revolutionizing process that is taking place among the American workers even in the face of the most powerful imperialist state, constantly reaching out to corrupt the workers and divide them. He more than anyone else was the representative of all the oppressed. He was not only a fearless and tireless fighter for his class but understood the necessity of utilizing every force that would make his class more powerful and lead it to victory. This explains his tireless work among the Negro workers, the poor farmers, the working class women, and his interest in the youth.

"To those of us who have come to the movement later, after he at the head of many others, had broken the ground and laid the foundation, his work will remain an everlasting inspiration to continue in his footsteps.

"We must gather in thousands of new members in the Ruthenberg Enrollment and together exert ourselves to make good our great loss."

"MIGHTY LOSS," SAYS CLINE.

CHARLES CLINE.—"My personal observation found him always to be a man thoroughly contented to live as he chose and although I personally disagreed with him from time to time, nevertheless I must say that he was heart and soul in any of his undertakings, be they political or otherwise.

"My last conversation with him at the International Labor Defense conference at Chicago hardly gave me any idea he would be called so soon to depart from us.

"My sympathy goes out to his relatives and friends on their mighty loss."

"SINCERE CHAMPION." SAYS SHIELDS.

ART SHIELDS, manager of the Eastern Bureau of the Federated Press.—"It is with deep regret I hear of the death of C. E. Ruthenberg, a sincere champion of the workers.

"ALWAYS FAITHFUL." SAYS GORETZKY.

JOSEPH GORETZKY, Manager Local 35, I. L. G. W. U.—"We consider the death of Ruthenberg a severe loss to the whole American labor movement.

"All his life," said Goretzky, "he was faithful to the interests of the workers and served them even tho his uncompromising attitude brought him to prison. He is a leader who will never be forgotten by the American working class to which he has given so many years of service."

ONLY SIX MONTHS FREE FROM INDICTMENT.

BERTRAM B. WOLFE, Workers' School.—"C. E. Ruthenberg death comes as a severe blow to us. A comrade whose whole life was devoted to the labor movement, whose last years were spent in valiant fighting under the continual shadow of jail sentence, general secretary and leader of the party that represents the vanguard of the American working class, member of the Presidium of the Executive Committee of the Communist International—his loss is a deep and tried one.

"Since 1917 there is one period of only six months during which I have not been in jail or under indictment," he said to me only a few weeks ago and the proud smile with which he said it showed the indominatable spirit of the man.

"His life was full of hardships in years but long and full as reckoned in deeds of service to the working class of our country and of the world. As organizer, as secretary, as speaker and writer, as political leader and thinker, as fighter for every labor cause, he filled so great a place in our party and in the labor movement that he leaves tremendous gaps by his passing and imposes great tasks on those who followed him and survive him. His last published pamphlet was entitled "The Workers (Communist) Party, What it Stands For and Why Workers Should Join." We may regard it as his last will and testament. As a monument that would entitle such a fighter we can build nothing fitter than a more powerful party to lead the American working class."

"STAGGERING BLOW," SAYS OLGIN.

MOISSAYE J. OLGIN, Editor of "The Hammer."—Ruthenberg's death is a staggering blow to the Communists of America. The class struggle of the American proletariat has lost one of its most powerful leaders.

One cannot reconcile oneself that "C. E." is dead. He was strong, vigorous, in the prime of his life. He looked like a rock. After a whole night's committee meeting he hardly showed signs of fatigue. The impression he gave in party life as in personal contact was that of a man of iron.

Of iron was his logic. Of iron was his will. His life was entirely and absolutely devoted to the party. One could not visualise him outside of the revolutionary struggle of the workers. He was so merged with the movement he could not think of himself. Perhaps, in his absorption with party work, he failed to take care of his own illness.

Ruthenberg is dead. It seems monstrous. It is a devilish irony. Ruthenberg, who loved intensively life, who lived it intensively, appeared to be the central point of the party, one of the most reliable mainstays of Communism in the United States. Ruthenberg will never move, never speak, never work among us, never smile the enigmatic and good humored smile of a child.

Ruthenberg is dead. The pain is great. The party will feel his loss with a smarting soul. But his memory will live and inspire. His utter devotion to the class struggle and revolution will be an example to the revolutionary class for years to come.

SCOTT NEARING SAYS, "HE DID GREAT JOB."

SCOTT NEARING.—"When Ruthenberg died American labor lost one of its gallantest and most militant fighters. He did a great job for the movement but the big task is still ahead. With one less trained comrade we must close up the ranks, recruit some apprentices and go on to the co-operative commonwealth."

UPTON SINCLAIR RESPECTS LOYALTY.

UPTON SINCLAIR.—"The death of Ruthenberg the Workers Party has lost a faithful worker and our capitalist government has lost one of its predestined victims. While not agreeing with all his political ideas I respect his loyalty and devotion and I join in tribute to his memory."

MARTYR OF REVOLUTION.

H. M. Wicks.—"The foremost American revolutionary leader of this century has passed to glory, a martyr to the cause of the proletariat. In every sense of the word Comrade Ruthenberg was an invincible revolutionist. He will forever be remembered by the working class of this country and of the world as the moving spirit in founding the Communist movement in defiance of the mightiest imperialism the world has ever seen.

It was my privilege to work with him and be intimately associated with him for more than a decade. In the dark days of this country's entrance into the world war when the heroes of the Socialist Party were galloping in the slough of sentimental pacifism, perverting the revolutionary movement into pro-German channels or crying in the wake of jingoism, Ruthenberg took the lead in the anti-draft agitation for which he served his first sentence in the prisons of America.

First Communist Secretary

Delegate to every Annual State Convention of the Ohio Socialist Party from 1910 to 1919. Delegate National Convention of the Socialist Party 1912. National Committee Convention 1915 and National Emergency Convention of 1917. Elected secretary and organizer of the Socialist Party in 1918. Editor the Socialist News from 1914-1919. Executive Secretary Communist Party of America 1919-1920. He went to jail and was therefore unable to serve. Upon getting out of jail he became secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party from its inception and remained secretary until the day of his death. He was at all times a member of the Central Executive Committee of the Communist Party and its successor the Workers (Communist) Party. For the last few years of his life he was a member of the presidium of the Executive Committee of the Communist International. Indicted June 1917 charging him with obstruction of the draft through speeches made on the public square in Cleveland.

First Jail Sentence.

He served one year in the Canton Ohio Jail. It was after Debs visited him in the Canton Jail that he (Debs) made the speech that caused his own indictment and imprisonment. He was indicted and convicted under the Criminal Anarchy Law of the State of New York in Nov. 1919, and served 2 years in Sing Sing Prison on an indeterminate sentence of from 5 to 10 years which was terminated by pardon issued by Governor Smith, who based his decree upon the minority opinion of the Justice of the United States Supreme Court to the effect that the conviction was unconstitutional.

Died in Shadow of Jail.

In 1922 arrested for attending the Michigan Convention of the Communist Party and convicted and sentenced to an indeterminate sentence of from 5 to 10 years. At the time of his death he was out on appeal against that sentence which had already been upheld by the State Supreme Court of Michigan and was in the hands of the United State Supreme Court.

In 1917 he was the leader of the Ohio delegation to the St. Louis Emergency Convention of the Socialist Party and its letter was the one which put across the anti-war St. Louis resolution thereby committing the Socialist Party to an anti-war stand which was subsequently sabotaged by some of its officials. From early in his career as a member of the Socialist Party he became a leading figure in its left wing, or more militant section, and when that left wing became the Communist Party he assumed the position of leadership which he maintained until his death. He was an honorary member of the I. L. G. W. U. by vote of the Cleveland locals which he helped to build. He was a member of the National Executive Committee of the International Labor Defense.

(3) Writings: As editor of the Cleveland Socialist, the Socialist News and as contributor to the Revolutionary Age, Communist World, the Liberator, the Workers Monthly, The DAILY WORKER and numerous labor journals. He is the author of a great number of articles of all kinds, many of which were of a fundamental character in that they helped to determine the line of development of the Workers (Communist) Party and to develop its program. The American Labor Movement. He is also the author of various pamphlets among which may be enumerated "Are We Growing Towards Socialism" (1917)." "After the War What?" (1918). The Farmer Labor United Front (1924). From the Third to the Fourth Convention of the Workers (Communist) Party (1925) also The Workers (Communist) Party, What It Stands For, Why Workers Should Join (1926).

AMERICA NEEDS RUTHENBERGS

Fred Kirchwey, managing editor of The Nation.—"It is with the deepest regret that I learn of the death of C. E. Ruthenberg. In his death the American working class loses one of its most fearless leaders.

"America needs more men like Ruthenberg. It needs courageous critics."

struggle is most fierce and when we need every working class leader to fight for the workers' interests we learn of the death of one of our foremost leaders, Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg.

"Comrade Ruthenberg fought fearlessly for the interests of the workers during the 20 years in the radical and labor movement. He fought when it meant much to fight; namely, during the world war period and because of this was thrown in jail.

"He fought when American imperialism was frantic, during the revolutionary upsurge of the European workers and was again thrown into jail. Comrade Ruthenberg fought up till the time of his death against capitalism and all that it stands for.

"As he fought so shall we continue to fight for ever increasing numbers until the task that he set as his objective shall be achieved; namely, the overthrowing of capitalism and the establishment of Communism."

FOUNDER OF THE PARTY.

John J. Ballam, organizer of the textile industry.—"In the death of our Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg, the American working class suffers the loss of one of its most fearless and revolutionary sections of the working class—the Workers (Communist) Party.

"His whole life was an example of heroic devotion to the working class. His unflinching loyalty to the cause of the workers caused him to be the victim of capitalist persecution.

"On the day of his death the United States Supreme Court had before it Comrade Ruthenberg's appeal in the famous Bridgeman case; in which Comrade Ruthenberg stood in danger of serving from five to ten years in a capitalist bastille in Michigan.

"His unflinching loyalty to the cause of the workers caused him to be the victim of capitalist persecution.

"On the day of his death the United States Supreme Court had before it Comrade Ruthenberg's appeal in the famous Bridgeman case; in which Comrade Ruthenberg stood in danger of serving from five to ten years in a capitalist bastille in Michigan.

"While the Workers Party suffers a tremendous loss, every party member and every class-conscious worker will be inspired by the life-long service of Comrade Ruthenberg.

"We are saddened through our loss, but we pause only to take up with greater determination the revolutionary tasks to which Comrade Ruthenberg devoted his life."

SOURCE OF INSPIRATION.

Young Workers League, District 2.—The Young Workers League, District 2, feels keenly the passing away of Comrade Ruthenberg and mourns the sudden demise of our great leader and comrade. Comrade Ruthenberg will always remain a source of inspiration to the young workers in this country, and his life and work will always be a guide and teacher to the young workers in America.

"Comrade Ruthenberg's valiant struggle against the whole system of exploitation of the working class, his fight to abolish the capitalist system, his sincere and devoted fight for the emancipation of the working class, will act as a clarion call for the young workers to gather strength and intensify their activities. Especially will the young workers of this country remember his struggle against militarism and war during the last world war."—

Ruthenberg Death Is Shock to Pittsburg's Socialists, Unionists

(Special to The Daily Worker.)

PITTTSBURG, Pa., March 2.—Dr. J. Van Essen, chairman of the national executive committee of the socialist party on learning of the death of C. E. Ruthenberg, issued the following statement: "I sincerely regret learning of comrade Ruthenberg's death. The working class has lost another idealist whose place cannot easily be filled."

Anton Hervat, business agent of the Journeymen Tailors Union, local 131, stated: "I was shocked to learn of the sudden death of C. E. Ruthenberg who was well known to the workers of this city and especially to the workers of the needle trades, due to the part he played in the struggles of the needle workers in Cleveland, Ohio."

Sam Shore, business agent, Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, Local 85, issued the following statement: "In behalf of the Lithuanian workers of this vicinity I want to express deep regret at the death of the champion of the workers C. E. Ruthenberg."

tary of the Workers (Communist) Party, who died yesterday in Chicago while undergoing an operation at the hospital, had been active in the revolutionary movement since 1909.

Ruthenberg's Early History.

Born in Cleveland on the 9th day of July 1882, of a somewhat conservative parentage, young Ruthenberg entered into a world that was full of contradiction and conflict. He later gave him ad eventful career as a leader of the working class movement. His father was a Hungarian-born immigrant who always had faith in the "American way" of life. Ruthenberg's mother, however, was always skeptical of the "American way" of life. She was a devout Catholic and could only afford to give his son the primary school education. His early instruction was also clouded with the religious teachings of the Roman Catholic Church, a denomination of his parents' faith. Later he studied the business college of Cleveland and between working in a factory and attending night school Ruthenberg gathered his first knowledge of what he had to make such extensive use later on. He entered the field of business, first as a clerk, but in a few short years held the position of manager of the sales department.

Activity in Socialist Party.

His intellectual capacity prompted him now to enter the field of journalism, and in a short time he became a regular correspondent on newspapers. It is at this time that Ruthenberg came in contact with the socialist movement to which he soon devoted all of his time. In 1909 he became city organizer and secretary of the socialist party in Cleveland, which position he held until 1919, when he, with the other members of the left wing, organized the Communist Party of America, of which he became the executive secretary. Prior to the split from the socialist party he had been on the national committee of the socialist party and had been editor of the "Cleveland Socialist" and later of the "Socialist News."

Is Sentenced Under Conscription Law.

In 1917 he was indicted and convicted under the national conscription law. Prior to going to jail he ran as candidate for mayor in Cleveland on the socialist ticket and polled 27,000 votes.

In 1919 he was indicted with others under the criminal anarchy law of the state of New York, as the result of the investigation of the Lusk committee and served two years and a half in Sing Sing prison.

Becomes Secretary of Workers Party.

Soon after his release he became executive secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party of America, which position he held until his death.

Ruthenberg was also convicted under the Michigan criminal syndicalist law, but appealed the case from the lower to the higher courts until the case finally reached the U. S. Supreme Court, which was to have decided upon the validity of the state criminal syndicalist law.

Dies With Sentence Pending.

This decision has not been made. Yet Ruthenberg was active in his responsible position up to the last day.

WORKERS PARTY OF NEW YORK CALLS ALL TO CONTINUE WORK

The Executive Committee of District 2, New York, Workers (Communist) Party, states:—"In the death of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg, the American working class loses one of its most militant and fearless leaders. The Workers (Communist) Party has suffered the loss of its foremost leader—one of its ablest organizers and administrators who led the struggle in the formation of the left wing and Communist Party.

Twenty Years Service.

"In his twenty years of service to the Socialist and Communist movement, Comrade Ruthenberg symbolised steadfast and uncompromising devotion to the interests of the exploited masses. He was an unflinching fighter against imperialism and imperialist wars. In prison for his courageous struggle against America's participation in the imperialist war of 1914-1918, Comrade Ruthenberg carried on this struggle for internationalism in the Socialist Party and led the formation of the left wing and Communist Party, when the Socialist Party ceased to be true to the cause of the working class.

Most Persecuted.

"Ruthenberg was hated and feared by the capitalist class. For that reason he was one of the most persecuted revolutionaries in the United States. From 1917 to the day of his death he was continually in the shadow of the capitalist bastilles. The capitalist class of America persecuted Comrade Ruthenberg because he stood for militant and strong trade unions, for the unity of the labor movement, for the establishment of a Labor Party, for the overthrow of the capitalist system and for the formation of a government of the workers and farmers. The capitalists hated him because of his courage, his revolutionary ideas and his practical work in the labor movement. He inspired the working class to struggle for the end of the exploiting system of capitalism.

Loyalty and Integrity.

"The name of Comrade Ruthenberg signifies loyalty and devotion to the Party and the Communist International. It symbolizes Bolshevist integrity, faith in the growth of our movement and undying conviction in the ultimate realization of our aims. The name of Comrade Ruthenberg is a challenge to the capitalist system. He is no longer with us. We must make up for his loss by enrolling fresh forces into the Party, and by more systematic and tireless work to spread the ideas of Communism among the American masses.

"The District Executive Committee of District 2 calls upon the membership to close its ranks for work in the spirit of devotion which Comrade Ruthenberg bequeathed to us.

"On with the struggle!

"Long live the Communist Party!

"Long live the Communist International!"

(Signed) District Executive Committee, Workers (Communist) Party, District 2.

William W. Weinstone, general secretary.

"SEVEREST LOSS", SAYS NATIONAL EXECUTIVE OF YOUNG WORKERS

CHICAGO, Ill., March 2.—The Young Workers League has issued the following statement: "C. E. Ruthenberg, leader of our party, and of the revolutionary American working class died this morning. This is the severest loss the working class of this country has suffered since the death of Lenin. Comrade Ruthenberg symbolized in his person the fusion of the militancy of American workers with the revolutionary heritage of Marx and Lenin. He was the link that united all that was best in the working class and socialist movement in this country before the war, with the revolutionary ideals of Communism to which large masses of the American workers have been won ovee since the glorious proletarian revolution in Russia. The death of our leader places additional burdens upon us, the living, least so here also all through his life will be taken up by us and brought forward to working class victory.

"Close the ranks of party and league for struggle against capitalism! Long live Communism!"

(Signed) National Executive Committee, Young Workers League.

Say Marines In Nicaragua Are Killed

Government Concealed Loss For Political Reasons

Following upon statements by Juan Sacasa, constitutional president of Nicaragua, who is being kept out of office by American marines in spite of the fact that almost the whole country has rallied to his support, that the action of the U. S. state department in "smothering" his country with naval landing parties would endanger the lives of Nicaraguans and marines both, comes a story of an armed clash in which marines were killed.

Hide Defeat

It is said all facts were concealed by the state and navy department. The censorship is supposed to be due to the fact that the marines came off second best, as announcement of a great victory for the "devil dogs" would have stimulated recruiting. The story appears on the authority of the New York Mirror and Hearst's news service, which declare that it is authentic. It is as follows:

American marines have been killed and wounded in Nicaragua.

The state and navy departments have concealed this fact. Rigid censorship has prevented any leak, prior to this exclusive story in the Daily Mirror. Only 48 hours ago, the state and navy departments officially notified United States Senator Borah that there was no truth to reports of casualties in the Nicaraguan campaign.

Said No One Hurt.

Today, an announcement came from Washington, stating that a troop train had been fired on. It said no one had been injured.

Two or three marines have been killed, and a half-a-dozen wounded, according to information given to the Daily Mirror.

There are now 1,500 American sailors and marines in Nicaragua. Within a week, there will be more than 3,000. Twelve battleships and ten airplanes will make up the balance of the American forces in the little Central American Republic.

Senator Royal S. Copeland was notified by the Daily Mirror that this newspaper intended revealing the truth about the Nicaraguan situation.

Senator Astounded.

"I am astounded by the statement that there have been casualties among our boys," said the senator. He added that he would confer immediately with Senator Borah, chairman of the senate foreign relations committee, and demand a most sweeping investigation.

This will mean that Major General Lejeune, head of the marine corps, and other officers of that organization, will be subpoenaed to tell what they know.

Congress is slated to adjourn in a few days. Senator Copeland believes that state and navy departments have concealed the reports of casualties in order to head off an investigation.

Concealed For Months.

The Americans were killed and wounded in skirmishes with the liberal troops about a month ago. Machine guns were used by the Nicaraguans in defending themselves.

Immediately after the casualties, the most rigid censorship was enforced. It is impossible for war correspondents to get to the scenes of fighting, or to send any dispatches from Nicaragua that are not censored.

The censorship in Nicaragua is much more rigid than anything ever attempted by the American army during the world war. This, in spite of the fact that the United States is merely supposed to be protecting American and foreign lives and property.

Judge Who Censored Newspaper Now Under Corruption Charges

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. March 2.—Impeachment of Circuit Judge Clarence W. Dearth of Muncie, Indiana on charges of "corruption and high crime" will be recommended in a resolution decided upon today by a committee of the state legislature.

Judge Dearth came under fire as the result of his recent suppression of an issue of the Muncie Post - Democrat, published by George Dale, who is now under arrest at Celina, Ohio, on a charge of criminal libel. The judge was also charged with the irregular appointment of a jury commissioner.

Legislators Think Drastic Laws Will Retard Crime Wave

While the present system of unemployment, and low wages for those that are working is maintained and is the real source of modern crime wave, the legislators at Albany think they can stop crime by increasing the laws on the statute books. Thus there was introduced today at the state assembly another batch of bills, thirty-eight in all, whom its sponsors, Senator Bennes and Assemblyman Esmond hope to become laws and to stop crimes.

One of the bills provides drastic regulations of the use and sale of fire-arms.

The crime commission of which Senator Caleb H. Baumes is chairman, has also made its report and recommended the erection of a new state prison, establishment of a state-wide system of finger printing, remove presumption of innocence protecting the defendants, speed-up apprehension of crooks and eliminate technicalities from criminal procedure, establishment of district courts instead of the present function of justices of the peace.

Aimee McPherson Will Use Seventy Foot Sign To Advertise Herself

Sister Aimee McPherson, who broadcasts the word of the Lord in addition to her other activities, will use Broadway advertising technique in peddling religion to the masses. She plans to erect an electric sign seventy feet long over the Angelus Temple in Los Angeles, which is the sanctuary of the Lord's representative in the United States.

Not to be outdone by Jesus Christ, who was one of the world's foremost salesmen, according to Bruce Barton, Sister Aimee intends to use all of the twentieth century advertising devices. She is now negotiating with representatives of Madison Square Garden for a two weeks' bout with the devil sometime this summer.

Mayor Apologizes for Cop Punching Fascist

TAMPA, Fla., March 2.—Mayor Perry Wall in a letter to Secretary of State Kellogg today extended the city's apology for the arrest of Count Marchi Di Cellere, attache of the Italian embassy at Washington, during the South Florida fair early in February.

During the course of the arrest, Mussolini's friend grew excited and resisted. The policeman, not recognizing him and accustomed to beating up the indigent, poked the black-shirt a few times in the face. The affair caused the Italian government to protest.

New High School.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., March 2.—The White Plains board of education today voted to construct a new high school to cost in the neighborhood of one million dollars, with an athletic field adjacent, to be constructed at a cost of $200,000.

SIXTY ARRESTED IN POLAND AS WAVE OF WHITE TERROR SPREADS

CRACOW, March 2.—Sixty workers have been arrested here, the police claiming that they are part of a "Communist plot" to overthrow the Pilsudski government. This marks the latest step of a wave of white terrorism which started in Hungary day before yesterday, and spread thru Roumania as well as northward to Poland. In every case the police make similar charges; that "Russian Communists" are planing a March revolution.

The legation of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics at Vienna has officially declared these charges to be absurb. General opinion among non-government circles in central Europe is that the English intrigues which brought about the Lithuanian-Polish alliance against the U. S. S. R. have something to do with the present attacks on Communists, and the arrest of workers on charge of "plotting revolution".

'Tis Only the Spirit of Youth Makes Student Hit Cops: Says Lawyer

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., March 2.—"Chicken-hearted and white-livered" police were contrasted to the flaming "spirit of youth, the finest thing in the world," by Judge Frederick H. Chase, attorney for 39 defendants in the so-called Harvard Square riot cases in the closing arguments in Third District Court today.

Terming Patrolman James A. Pryor "the coward who ran," Judge Chase asserted that when this hat was knocked off "the majesty of the law was offended and he lost his hat and his head."

"The spirit of youth," declared the lawyer, "is the finest thing in the world and will not be crushed by the wielding of clubs in the hands of police officers."

British Miners Hoot Premier at Death Mine

Coal Diggers Enraged At Sight of Tory Leader

Cwm, Wales, March 2.—Premier Stanley Baldwin and wife, visiting the scene of disaster here today to watch the raising of bodies of fifty-two men killed in a gas explosion in a coal mine, were booed and practically chased from the vicinity by angry relatives of the entombed workers.

The miners' families fiercely resented the morbid curiosity of the man who had done so much to break the miners' strike, and thus make possible the very tragedy he had come with indecent officiousness to survey.

Know Who To Blame.

With jeers and imprecations they made it plain to him that they knew that the longer hours and speeding-up of the miners which resulted from the failure of the strike so bitterly fought by Baldwin, as well as the lack of inspection which the union is no longer strong enough to enforce, had slain their men in gas filled chambers below.

Baldwin had scarcely been recognized when a flurry of indignant comment in Welsh swept thru the crowd gathered about the pit head.

Then a voice in English, "What about your victims lying down in the black vein"? Another shouted, "Why don't you go down in the mine yourself?" Then there were hisses and curses.

Saw Boss First.

Baldwin and his wife had just left the mine company office, and were surveying the series of bodies being brought to the surface, black, mangled, and hardly recognizable.

When the demonstration started the prime minister turned pale and hastily entered his car but continued to keep his pipe in his mouth, and puff clouds of smoke at the jesticulating crowd. Mrs. Baldwin was frightened and shrank back into a corner of the car.

More Bodies Raised.

Twenty-four bodies have been brought up from the Cwn mine, it was announced today.

Five more miners were rescued alive. Twenty-six men are still entombed but little hope is entertained that rescue crews will find them alive.

All night long the rescue parties had labored feverishly to drive their way through the rock blocking them from the entombed men, although experts said there was no hope that any were alive.

Sacrifice Pet Birds.

Throughout the long hours of darkness women hovered about the pithead awaiting news of their missing men. For the most part they were silent, giving evidence of phenomenal courage.

Canaries were used to test the quantity of gas in the mine. These were pets, brought by the women from their bereaved homes.

Future French Loans Seen As They Decide To Pay Ten Million

WASHINGTON, March 2.—It was announced here by the treasury department that the French government would pay $10,000,000 this year on its debt to the United States. This payment will be in addition to the $20,000,000 which now is being paid annually on the surplus war materials indebtedness taken over in Europe following the end of the war.

While the $10,000,000 installment is promised only for this year it was stated by the president that it was expected that it would be continued until the debt funding agreement originally entered into had been disposed of by the French parliament and the American congress.

In some quarters it is believed that the decision on the part of France to pay $10,000,000 is a gesture for future loans, some of which might be made in the near future.

Dillon Read Dodging Charge They Swindled

Dillon, Read and Co., thru Clarence Dodd, has filed answers in the New York and Detroit courts to the charges brought by a group of stockholders of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co., who claim that the brokers made "excessive profits" ranging about $18,000,000 during the recent reorganization of the tire corporation.

Lost on Way to Church.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., March 2.—Rev. Sauel H. Jobe, 60, widely known Episcopal clergyman and pastor of St. Peter's Church, was strangely missing today.

He was last seen in central square yesterday afternoon en route to a church meeting. His sister, Miss Jane Jobe, and relatives appealed to police and his description was broadcast throughout the state.

Militarist Heads Board Appointed To Give Out Wireless Wave Lengths

WASHINGTON, March 2.—President Coolidge today appointed the five members of the newly created federal radio commission.

The appointees follow:

(1) Rear Admiral William H. G. Bullard, U. S. N., retired, chairman, six year term. He lives in Media, Pa.

(2) Orestes H. Caldwell, New York, five years.

(3) Eugene O. Sykes, Jackson, Miss., four years.

(4) Henry A. Bellows, Minneapolis, three years.

(5) John F. Dillon, San Francisco, two years.

The commission is appointed under the Dill-White radio law, just signed, and has authority to give away forever the best wave lengths to any broadcasters they may favor. The bill was fought in congress on the grounds that it establishes a most vicious monopoly of a growing industry.

men more interested in books than in growing big private shrubbery. Ruthenberg was recognized as the leader of the group and lest his presence in our midst might give us aid and comfort and his experience in similar situations guide us, the jail authorities placed him in a lower tier of cells on another floor. A filthy place.

ONE of the local deputy sheriffs, a rather decent fellow, was much impressed with Ruthenberg's personality and his unfailing courtesy. He could not understand why he threw in his lot with a movement that only gave him a small salary with the probability of spending most of his life in jail, this side of the revolution, if not a worse fate. "Why," he declared, "that man could command a salary of $50,000 a year from a corporation." He could not understand. But money meant nothing to Ruthenberg. He was a rebel to the core and his whole life was wrapped up in the class struggle.

LIFE in that jail was by no means disagreeable, but at first the food was poor and scanty. In fact it was so poor that the scantier the better. But on the day Ruthenberg was hailed out he sent us to a hot meal from a nearby restaurant and we amused ourselves by issuing a little DAILY WORKER scribbled on several pages of manilla paper. "C. E." brought this precious consignment to New York and it was published in the Weekly Worker. From the moment of his release he worked day and night to raise bail money for the rest of us.

HIS trial in Berrien County for violation of the Michigan syndicalist law is a glorious page in the history of the working class movement. He upheld the banner of Communism on the witness stand. The prosecution dragged in every issue that would serve to pre ident an ignorant rustic jury against him. His attitude during the war. His views on religion. He was convicted. His case was appealed. The Michigan supreme court decided against him. He spent a few weeks in prison and was again released when the case was appealed to the supreme court of the United States. A decision was hourly expected when the hand of death was laid on him.

C. E. RUTHENBERG was a brave man. Whether in the broader struggles with the capitalist foe or in fights over questions of policy inside the Communist ranks, Comrade Ruthenberg always met his opponents face to face. He enjoyed the confidence and esteem of every member of the party and the bitterest enemies of the party in the ranks of the labor movement never impugned his motives or doubted his integrity. The party suffers a severe blow in his death. The labor movement as a whole suffers a loss. Ruthenberg died with his boots on. He died in an hospital ward. The party that he helped to fashion into a revolutionary instrument will carry on until the system he fought against during the best years of his life will be abolished and the Republic of Labor erected on its ruins.

SPLITS IN THE OLD PARTIES

New Local Deadlock Postpones Illinois Miners Convention

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (FP)—The deadlock in Illinois between the operators and the United Mine Workers of America over a national bituminous agreement is responsible for the postponement of the Illinois Mine Workers' convention, originally announced for March 1st at Peoria.

"Local unions will be notified in due time as to the date set for the convening of the postponed convention", says Walter Nesbit, secretary of Dist. 12.

The general opinion is that there will be either a strike or shutdown of mines April 1st when the present national agreement expires, as a reserve of over 80,000 tons of coal is already above ground. In addition the nonunion fields, which cover 65% of the productive capacity, will keep operating. The outlying union fields may also continue at work even if the central competitive field (Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, and western Pennsylvania) goes on strike.

Military Tyranny Over Portugal Pleases King

LISBON, March 2.—Royalist envoys from ex-King Manuel have assured General Carmona that the royalists will not oppose the present military government but will co-operate with it in a "program of national re-construction."

The Carmona government continues with fine, exile and sentences of imprisonment to make life miserable for the recent liberal revolutionists, and their families. Three boatloads of exiles have already been dispatched to the Portuguese colonies.

State Government To Cost $225 Million

ALBANY, N. Y.—The total cost of the state government for the next fiscal year may reach $225,000,000 as compared with $187,000,000 last year, according to estimates made today by the state's financial experts.

Governor Smith has just signed the annual appropriation of $147,000,000. Last year the same bill totalling, $2,245,000 are provided in five other measures approved by the governor. These bills include $50,000 to secure a site for a new prison in the western part of the state; and $8,000 for new buildings at Elmira reformatory.

The Revelations of Wall Street Duplicity Continue.

One does not need to hail Senator Borah as a fearless and uncompromising fighter against American imperialism in all its manifestations to realize the tremendous damage he has done to the Wall Street-Coolidge-Kellogg campaign in Mexico and Nicaragua.

His communication with the President of Mexico direct and the valuable information which the American masses have acquired relative to real state of affairs has been of enormous value. It has shown up Coolidge and Kellogg as common liars and proved that the big oil interests, Standard Oil first and the Sinclair and Doheny groups second are the moving forces behind the drive on Mexico.

The president himself and the secretary of state have been shown to be nothing more or less than government agents of the oil groups and, while this comes as no surprise to Communists who understand that capitalist government is "the executive committee of the capitalist class," it will open the eyes of many workers hitherto fooled by the theory that government represents all the people.

The denunciation which has been heaped upon the Borah proposal for an investigation of the Nicaraguan and Mexican situations during the congressional recess lends color to his charge that the administration is planning more warlike moves during the spring and summer when it would be free from attack from legislative sources.

No one . . . . . regard this possibility. The whole history of American intervention in Mexico and Latin America, recent history particularly, has been one of duplicity and open disregard of everything except the interests of the American plunderbund and its lackeys. The determined attitude of the Mexican government has brought most of the smaller oil companies into line. There remain the big American concerns whose battle the state department is fighting.

With a battle-fleet in Nicaraguan waters and a large force of marines available for instant duty, the necessary "overt act" by Mexico can easily occur as similar acts incited by Wall Street or the state department directly have occurred in the past. Invasion would follow immediately and we would be at war with Mexico before the American masses knew what was happening.

President Coolidge can assume if he likes, that the Borah resolution is an insult and questions his integrity, and millions of workers and farmers will agree with him while at the same time favoring the proposal.

The Coolidge regime is duplicating in the field of foreign affairs the same slimy policy and tactics which the Harding regime practiced in domestic affairs. Even the personnel of those involved has not changed entirely. Doheny, whose oil leases obtained under Harding have just been annulled by a supreme court decision and Sinclair, up to his ears in the Teapot Dome scandal, are part of the clique whose Mexican investments now are being protected at all costs by the state department.

American workers and farmers are getting a lesson in the theory and practice of capitalist government which they can use to good advantage.

The split which the Nicaraguan and Mexican controversies have produced in the republican party could be utilized much more effectively if the workers and farmers had spokesmen of their own in the house and senate and did not have to depend on representatives of the middle class and lower section of the capitalist class like Borah. It becomes clearer day by day that the menace of war is coming closer to the American masses. War is germinated by the lust of the imperialist for profit and conquest just as a poisonous plant springs from a harmless looking seed.

When war comes the masses will find that those capitalist party statesmen like Borah, who are willing to sound a warning from time to time and thereby add to their own prestige, will line up solidly with the interests they now oppose.

Nothing could be more dangerous to the masses than a belief in the ability and desire of members of the ruling class to rally all possible forces against war once it has begun.

As the conflict between the people of Latin America and American imperialism becomes sharper, as the conflicts over policy and methods develops within the parties of capitalism, it becomes clearer that the workers and farmers need a party of their own which will not only protest imperialist plots but will mobilize the masses against them.

PASSAIC TEXTILE STRIKE FILM WILL BE SHOWN IN NEW YORK, AT WALDORF THEATRE, SUNDAY

The seven reel motion picture of the great Passaic textile strike of 1926-6 will be shown in this city on Sunday, March 6.

The presentation, which will be at the Waldorf Theatre, 50th Street, near Sixth Avenue, and will be continuous from 2 o'clock to 7:30, will be under the auspices of Passaic Local 1003, United Textile Workers of America, with the co-operation of the New York Central Trades and Labor Council.

Will Sing Strike Songs.

In addition to the strike picture, there will be a short program by some of the more advanced children of the Passaic strikers.

The entire proceeds of the showing will go to strike relief in Passaic, where the situation is still critical, on account of the slowness with which the workers from the settled mills are being returned to work. Several thousand textile workers and their families are still dependent upon relief, according to a statement issued by Alfred Wagenknecht, relief chairman, some days ago.

Build the Union Phase.

The attention of the textile workers is just now concentrated on the necessity of building strong unions within the settled mills. "Build the union inside the mills" is the ever recurring slogan of the present period of the long struggle.

There are nearly a thousand workers still on strike from the United Piece Dye Works in Lodi, on account of the persistent refusal of that mill to make any concessions to their striking workers.

South African Flag Cuts Out Double Cross

CAPETOWN, South Africa, March 2.—General Hertzog announced today to parliament that the South African flag bill will be introduced not later than the last week in March. None of the three designs recommended by the flag commission included the British union jack.

The householder shifted his dial. The returns from California were beginning to come in. "Radio VXZ the Angel City Evening Courier, Angel City, California." The announcer had a soft, caressing voice, worth a thousand dollars a month to him; it had a little chuckle which caused the children to adore him—he went by the name of "Uncle Peter," and told them bed-time stories. Now he was applying his humor to the returns. "Rosario, California. Hello! The home town of Bob Buckman, secretary to the Chamber of Commerce! Let's see what Bob's been doing! Rosario, 37 precincts out of 62 give LaFollette 117, Davis 86, Coolidge, 545. Well, well! If Bob Buckman is listening on on VXZ, congratulations from Uncle Peter—you're a great little booster Bob!"

And then, startling the watchers by the bedside—"Paradise, California. Now what do you think of that, Bunny? Ross Junior oil field, owned by Bunny Ross, our parlor Bolshevik! Bunny's the boy that bails out the political prisoners, as he calls them; he publishes a little paper to dye our college boys and girls pink. Let's see what Little Bunnytown has to say to him. Paradise, California, 14 precincts out of 29 give LaFollette 217, Davis 98, Coolidge 693. Well, well, Bunny—you've got some more boring from within to do!"

The householder, shifted again. "Radio QXJ, the Angel City Evening Courier, banjo solo by Bella Illue, the Witch of Wilshire." Plunkety-plunkety plunkety-plunkety —plunk-plunk-plunk!

Paul's lips were beginning to move. There was a trace of sound, and Ruth bent close to him. "He's coming back to life! Oh, call the doctor!" The hospital doctor came, and looked, and felt Paul's pulse; but he shook his head. It was merely a question of what areas of the brain were affected; the speech areas might be uninjured The sounds were incoherent, and the doctor said Paul didn't know what he was saying. He might stay that way for days, even for a week or two.

But Ruth continued to listen, and try to catch a word. Paul might be there, somehow, trying to speak to her, to convey some secret. She whispered, in an agony of longing, "Paul, Paul, are you trying me to talk to me?" The sounds grew louder, and Rachel cried, "It's a foreign language." Bunny said, "It must be Russian"—the only foreign language Paul knew. It was strange, like a parrot talking or a wax doll; the sounds seemed to come from deep in his throat. "Da zdravstvooyet Revolutsiya!" over and over; and Rachel said, "That must mean revolution." And then, "Vsya vlast Sovietam!"—That must have something to do with the Soviets.

For an hour that went on; until suddenly Ruth exclaimed, "Bunny we ought to find out what he's saying! Oh, surely some one else—just think, if he's asking for help!"

Rachel tried to argue with her; it was just a delirium. But Ruth became more excited—she didn't want Rachel to interfere. Rachel had saved her man, and what did she know about suffering? "I want to know what Paul's saying! Can't we find somebody that knows Russian?" So Bunny got Gregor Nikolaieff on the phone, and ask him to jump on the car and come down here.

When Bunny returned to the room, Paul was talking louder than ever, but still moving only his lips. The Angel City were shouting, "Honey-baby, honey-baby, kiss me in the neck!" And Paul was saying again and again, "Vie troodyashchiesya da ne yest'"

"Oh, Bunny," pleaded Ruth, "We ought to write down what he says! He might stop—and never speak again!" Bunny undertook—Ruth had been brought up to believe in revelations, in words of awful import spoken on special occasions, in strange tongues or other unusual ways. The doctors might call it delirium, but how could they be sure? Things that were hidden from the wise were revealed to babes and sucklings. So Bunny got out his notebook and fountain-pen, and wrote down what Paul's words sounded like, as near as he could guess. "Hlieba, mira, svobody!" And when Gregor came in, an hour or so later, he was able to say this meant, "Bread, peace, freedom," the slogan of the Bolshavika when they took possession of Russia: and "Dayesh posit-siyu!"—that was a war-cry of the red army, commanding the enemy to give up the position. The other things Paul had been saying were phrases of the revolution, that she had heard first in Siberia, and then in Moscow. No, Paul was not trying to talk to his sister; he was telling the young workers of America what the young workers of Russia were doing!

The Manager's Corner

HOW THE BRONX DOES IT.

Comrade William Heyden is one of our German comrades in the Bronx. He has tackled the job of building up the circulation of The DAILY WORKER with real German thoroughness, which makes an excellent model for comrades elsewhere.

Comrade Heyden has made for himself a map of his section of the city. On this map he has indicated very carefully the location of each newsstand in the territory under his charge. He has then divided this territory among three or four comrades who inspect it daily, on the way to or from work. In this way he manages to have a clear picture before him of the territory over which he is in charge. Comrades who cannot make a map as skillfully as Comrade Heyden did, might utilize a card file, using one card for each newsstand, indicating the name of the dealer, the exact location of the stand, and the comrade responsible for the inspection of the stand. The comrades in charge of inspection report to Comrade Heyden once a week as to how The DAILY WORKER is being handled.

Comrade Heyden also tells how he induced newsdealers to handle The DAILY WORKER. He approached a number of newsdealers and asked them to handle the paper with the assurance that he would buy from them any copies which were not sold. At the end of the week he made a tour of the stands and he found that in a number of cases the paper had been sold out and in some cases the dealer wanted more copies. There were few cases in which he had to pay for leftovers. In some sections the comrades are raising a small promotion fund for the purpose of stimulating the sale of The DAILY WORKER, printing advertising material on local issues, subsidizing newsdealers if necessary and generally covering any expenses which may come in connection with the promotion work.

The point about Comrade Heyden's work is that he is studying his problem. Each city and each section will require different methods of promotion, but the path to our goal of 25,000 readers will be easy, if the comrades study the difficulties carefully and hammer out a proper solution.

WOLFE ANSWERS COWARDLY ATTACK BY JOSE KELLY WITH MEXICO FACTS

A complete refutation of slurring charges upon him by Jose Kelly before the Worcester, Mass., Central Labor Union is contained in a letter written by Bertram Wolfe, director of the Workers' School to the secretary of the union. Wolfe answers each charge and throws a flood of information on conditions in Mexico, where he spent two years. Here is his letter:

Thomas F. Conroy, Sec'y.,
Worcester Central Labor Union,
62 Madison Street,
Worcester, Mass.

Dear Sir and Brother:

My attention has been called to the fact that at a recent meeting of the Worcester Central Labor Union, Jose Kelley made certain statements concerning my activities in the Mexican labor movement. Mr. Kelley has several times made similar statements, and I therefore find it necessary to request that you read this statement to the Worcester Central Labor Union dealing with the facts on the matter.

Unfounded Charges.

I understand that Mr. Kelley, in his lectures, declares that there are no native Communists in Mexico; that all Communists there are American "slackers" who fled from the states to avoid the draft. He said further that the Communists in Mexico, and that I in particular, supported De la Huerta in his attempt at a reactionary revolt against the Obregon administration. Finally, he stated that the Mexican Communists support every reactionary movement in Mexico.

As to the first of these declarations—at the time I was in Mexico, there were only three members of foreign birth in the Mexican Communist Party. Communism has its roots deep in the Mexican masses. The Communist movement is particularly strong among the workers in the oil workers and railroad unions. As to the nationalities concerning "slackers," I wish to state that I went to Mexico in the year 1923 and not in 1917, as Mr. Kelley implies.

As to the slanderous report that the Communists support every reactionary movement in Mexico, and more specifically, that they supported De la Huerta rebellion—here are the facts and—Jose Kelley is in a position to know these facts as well as I:

1.—The Communists immediately branded the De la Huerta rebellion as a counter-revolutionary union of the big land owners, the clerical reaction and the British oil interests.

Fought De la Huerta.

2.—The entire Communist Party was mobilized for the defense of the Obregon government (altho it had much to criticize in the Obregon Government) because they realized that the De la Huerta reaction would be much worse.

The Obregon government gratefully accepted the offer and supplied recruiting commissions to men designated by the party, and military equipment.

The only stipulation that the Communist Party made was that the peasant contingents it raised should operate independently of the main army command and under their own Communist officers. The most important and successful of these bands was the troop raised by Ursula Galvan, who was commissioned by the government. He was at that time a member of the executive committee of the Mexican Communist Party and president of the League of Agrarian Communities of the State of Vera Cruz.

With this guerrilla troop, he took to the hills, armed it by raids upon the army of General Sanchez, the De la Huerta leader, and contributed largely to the collapse of the rebellion in its main center by attacking General Sanchez's army from behind at the same moment that General Obregon was attacking from in front.

Defends Record.

As for my own record in the trade union movement, I have the following to say:

1.—I am at present a member of the executive board of Local 5 of the American Federation of Teachers, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

2.—In Mexico I was a member of the Newspapermen's Union of the Federal District, affiliated with the Mexican Federation of Labor (Cron) and was a delegate to the Central Labor Union of Mexico City and a delegate to the Printing Trades Federation (Federation of Graphic Arts of the Federal District). Prior to leaving for Mexico, I was also a member in good standing of the American Federation of Labor and have been ever since I reached sufficient maturity to be eligible for membership.

I trust that you will accord me the fraternal courtesy of having this communication read to the Worcester Central Labor Union.

Fraternally,
BERTRAM D. WOLFE.

Judge Cooper Knew the New York Bootleggers

WASHINGTON, March 2.—Federal Judge Frank Cooper, Northern New York, gave names and addresses of "master bootleggers" in his district to federal dry agents, according to letters submitted to the house judiciary committee today.

With today's session the committee concluded its investigation of Judge Cooper by Rep. La Guardia. Judge Cooper by Rep. LaGuardia (R) of New York.

Is The American Stage Handcuffed?

Francis Edwards Faragoh, author of "Pinwheel," now playing at the Neighborhood Playhouse, former dramatic critic of Pearson's Magazine under Frank Harris, and one of the directors of the New Playwrights Theatre, says it is.

He wants to knock the shackles off the drama, push down its faded parlor walls and set its paralyzed characters into action. He wants American drama to reflect American life in all its intensity, crudeness, variety and jazz tempo.

Faragoh has an idea of what the new drama will look like when it is freed of Broadway formulas and begins to spring from the life of the American people.

His will picture this new drama of the masses in an article written exclusively for THE DAILY WORKER. It will appear NEXT SATURDAY, in The New Magazine.

You can't afford to miss what this pioneer in the theatre has to say!

DRAMA

MALE PRIMA DONNAS

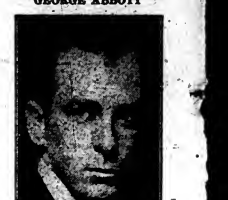
Critic Finds Jewish Theatre Wrecked by Incompetent Actor-Managers

Reviewed by A. B. MAGIL.

Abraham Goldfaden is genarally considered the father of the Yiddish drama and opera. When he first began writing in the latter half of the 19th century, there was practically no Yiddish stage. His plays necessarily had to be simple and provincial, with something of the improvisational quality of the old Italian commedia del' arte. They also emphasized the comic and sentimental elements and were interspersed with numerous songs.

"The Two Kooney Lemels" is the second play of Goldfaden's the Yiddish Art Theatre has produced this season. (The nearest synonym in English for "kooney lemel" is "dub" or "poor fish." The first play, "The Tenth Commandment," was an elaborate production, involving much spurious, glittering scenery and many weeks of preparation. The present play seems to have been put together in odd moments between supper and curtain call. The result is pretty awful.

There is no remarkable vitality in "The Two Kooney Lemels" despite its cobwebby technique. It belongs to the category of that universal comedy of errors which in English goes back to Sheridan, Congreve and Shakespeare. It is a genuine folk play, involving a folk type, the village fool. The humor is fresh and there is something or other worldly about it, the heightened reality of the legend.



Maurice Schwartz has taken this simple, delicate play and applied to it the technique of the burlesque. He achieves a disjointed, vulgar, flat, tedious, pseudo-dramatic concection. It again emphasizes the appalling lack of competent direction on the Yiddish stage. The star system in the Yiddish theatre is even more vicious than in the American because so many of the male prima donnas insist on being producers, directors and in many cases authors or paraphrasers as well. Almost none of them has any conception of the functions of a director. Form, tempo, ensemble struggle through any old way by being hit on the head often enough. Maurice Schwartz is an excellent actor and has been a pioneer in the field of the art theatre in Yiddish. But as a director, he is fumbling, unsubtle and conventional, and the result is frequently disastrous.

On the night I saw "The Two Kooney Lemels" it suffered under the further disadvantage of the most shameful performance on the part of an actor I have seen on any stage. Bertha Gersten, who was cast in an important part, decided, for reasons she knows best, to ignore the play, the other actors and the audience completely, and when she wasn't called upon to say anything, slouched around, fussing with her hair and making valiant efforts to control her laughter. An attitude of such contemptuous indifference could not have helped affecting the work of her colleagues.

The acting of Maurice Schwartz, Bina Abramowitz and Anna Teitelbaum saved the play from becoming an utter fiasco.

Puppets Who Need Jobs.

After an impressive opening in a telegraph station on a rainy Sunday night, "Puppets of Passion," translated from the Italian of Rosso di San Secondo by Ernest Boyd and

GEORGE ABBOTT

Co-author with Philip Dunning of "Broadway," the smashing hit at the Broadhurst Theatre.

Eduardo Cianelli (at the Theatre Masque) dribbles off into interminable twaddle about runaway wives. It is based on the middle class hunchcombe that we are so many puppets jerked by the wires of our passions, that passion is the whole of a man's life, and try as he might, he can't escape it. One feels that if San Secondo gave his puppets caviar and more work, they could shut up and forget it. Evelyn Sabin, a dancer, and Cianelli himself, as a comical waiter, inject a few tolerable moments.—H. A.

BROADWAY BRIEFS.

"Broadway," at the Broadhurst Theatre, will be presented for the 200th time at today's matinee.

Beginning with this Thursday afternoon, "What Ann Brought Home," now at Wallack's Theatre, will inaugurate an extra matinee performance each week. The regular matinees are Wednesday and Saturday.

Owing to the illness of Paul Leyssac, the performance of "La Locandiera," announced for Thursday evening, will be postponed for two weeks. The Civic Repertory Players will present "Cradle Song" instead.

"Iolanthe" the Gilbert and Sullivan operetta at the Plymouth theatre, will be sung at both Thursday matinee and evening performances, instead of only Thursday evenings. All other evening performances, and at the Saturday matinee, "The Pirates of Penzance" will be sung.

The opening of the third bill of the American Grand Guignol Players at the Grove Street Theatre has been postponed from tonight until tomorrow night.

"Daisy Mayme," George Kelly's comedy, will be the attraction at the Bronx Opera House next week.

"Thou Desperate Pilot!" a play by Zoe Akins, is scheduled to open at the Morosco Theatre on Monday night, March 7. Rachel Crothers and Mary Kirkpatrick are the producers. In the cast are David Hawthorne, Helen Ware, Roberta Beatty, Miriam Hopkins, Percy Ames and Ulrich Haupt.

Gertrude Fowler has been engaged for an important role in "The Adventure."

A. H. Woods has acquired a new play entitled "Connelly and Merritt," by John H. Hymer, co-author of "Crime".

Expelled Group Makes Appeal To Labor

Twenty-eight from B.S.&A.U. Ask Support in Struggle

Appealing to all American workers to take a stand against the growing expulsion policy of the American Federation of Labor, the members of the Bookkeepers, Stenographers & Accountants Union 12646, who were expelled from that organization last Monday night, issued a statement yesterday declaring the union's action is illegal and totally unwarranted.

The twenty-eight expelled members brand this as "but one more instance of the increasing practice of wholesale expulsions indulged in by the bureaucratic officialdom in the American Federation of Labor. Having no constructive program for the betterment of the American workers' lot, unwilling or unable to organize the 5,000,000 office workers in New York, the reactionary union officials resort to expulsions as a smoke-screen to cover their indifference to the workers' cause."

State Their Case.

For the following reasons the expulsions are called unconstitutional:

"1.—The grievance and trial committee, upon whose finding we were expelled, submitted no evidence to substantiate the charges brought against us.

"2.—A blanket verdict was brought in against all of us, despite our demand for hearing the report of each case individually on the ground that we were tried individually.

"3.—We were not permitted to take the floor in our own defense at the membership meeting, with the exception of two of us, who were limited to five minutes each.

"4.—Although we remained members of the union until our expulsion, our votes were not counted by the arbitrary ruling of the chairman.

"5.—The membership meeting was 'packed' with non-members, who were brought there to vote for our expulsion.

"6.—Gangsters were brought to the meeting, and posted at the door, and in the hall for purposes of intimidation.

"7.—Seven were expelled without being brought under charges, as provided for by the constitution.

"We ask the organized workers of America to stand with us in our rightful demand for reinstatement into the AFL," the statement concludes.

Capmakers Pledge Aid To Needle Workers In Defense Drive

Denouncing their Joint Council for "helping Sigman to destroy his union with money of our union", more than two hundred progressive capmakers pledged "full support to the cloak and dress makers and furriers' union until they destroy the bureaucracy in their union and establish a union of workers and for workers," at a meeting Wednesday night in Manhattan Lyceum.

A most enthusiastic response greeted Louis Hyman of the cloakmakers' union, Ben Gold of the furriers, and Sam Liguin of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, as they urged the capmakers to join in the common fight against the betrayals of the reactionaries in the labor movement. J. Schogol and Henry Saza of the capmakers union also spoke, exposing the action of the bureaucrats in their union in giving a large donation to aid Sigman in the fight against the cloak and dressmakers.

The meeting also adopted resolutions mourning the death of C. E. Ruthenberg, as has been done in a meeting of the shop chairmen of the furriers, held in the same building.

France Arms To Teeth; Millions For Weapons

PARIS, March 1.—Pursuing its militaristic policies, the reactionary French government plans to spend 7,000,000,000 francs on new cruisers and frontier fortifications. The increased armaments bill will be presented to parliament by the minister of marine during the next fortnight.

France's refusal to participate in any sort of a disarmament conference and her proposed fleet increases indicate that her intentions are anything but peaceful.

FURRIERS PLAN AMALGAMATION FOR DEFENSE

Workers Mourn Death Of C. E. Ruthenberg

Plans for the carrying on of a joint campaign for defense of imprisoned furriers and cloakmakers were furthered at a meeting of shop chairmen of the furriers' union called by the shop chairmens' council on Wednesday evening at Manhattan Lyceum.

The furriers present also adopted resolutions mourning the death of Charles Ruthenberg, "one of the most able and learned members that the American working class has produced".

Endorse Defense Plans.

The meeting endorsed the plans of the defense committee, for a mass meeting to be held in Webster Hall on March 12, to which all workers in greater New York have been called. S. Biro, chairman of the above chairman's council of the furriers, and secretary of the defense committee presided at the meeting, and urged the necessity for immediate action in the above, and the [illegible] workers' groups where collections are being made for the defense of the prisoners and relief of their families. Isadore Brauner, chairman of the cloakmakers' [illegible] council, which has played such an important part in the struggle against Sigmanism, pointed out the need for joint committee to [illegible] defense of the imprisoned workers.

Ben Gold Speaks.

Ben Gold, manager of the Joint Board of the Furriers' Union. He declared that the needle trades unions "must unite to defend their existence and their members against all the allied forces of the bosses and the bureaucrats in the labor [illegible]."

"It was only a matter of chance that the cloakmakers were the first to feel the blow of those who are determined to impose their will on the needle trades workers regardless of the consequences" he declared. "We know that the furriers will be attacked in the same way. It is all one fight, and we must amalgamate our forces for defense of our persons, as well as for the safety of all the workers."

Other speakers at the meeting were Organizer Beck of Philadelphia and B. Rothenberg.

Mourn Ruthenberg's Death.

The resolutions adopted by the furriers in the death of Ruthenberg were as follows:

Whereas [illegible] whereas [illegible] has been secretary of the Workers Party and was one of the most able and learned members that the American working class has produced, and whereas Comrade Ruthenberg has given all of his energy for the working class and every cent to prison for the activities, we the fur workers, assembled in Manhattan Lyceum mourn the great loss and the early death of Comrade Charles Ruthenberg."

These resolution were also adopted by the capmakers, who were meeting in the same building.

Marshal Sun's Army Quitting Sunkiang

His Generals Deserting to the Nationalists

BULLETIN.

SHANGHAI, March 2.—Thousands of Sun Chuan Fang's defeated troops tonight were reported to be deserting to the Cantonese. They have left only a skeleton of what was once a formidable army.

Dissatisfaction with the introduction of Fengtien troops in the Shanghai area is given as the reason.

LONDON, March 2.—Sun Chuan-Fang's entire army is reported withdrawing from Sunkiang, according to a dispatch from Shanghai today, following the reported desertion of General Meng Chao-Yueh, Sun's field commander.

A Central News dispatch said a second line of defense for Shanghai is being organized along the Edinburg road where barricades are being erected.

The military situation still brewed today. A battalion of Shangtung infantry has been detached to Sungkiang, forecasting active participation by the Fengtien troops in the defense of Shanghai.

It is reported from Nanking that General Sun Chuan Fang has tendered his resignation to Marshal Chang Tso Lin, following what is believed to have been the compulsory replacement of General Meng Chao-Yueh, Sun Chuan Fang's field commander at Sungkiang, by General Liu Chang-Ting, one of the Shantung generals.

The imperialists have opened a most vicious campaign of lying against the working class movement in Shanghai. This bears all the earmarks of an intelligent campaign of terror against the workers.

The municipal police claim to have information regarding a plan to establish a Soviet form of government in Shanghai. Coincident with the [illegible]nforcement of this information come reports of "assassinations" of loyal workers and foremen by the radicals. Only a few weeks ago hundreds of workers were publicly beheaded by executioners.

Custom Cutters Scorn Man of Means Who Lacks Seven Suits

Are you a man of "moderate means?" If so and can't possibly get along without seven suits and three overcoats. This is the decision of the New York Custom Cutters' Club, which is handing out high-pressure rubbish from the Hotel Commodore, where it is holding a two-day convention.

You absolutely require if you are a man of "moderate means" evening clothes, a cutaway, a tuxedo, three lounge suits and a recreation sports suit, in addition, of course, to three overcoats, ulster, medium weight and top coat.

Needless like these are handed out with monotonous regularity by manufacturers of clothes, listerine, glasses, eyeglasses in an effort to boost their sales. High pressure technique like this leads the worker to sink as much as he can possibly afford into clothes even if he cannot afford seven suits and three overcoats.

BOHEMIAN CENTRAL LABOR UNION AFFILIATES WITH THE I. L. D.

At its last meeting held February 26th the Bohemian Central Labor Union of New York decided to affiliate with the International Labor Defense. A tax was voted and delegates immediately elected to the City Central Committee of the I. L. D. to save Emanuel Vaftazer, editor of the "Obrana", from deportation. It was further decided to lend all possible support to the coming bazaar in Star Casino, 107th street and Park avenue, on March 10-18.

Following this example, the Bohemian Butchers and Bologna Workers' Union through Joseph Kremlicka, secretary, decided to join in the fight for class war prisoners by officially intimating their affiliation to the I. L. D. and voting to support its coming bazaar.

The Bakery and Confectionery Workers' Union No. 22, was the first Bohemian organization to give the lead in the movement for a strong I. L. D.; they have been affiliated for the past years.

These bodies view the I. L. D. bazaar in the proper light by making it the occasion for a special membership drive. This lead should be followed by the various other labor bodies who never can tell when they will require a defense organization.

The occasion was a meeting of the fancy leather goods workers of the union at the Rand School Tuesday night. There were two esteemed guests at the meeting, Judge Jacob Panken, former socialist candidate for governor, and the "Bundist" socialist, Ehrlich.

Plays To Gallery.

In order to impress the two distinguished visitors that came to visit his "class," "Teacher" Shiplacoff decided to show off his stuff. He worked hard, the "pupils" applauded dutifully, and the visitors benmed in fatherly fashion.

In his first speech Shiplacoff defended the recommendation of the executive committee that the union contribute $5,000 to help Oizer Schachtman, president of the International Fur Workers' Union, and his seven wise men in their crusade against the Furriers' Joint Board.

In his second speech Shiplacoff defended himself against some of the criticism that has been leveled at him by progressives for his fascist tactics.

Of course the occasion would not have been complete unless the name of some famous American of the past was invoked. Shiplacoff melodramatically quoted Abraham Lincoln's famous remark that the union cannot be half slava and half free.

"This is the case in the needle trades today," said Shiplacoff, who called upon the workers to support the drive that has been started by the right wing leaders and the bureaucrats of the A. F. of L. in their efforts to form united needle-trades unions—all slave.

Plumbers Helpers Union to Hold Meet

The American Association of Plumbers' Helpers, with offices at 15 East 3rd street, has arranged a mass meeting for Friday, March 4th, at 8 p. m. in the Church of All Nations Hall, No. 9 Second Ave, near First St. The purpose of this meeting is to rally all eligible members and to have them join the union. The deplorable conditions of the plumbers' helpers should be a strong reason why every one should belong to the union, which is making a fight for more wages, better working conditions, for control over non-union jobs and is endeavoring to become part of the United Association.

All plumbers' helpers are urged to come to this meeting and to bring their fellow workers along. Prominent speakers will be heard.

As Our Loss Is Great So Every Comrade Must Make His Task Greater

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

CHARLES EMIL RUTHENBERG is dead.

Our leader has been stricken down at his post, suddenly, without warning that death was to come.

Let new courage speed as swiftly to every comrade in the land, to renew the struggle for Our Cause with greater energy than ever before, as our greatest tribute at the bier of our standard bearer who is gone.

Only a few short weeks ago, before the mighty throng gathered in Madison Square Garden here in New York City on the occasion of the anniversary of Lenin's death, Ruthenberg called America's workers to new and greater revolutionary struggles.

Thus far more than a score of years, Ruthenberg the revolutionist, had waged relentless combat against American capitalism, toiling ceaselessly as an agitator, educator and organizer among the workers, ever doing his utmost on labor's side of the class struggle.

The master class recognized in Ruthenberg one of its most relentless enemies. It attacked publications he edited. It broke up meetings he addressed. It outlawed the Communist Party he helped organize. In savage desperation, it put him behind bars in its bastilles, in Ohio, in New York and in Michigan. Ruthenberg spent years in the prisons of the capitalists, but his spirit was never broken. Instead it was steeled for more dauntless assaults against the capitalist social order.

In the hour that death came, all of us who knew Ruthenberg felt that he would live many years to help develop and guide to fruition under Communist standards the American revolutionary movement. He was always strong physically, a tireless body reinforcing an ever-active mind.

He was not yet 45 years old, yet appendicitis came, like a dagger in the night and struck him down. The end could not have been more sudden, nor mere unexpected.

Ruthenberg at the moment of his death was the General Secretary of our Workers (Communist) Party. He had held this position practically from the day that he stepped out of Sing Sing Prison, in New York State, in 1922. His was a difficult task. He was not only called on to lead in the party's struggles, to formulate and devise its policies in a multitude of different activities, but he was also compelled to bear a heavy burden of the Party's routine work, raising its finances, as well as those of The DAILY WORKER, attending to the details of organizational work and stimulating the Party's campaigns. It was a super-task. Yet Ruthenberg never faltered. He brought to each day's task new vigor born of his unfathomable faith in the cause in which he served.

Ruthenberg was born on July 9, 1882, at Cleveland. His father was a longshoreman. He received his education in the city's public schools. At first factory worker, then clerk, and later occupying an executive position in the office machinery of big business, Ruthenberg never wavered in his loyalty to the working class.

It was in 1909, at the age of 27, that he began his ten years of activity as city secretary and organizer of the Socialist Party in Cleveland, Ohio. He immediately became a rational figure in the Socialist movement, always a leader of its revolutionary elements. In the historic struggle between the "reds" and the "yellows," that culminated in 1912, in the Berger-Hillquit demand for the expulsion of William D. Haywood, Ruthenberg was already recognized as the leader of the Party's left wing, and Ohio, especially Cleveland, was stamped on the American socialist map as RED.

Ruthenberg edited the Cleveland Socialist, 1911-13, in addition to his other duties. With the beginning of the world war this publication became the Socialist News, which he carried on from 1914 to 1919.

At St. Louis, in March, 1917, Ruthenberg was a member of a committee on war and militarism that drew up what later became known as the "St. Louis Anti-War Proclamation" of the Socialist Party. While other spokesmen of the Socialist Party faltered, under the growing governmental persecution, Ruthenberg developed his attack on the war in harmony with the proclamation that had been issued. In the great public square at Cleveland, before thousands, he called on the workers to refuse to be conscripted for the war. He was arrested with Alfred Wagenknecht and Charles E. Baker and sentenced to a year's imprisonment. During the trial of Eugene V. Debs, at Cleveland, in 1916, the prosecutor brought Ruthenberg into the courtroom from his prison cell. Before the capitalist court Ruthenberg reaffirmed his stand for the St. Louis Anti-War Declaration. At the workhouse, at Canton, Ohio, where Ruthenberg was first held as a prisoner of capitalism, he was subjected to many prison tortures, including being strung up by his wrists for hours, his feet barely touching the floor. This was the penalty he paid for the slightest infraction of the prison rules.

In the Socialist Party split, that took place in 1919, Ruthenberg joined with the forces that organized the Communist Party as opposed to the elements that went with the Communist Labor Party. He was the first secretary of the Communist Party that established its headquarters in Chicago. Then came the Palmer raids and the resulting persecutions.

It was during this attack on the young Communist movement that Ruthenberg was indicted in New York State and placed on trial with I. E. Ferguson, charged with having participated in a Left Wing Conference of the Socialist Party held in New York City, June 21-24, 1919. They were charged with criminal anarchy under a law passed in 1902, seventeen years before. Ruthenberg's testimony and speech to the jury constituted what was considered the most revolutionary challenge made in a court in the United States.

Ruthenberg was convicted and, like Ferguson, Harry Winitsky, Ben Gitlow, James Larkin and others spent years in the prison of New York State.

During most of the time that Ruthenberg was in prison, the Communist movement was forced to lead an illegal existence. It was again coming into the open when he was released. Upon regaining his freedom he took up the task of building Communism's open expression, the Workers (Communist) Party.

It was at the last convention of the illegal Communist Party, held at Bridgeman, Mich., that Ruthenberg was again arrested, with nearly a score of others and indicted under the so-called criminal syndicalism law of that state. He was again convicted and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment. The conviction was appealed to the United States supreme court which was expected to hand down its decision very shortly. Indications were that it would be an unfavorable decision.

This was the life of a revolutionist in the United States, a life that had really just begun. We all had hoped that Ruthenberg would be saved for many years' activity in the Communist movement. But Ruthenberg is dead. The task of every comrade thus increases, with the staunchest soldier gone. Let every comrade be equal to the greater task.

An Editorial from "The Chinese Guide in America"

THE following editorial is reprinted from the English supplement of "The Chinese Guide in America. This publication, presentable in English, is the organ of the Central Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party demanding the withdrawal of American naval forces from Chinese waters and the recognition of the Chinese nationalist government. "The Chinese Guide in America" declares, "There has been no weekly presentation in English of the crisis in China from the point of view of the Chinese and edited by us. The DAILY WORKER, printed in New York City, presents the news from the most favorable point of view, but it is not edited by Chinese)."—Editorial note.

A Symposium On Intervention In China.

The first appearance of this supplement is being devoted mainly to a symposium on the intervention in China. The editor has written to prominent leaders in American thought and life and has gathered statements of representative groups. Some of these are printed in this edition. The three points of view presented all express a distinct desire that China should and must be free and independent.

President Ray Lyman Wilbur of Stamford University is sincere in his sympathy for the aims and aspirations of the Chinese nationalist movement, but expresses a hope for patience on the part of its leaders. Chinese patience regarding exploitation and domination by foreign powers is both historical and proverbial. The article by T. Ii. Lee shows clearly that even under the most trying conditions there is very little danger of disorders arising which could get beyond the control of the officers and leaders of the Kuomintang. The events of the south have proven by their actions that they are a part of a governmental system represented by the Nationalist government and not merely a military adventure financed by foreign imperialistic groups. Through their long practice the present leaders following in the footsteps of Sun Yat Sen, have learned well the lessons of the many pitfalls of foreign diplomacy and there is no danger that they will allow themselves nr any provocative incidents even such as the show of armed forces of Great Britain and America, to divert them from their goal, the unification of China for the Chinese. Their support rests upon the will of the masses of peasants and city workers who faithfully and obediently support them.

The president of Stamford University bases for the ultimate control by the Chinese of their territory and of their affairs, but counsels "within a reasonable time." Similar expressions have been made by the state department of the United States. The Chinese have just as little confidence in the verbal and written statements of the American and other imperialist governments as is expressed in the statements of the Workers (Communist) Party of America. The Chinese believe in deeds as well as words. The promise of freedom for the Philippines and the talk of peace by the gunboat for Haiti, Nicaragua and Mexico are the precedents which determine this attitude on the part of the Chinese. Many times in China's sad times has seemed to be more fair than some of the other imperialist nations.

In view of this distrust which is the result of the acts of foreign diplomacy itself and not due to any acts by the Chinese, we feel it would be a master stroke of diplomacy, at least, for the American government, to have coupled their "fair" words with deeds and kept all troops from the war areas. Foreign troops have a sinister meaning to China and the Chinesee. Heavy governmental burdens, increased taxes, further domination by foreign powers have always followed in the wake of the "civilizing" influences of the marines and soldiers of the capitalist countries.

It is hoped that all groups will unite for the purpose of demonstrating that the American workers and people sincerely hope for the liberation of China from foreign domination and will express this desire by an earnest and persistent effort to force the United States government to withdraw immediately its troops and naval forces from China.—Editor.

Around The Mill Gates

By C. SARA SHERMAN.

AROUND and around the mill-gates they walked; it was bitter cold that morning at 5 a. m. but their bodies were filled with heat that kept them walking. Their fingers interwoven as if to say, "Together, together . . . Onward Comrade . . . .

No time for silly sighs, glimpses of lamentations, he looked at her, but she did not blush, for she was not the heroine of the old society, but the woman of a new world. Hand in hand forward her pale eyes penetrated his. They were two kinds of people in the old world, but like one for a new world. In speech they were not hardly understood. Way over in the other parts of the world where they were born, she in Russia, he in Italy, way over there their tongues were divided by boundary lines, that had filled beings with hatred against each other for the profits of a few.

On the picket-lines there is no nationality, there is no race, no national hatred, just a bitter determination to WIN . . . .

Around and around the mill gates they picketed and Solidarity they sang; bouyantly, defiantly, triumphantly, leading hundreds of workers in march and song. Children of the striking fathers and mothers marched forward, children of four years, children of six years, children of all ages. Pale workers' children, thin little voices, they too sang. Women marched in back of them. Mothers, grandmothers, gray-haired women with scorched faces, flat-chested, with knotted hands of toil, eyes of denial and now new hope. Men followed last; beautiful young boys with sparkling eyes of anger, old men marched in a deathlike gait, faces full of pity, contempt and revenge . . . .

They marched together . . . together. Around and around the mill-gates . . . . ragged they were, not for years and years they have felt the making clothes, woolen, silks, cotton . . . .

The sun crept out from a distant corner way up above and looked down at the mass of human beings around and around the mill-gates . . . It seemed as if she was smiling . . . All eyes looked upward for a new day.

Restlessly she clenched her pale white little hand in his large brown hand, there was full understanding . . . . Their hopeful dreams. A little closer comrade! Hearts beat. They moved towards each other. Young bodies, young hopes, a YOUNG WORLD . . . .

"Fellow-workers," she cried out in joyous pain, "let us march by the mill-gates until we WIN." We work in the mills, and we shall also . . . .

A moan! A scream! . . . . "My head," a cry was heard. Blood, blood . . . . Cossack Gangster! Police! "Let them alone," hundreds of workers shouted. "Defend them, brothers and sisters." Children cried for pity and fear . . . .

Around and around the mill-gates and to the prison cells they walked, firmly, bravely, heads uncovered and bleeding. Arm in arm, fingers interwoven. There were no silly sighs, no blushing, no useless promises. Life was the promise.

"Comrade, we need each other," he said, pressing her frail little hand . . . . .

"Yes, comrade, the struggle needs us," she answered.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

Praises DAILY WORKER.

Editor, The DAILY WORKER:

The inestimable work which your paper is doing for the workers of America, and the fearless stand you have taken in exposing on against every treacherous element within the organized ranks of American workers is recognized by our club.

Therefore, at our last meeting the whole membership decided that it should render you all possible assistance, moral and financial, in order that you could carry on the struggle for the emancipation of the whole working class.

In view of your good work, we are hereby sending you $5 as our hearty support, which you should use in further promotion of your great work among the unorganized and unenlightened workers of America.

Wishing you much success in your great work, I remain very sincerely yours, For the Slovak Workers' Dramatic Club of Cleveland, Ohio, ROSE KELLER, secretary.

Heckle British Laborite.

To The DAILY WORKER: On Thursday evening, February 24, Jessio Stephens of the British Labor Party, delivered a lecture in the Elizabeth Labor Lyceum, in which she praised Ramsay MacDonald and disparaged the work of the left wing in the general strike. She also had a few bitter words to say about Soviet Russia.

After her talk one of our local comrades asked for the floor. When he tried to point out the fallacies of Miss Stephen's talk, he was forced to sit down. Other efforts in the hall heckled the speaker.

The result of this meeting is that the right wingers will have something to talk about for a little while, and that Jessie Stephens will remember her unexpected rebuff at Elizabeth. CELIA BECKER.

California Quakes Again.

March 8th—What?

By ROSE EASTOR STOKES.

IN 1910, the first Socialist Women's Conference was held in Copenhagen, Denmark. At this conference Clara Zetkin, the well known leader of the Communist International, proposed a special commission for work among women. The proposal was adopted by the conference and the body of socialist women delegates, again at Clara Zetkin's suggestion—declared March 8th International Women's Day.

March 8th is the birthday of Rosa Luxemberg—the day that gave to the proletarian world one of its most valiant spirits. Whose life and martyred death will inspire to heroic effort millions upon millions of the proletarian masses the world over.

International Women's Day with us is not an occasion for "glorifying" woman as woman. Nor is it a separatist expression that either deplores women's "inferior" position—or asserts her superiority. No, we celebrate in the Communist spirit—the "spirit that recognizes one front, the proletarian front. That calls upon the proletarian women in home and in factory to organize, to join with the men, the youth, the children of their class to fight against every danger that threatens them all together.

In this spirit March 8th is being celebrated in every part of the world. Even the most remote countries show the stir of life in the masses of working class women.

In China, for instance, the work of centralizing the activities of proletarian women's organizations has been going forward for years. There is the "Loka Kai" (party of the 8th of March) which already in 1923 published a newspaper of its own. In China the women are today not among the least vital factors in that heroic struggle against imperialism.

They began with slogans such as "Down with the traditions and customs that enslave women."

"Equal and similar education for men and women."

"Equality of marriage and divorce laws between the sexes."

"Protection of motherhood—assistance to working-women!"

But today, the cries of "Down with Militarism!" "Down with Imperialism!" are the cries of the women as well as the men of the Chinese masses.

And in the final conflict against exploitation, great masses of China's women will have been trained in the struggle for a new life for themselves and their class, and will fight as the Russian working and peasant women fought—side by side with the men, for a Soviet China.

In Germany, in England, in France in the present great struggles of the workers, the women of the working class proved their fighting powers.

Here in America there have been a few isolated but thrilling examples in recent history of the participation of women in the mass struggles of workers.

When the miners of Kansas were in danger of being shot down by the armed troops sent against them by the strike-breaking government, it was the women—the wives, mothers, sisters and sweethearts of the miners who organized and marched right into the muzzles of the guns!

They cried: "If you fire you will have to shoot US down!" but you shall not shoot down our men—you shall not break the strike!"

The troops were withdrawn. The women in the end won the victory for the miners.

And what of to-day?

Some day, when the complete story is told of the heroic part played by the women in the Passaic Strike, not only on the picket line, in street demonstrations, but also in the solid work of organizing and administering relief to the strikers' families and their children, it will prove an inspiration and a spur to the work of organizing the working class woman for the struggle and strengthening the home-front. The housewife and the mill-woman equally were united in the closest possible manner, and both as closely united with all the nations taken by the strikers as a whole—as sane and they will participate in wider struggles—of the working class as a whole.

March 8th!

Let us celebrate the work of drawing the women of our class into every struggle, great or small, that concerns our class—(there is no short way—no short way of preparing them (one half of the working class!) for the final conflict.

On Raiding Ideas

By HARBOR ALLEN.

ONCE I lived in a small town. The men used to get together behind a garage and tell smutty jokes. Some of them were pretty good. They were told with an earthy vulgarity that made the insinuating sophistication of Greenwich Village look mildewed. There was something wholesome about the way these males used to mill around the back door of a garage and talk animal.

Frankness At Times.

But if you had tried to be half way as frank about sex at a bridge party or a church meeting or an open forum they would have driven you out of town. It's all right to be a wholesome animal back of the garage. But in a meeting house, as a preacher or a teacher or a merchant or a grocer. You have dignity. You remember that there are morals. You are a pillar of society. You must support the sacred institutions, marriage, church, industry, or forbid that you should be lewd. Of course, you may laugh now and then about sex. But you mustn't discuss it seriously. Sex is too serious a thing to be serious about.

Don't Raid Cabarets.

It's the same way with the raids on Broadway theatres. I've sat in cabarets and listened to wise cracks at homosexuality and other irregularities. Nobody thought of raiding. It wasn't serious, see? You could laugh and forget about it. The chief trouble with "The Captive" is that you can't laugh and forget about it. That's why the preachers, the uplifters, the blue-noses, the puritans, the other ossifications of a dead era are afraid of it. If "The Captive" were a joke, they wouldn't care.

What do they mean, "clean up the stage?" Only sex? Not on your life. They want to clean up the ideas, too. Clean out the kept dull, conservative, docile. It's a dangerous medium. The people who tread the stage are not solid citizens. They don't own homes, pay bills, write checks, speculate, grow fat. Most of them are lean, starving, discontented; many of them are fly-by-nights, gypsies, insurgents, radicals! They lack shame. They scorn "propriety."

From Sex To Kellogg.

That's what the professional purifier is aiming at. He'll start "cleaning up" sex. Next he will be "cleaning up" ideas. Next he'll raid you if you laugh at a policeman or a judge or a banker or a dry-agent or a professional purifier. Next he'll clap you in jail if you dare to utter an idea not approved by Secretary Kellogg (which means, of course, that you mustn't utter any ideas at all); or if you draw a hero who doesn't measure up to what the Daughters of the American Revolution think a hero ought to be (which means he'll be a sap).

BOOKS

DOLLAR PHILOSOPHY

The Story of Philosophy, by Will Durant, Simon & Schuster. $5.

Will Durant is cashing in on his "Story of Philosophy." He has given up his lectures at the Labor Temple and has gone from "don't-you-think-Bergson-fascitating" lectures before women's clubs at $300 a throw.

Four hundred thousand culture-crazed people have invested five bucks in the book, which they display in subway trains, but seldom read. These are interesting social phenpmena; but it's of the book itself that I'm going for to sing.

The most interesting thing about the book is not its frothiness. Not its feeble jokes. In the 600 pages that make up the "Story of Philosophy" no mention is made of Martian philosophy, which is far infinitely more significant than Nietzchean philosophy (to which Durant devotes 50 pages); than Bergsonism (to which he devotes 16 pages) or Jamesian pragmatism (to which he devotes 11 pages).

Martism is not merely an economic theory; it is a complete philosophy. This is something which few bourgeois historians of philosophy realise, despite an occasional mention of Dietzgen in the standard texts.

Marx, assuming materialism, and using the Hegelian dialectic (which Durant dismisses in a few contemptuous paragraphs) worked out a new, and in our conception, adequate system of philosophy.

One does not expect Will Durant to accept that system of philosophy. One expects him, however, to consider it as a philosophy, as a way of looking at the universe and to mention it, if only casually, in his book.

HARRY FREEMAN.

HEROES AND HERO WORSHIP

The Theatre of George Jean Nathan, by Isaac Goldberg, Ph. D. Simon & Schuster. $3.

I understand that next to being a great man the most desirable thing is to be his biographer. Isaac Goldberg, Ph. D., of Boston, having become convinced of this platitude, has written "critical and biographical studies" of Havelock Ellis, H. L. Mencken, and now—George Jean Nathan.

Goldberg has a religious nature, but it has become sublimated into a veneration for men. Some of his other weaknesses include studied attempts at purple writing; a fearless desire to write lightly—when the heavy gown of the schoolmaster is so painfully in evidence; and a minor genius for feeble puns.

What is true of his books on Havelock Ellis and H. L. Mencken is also true of this recent probing into the well-known facts of Nathan's life and works. Thus the most valuable aspects of this book are the photographs of the hero from the time when he was six months old to the present day, and the correspondence between Nathan and Eugene O'Neill which is fascinating to anyone interested in the contemporary theater.

TALES FROM THE DARK

The Damned Agitator and Other Stories, by Michael Gold. Daily Worker Publishing Co. Ten cents.

Things happen to people in the world, in America. And there are other people who go about with pencil and typewriter watching the things happen, putting them down on paper. There is a Pole leading a bitter, losing strike in a New England mill town while his starving wife sits at home cursing him, hugging her child. There are four I. W. W. prisoners who denounced the war and are freed after five years of dead living behind steel bars. There is a little boy of ten working in a coal-breaker, treating the big blustering miners to cheap booze on pay day, drinking the stuff himself.

Michael Gold has seen these people and the things happening to them and written stories about them. But they aren't stories. They are big unwieldy chunks of raw material mixed with his own indignation at a world and a society that allow such things to be. Obviously this is a different, an earlier Mike Gold writing, one who is struggling with language and trying to make words hold thoughts that are blundering and formless. The Mike Gold of the rapid ironic prose that has become familiar in the "New Masses" is more master of himself and his ideas than the maker of these placid, doughy sentences.

The three stories included in this small book are probably good propaganda because their indignation is so real. But I want to make it clear that they are not good stories, nor in fact, are they stories at all. Ideas took hold of Mike Gold, dark, desperate ideas clutched his mind fiercely, and he made up the stories to fit the ideas. Now I think he is wiser. He knows how to fuse the two. He doesn't always do it even now. But he knows how. When he wrote these stories he didn't know how. He saw things happening to people in America, he was bitter and angry, and he wrote. They are the stumblings of a dark mind in the darkness.

A WORKERS' GOVERNMENT

Constitution of the U. S. S. R. No. 10 of the Little Red Library. Daily Worker Publishing Co. New York. Ten cents.

"Workers" does not appear anywhere in the Constitution of the United States. Their interests are provided for on page after page of the Soviet Union Constitution. The Soviet Republic is "a republic of workers and farmers"; in order to guarantee workers' freedom of conscience, of speech and of assembly, the constitution makes provisions that guarantee the separation of church and state; furnish meeting places, etc.

"Labor is the duty of all citizens of the republic." When it comes to elections and to holding office, only those are eligible to vote and to be elected to office "who earn a living by productive and useful social labor." Many similar provisions are made in the constitution.

The most important of these constitution provisions are contained in Number 10 of the Little Red Library. Besides these important sections of the constitution the volume has two other sections. One is devoted to an analysis of the rights of trade unions in the Soviet Union. The other describes the system of social insurance in vogue there.

Like the constitution of Mexico, with its labor code (the first of its kind in the world, so far as I know) the Soviet organic law provides in great detail for the protection of the working masses. Since the Russian revolution was much more complete, its constitution goes very much farther in this direction than any other. Soviet laws protect workers just as United States laws protect property and property owners.

Anyone who wants to know what a workers' state can do for workers should spend some thoughtful hours studying this book.

THE ROMANCE OF MICROBES

Microbe Hunters, by Paul de Kruif. Harcourt, Brace & Co. $3.50.

Truth is not only stranger than fiction, but most of the time it is more interesting. In the case of "Microbe Hunters," the truth about how germs were discovered makes the sort of book which you pick up at bedtime and read until the alarm goes off in the morning.

Imagine such a learned, scientific study as the cause and prevention of disease being founded upon the discoveries of a little old Dutch janitor who took to grinding lenses and making home-made microscopes in spare hours between tending fires and sweeping the cobble stones.

This was the man who first saw microbes—without in the least understanding their significance; and it is fascinating reading, as de Kruif writes it, to learn about his patient work, and the discoveries, and the starts, and disappointments of the score of bug chasers who have come after him.

There's a lot to be learned from this book, and a good time to be had in the process.

—HELEN BLACK.

COMMENTS

"Our Colleges," by John Kirkpatrick (New Republic $1) is practically an emasculated edition of Sinclair's "Goose Step." This professor (he of his job in a small college in Ohio the day the book appeared) smears over all the vital, juicy episodes in the "Goose Step," translated Sinclair's conversational English into the dull speech of the classroom—and the result was what the New Republic would describe as "an objective study."

Dr. Alexander Meiklejohn is the patron saint of the author of this book. Academic freedom, the open mind, and the on-the-one-hand-on-the-other-hand kind of research is the extent of his radicalism.

—S. G.

"Many Miles," by Harry Kemp (Boni & Liveright. $3.) is the story in volumes of adventures of this self-confessed genius. One can have a little fun trying to guess who the thinly-disguised characters (well-known hoboists, anarchists, and Bohemians) might be, if nothing more important can be found to do. Kemp seems to feel that he can avoid the necessity of being coherent by the simple device of using innnmerable dots, dashes and asterisks.

Woll's Agent Acts As Police Informer

McGrady Swears Picketing Illegal; Fur Workers Joint Board Expelled

Three important developments indicating the trend of the struggle of the left wing to save the needle trades unions from destruction by the bosses and reactionary officialdom took place yesterday. They are:

(1) The New York Joint Board of the Furriers' Union has been given a pledge of support by a shop meeting of workers employed by Wexstein, said to be the largest shop of its kind in the world.

The right wing gangsters led by Edward McGrady, special representative of the A. F. of L., had tried to intimidate these workers with the aid of the police. A number of arrests were made, the workers were charged with unlawful picketing, and McGrady appeared as a state witness against them.

(2) The Joint Board of the Furriers' Union received official notification of its expulsion together with the local unions supporting it, representing 85 per cent of the membership of the International Fur Workers Union.

(3). The official charges contain not one single word relative to the bribery of the police force which President Matthew Woll and President Green have featured in the publicity material given to the capitalist press in connection with their attack on the New York Joint Board.

Some charges are constitutional in their character while others are of a general natnre such as "taking instructions from outside sources" and "holding secret conferences."

The Joint Board holds the expulsion illegal and pending the issuance of a detailed reply by the Joint Board, Gold, manager, issued the following statement:

Gold's Statement.

The International Fur Workers' Union under the direct supervision of the A. F. of L. executive council seeks the expulsion and dissolution of the Joint Board and locals by illegal methods.

Under date of March 3, 1927, the International Fur Workers' Union sent to the Joint Board, Furriers' Union, notice directing the dissolution of the New York Joint Board Furriers' Union, Locals 1, 3, 10 and 15, decreed the suspension of the locals mentioned above, as well as the expulsion from the union of 34 individual members, including the officers of the Joint Board, as well as many other active workers of the union. The notice of expulsion and suspension is the first intimation that the Joint Board, the locals composing it or any of the individuals involved, have received that charges were pending against them.

The constitution of the International Fur Workers' Union, as well as the American Federation of Labor, has been flagrantly violated by those who professed to speak in their name.

It is elementary that persons and organizations against whom charges are proposed are entitled to a copy of the charges, to the names of the persons making the charges against them, as well as an opportunity to produce witnesses and to be heard in a fair and impartial trial after reasonable opportunity to prepare for same, it is the natural right of all persons and is guaranteed specifically by the constitution of the International Fur Workers Union.

This right has been denied. The Labor Movement will condemn such high-handed outrageous methods of procedure.

The membership stands solidly behind the Joint Board and will refuse

THAT the recent political scuffle between the vatican and Mussolini was only a dust-raising affair can be gathered from the eulogy of the pope and the fascist leader published in the Osservatore Romano, official organ of the vatican. The noble pair of hop merchants are labelled the greatest spiritual leaders in the world. This skeptical writer took little stock in tales of enmity between the intellectual jailer of millions of catholics and the temporal jailer of millions of Italian workers and peasants.

THE high cost of revivaling has hit Aimee McPherson a blow, but it is expected that she will recover with the aid of publicity. The saintly siren of the sawdust trail seems to be enjoying the wickedness of New York but mourning the fact that the denizens of this American Sodom are too happy in their wickedness to wish for the monotony of salvation or are too far gone to care for anything. UNEASY rests the heads of many British peers whose coronets were purchased from political parties that had as little money in their treasuries as they had honor in their systems. Lord Roseberry, a peer whose peerdom is above suspicion—which means that whatever crookedness that was connected with its acquisition dates back to the middle nages—is out on the war path swinging his lariat at coronets that were purchased in recent years by money earned in the whisky business. Housing Problem Acute In Suburbs; Rents $42

Suburbanites, Who Fled From Noise, Dangers, Hustle, Slums and Rents of City, Now Caught In Landlords' Net.

This article on the suburban communities of Westchester, Jersey and Long Island, completes the survey made by Will de Kalb, DAILY WORKER investigator, of housing conditions. Tomorrow he will begin to summarize the results of this survey.

By WILL DE KALB.

The communities in the suburbs of Westchester, New Jersey and Long Island are old, but it seems a community is never too old to learn new tricks. To a limited extent, the housing problem has extended to these out-of-the-way places, and scores of commuters are crying for relief.

If there were as many decent, livable rooms for rent in New York City proper as Assemblyman Jenks would have us believe, the railroad companies would lost quite a few customers.

Stalin Says No War Yet Because Workers Won't Attack U.S.S.R.

MOSCOW, March 3.—"There will be no war either this spring or this autumn, because our enemies are not ready," declared Joseph Stalin, Soviet leader, today when answering questions of workmen regarding the possibility of a break with Great Britain with war as a result.

Stalin as speaking in a local election campaign when he was questioned regarding war possibilities: "Our enemies fear the results of a war, because the workers of Eastern Europe don't want to fight the Soviet Union," said Stalin. "We are pursuing a policy of peace.

"I believe a break with England is hardly possible, because it would accomplish nothing."

Many Militants Picket Shops For Lefts

Successful Week Cleaning Out Needle Trade Gangs

"Large and militant picket lines have followed the Joint Board's drive for picketing scab shops," according to Louis Hyman, general manager of the New York Joint Board of the cloak and dressmakers.

"We called for workers to picket the shops rallied on strike for the discharge of members who refused to register with the International; and shops where employers have refused to recognize the authority of the Joint Board," said Hyman. "The result has been a big demonstration every day this week in front of the 20 shops on strike."

Some Arrests.

Bertha Gerst and William Zweibon were arrested at the pirket line at the A1 Dress Shop, 361 West 36th St., on Thursday, but were later released by Magistrate Smith in Jefferson Market court when he found there was no evidence of any disturbance.

This shop was called on strike because of the discharge of Zweibon, a presser.

Gangsters On Run.

There were also large demonstrations before the Millar and Mandel shop and the Ben Gershel shop. Demonstrations have been arranged for Friday morning, which will close a week of "successful and enthusiastic picketing," according to Mr. Hyman.

"Firm, strong pirket lines have put the gangsters on the run," he said. "On Wednesday morning they even fled upon seeing the large lines and on Thursday morning they scarcely dared to appear at all."

REPORT JURORS HAVE CONVICTED THOMAS MILLER

The jury in the Daugherty-Miller case decided the fate of one of the defendants. After fifty-two hours of deliberation the twelve veniremen announced this fact to Judge Knox at six o'clock tonight. No intimation was given as to which defendant's fate had been decided, or in what way.

The court room and the corridors of the federal building were buzzing with all sorts of rumors tonight. Thomas W. Miller, the former alien property custodian seems to have been convicted, according to the general consensus and all debating among the jurymen, it is insisted, is over the guilt or innocence of the ex-Attorney General Harry Daugherty. Both are charged by the government with conspiracy in the return of a $7,000,000 alien-owned property seized during the war to a Swiss corporation.

Tory Leaders In Anti-Soviet Conspiracy

White Guardists In Alliance With Cabinet Officers

LONDON, Feb. 17.—(By Mail) One of the most amazing exposures of duplicity and intrigue against the government of a friendly nation ever made public was published today by the Daily Herald, labor organ.

The Herald published a remarkable series of documents showing the existence of a conspiracy between Russian White Guardist emigres and members of the tory government to bring about a rupture of relations between the British and Soviet governments and to drive Soviet representatives out of Great Britain.

Relations With "Jix".

In one of these documents M. Sablin, the White Russian "diplomatic representative" in London reports that he has established "very friendly and trustworthy co-operation with Sir William Joynson-Hicks."

The documents, being a series of communications between the White Guardist Sablin and his colleagues in other countries, claim credit for helping to put over the fake Zinoviev letter and for black-leg activities during the general strike. The documents appeal for assistance in money and energy to assist the tory extremists in the "Clear Out The Red" Campaign."

The Herald story, headed: "The 1924 Election" reads as follows:

Tories and Czarists.

JOHN BULL NOT TO BREAK WITH SOVIET—YET

LONDON, March 3.—Sir Austen Chamberlain announced in the house of commons this evening that the British government does not intend to hastily sever relations with the Soviet Union.

The debate was initiated on the recent exchange of notes between London and Moscow regarding the British charges of alleged Soviet violation of the trade agreement by conducting a propaganda campaign against the interests of the British empire.

The government's policy toward Russia was endorsed by a vote of 271 to 146, after a lengthy debate on the subject.

"The British government feels that a breach between us and Russia must have a reaction on other countries," said Chamberlain.

Sir Robert Horne, who originally negotiated the British trade agreement with Russia, advocated the severance of relations.

Later in the debate Lloyd George said that a considerable proportion of the goods sent from America to Russia for two or three years consisted of famine goods, while American bankers conceded credit to Russia in a way that British banks did not.

Lloyd George and Ramsay MacDonald both complained of the speeches of the British ministers denouncing the Russian government as a junta of assassins and thieves. MacDonald declared that such speeches did no direct harm to the development of Anglo-Russian trade.

NEW EXPULSION DOESN'T HINDER LEFT WING MEET

A splendid membership of dressmakers last night showed that the principal effect of the right wing expulsion proceedings is to increase interest in union affairs and make the members more eager to take part in union activities.

In Webster Hall, more than 1500 dressmakers, members of Local 22, were present to hear the report on conditions in the International Ladies' Garment Workers Union.

Rothenberg's Body to Be on View Saturday And Sunday in Chicago

CHICAGO, March 3.—Comrades and friends can view the body of Comrade Charles E. Ruthenberg at Ashland Auditorium, in the East Room, Ashland entrance, Saturday from ten in the morning to ten in the evening, and in the main auditorium, Sunday, at twelve noon. The memorial meeting starts at one p. m., Sunday.

To Commemorate First Airplane.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—President Coolidge has signed a bill for erection of a monument at Kitty Hawk, N. C., to commemorate the first successful airplane flight by the Wright brothers in 1903.

Furriers Raise Defense Fund; $25 Each

Locals Meet and Vote Their Faith in Joint Board

In order to wage more effectively the fight against those reactionary officials who are attacking the furriers' Joint Board, all members of locals 1, 5, 10 and 15, at their meetings last night voted to levy a tax of twenty-five dollars on the membership.

Have Confidence.

This display of defiance to the traitorous leaders of the International union was supplemented by resolutions of renewed confidence in the Joint Board, and of determination to fight against the expulsions, against the splitting policies of the International, and for the preservation of conditions in the shops.

Applause greeted the announcement that yesterday, upon recommendation of the district attorney's office, Judge Collins in Part 4 of General Sessions, dismissed 13 of the cases pending from the fur strike of last year.

Still In Prison.

However, the Finance Committee reported that there were still other strike cases pending, and some workers already serving prison terms, and funds were needed immediately to care for these men and their families, and also for the defense of the Joint Board locals which the International had declared "dissolved and suspended."

Chairmen at the four local meetings read the story of Edward McGrady, A. F. of L. organizer, who yesterday testified in behalf of a boss and had four workers convicted for "unlawful picketing." The names of the workers arrested were Irving Potash, Oscar Millef, J. Fleiss, Morris Krelnick, Max Kelberg and A. Schneiderman. They were fined $5 apiece by Magistrate Smith in Jefferson Market court.

Like Mass Meetings.

At Local 5 meeting in Stuyvesant Casino Morris Langer, manager of Local 25 in Newark, and Jack Schulman, one of the active members, were present and spoke briefly on conditions in the union.

All the local meetings had a very large attendance—"just like mass meetings," so many of the workers remarked.

Building Trade Workers Do 75 Dollar Bond To The Daily Worker

Seventy-five dollars worth of bonds, issued by the cloakmakers' union to finance their struggle against the reartionary Sigman machine and to help pay the expenses of the strike, where purchased by building trade workers, employed in the construction of the co-operative buildings in the Bronx. Upon receipt of the bonds the boys promptly turned them over to The DAILY WORKER as a feeble attempt to help us along in our struggle against capitalism and the exposure of the imperialist activity of Wall Street. In making this donation to The DAILY WORKER, these comrades state that they are trying to further a double purpose, to help out the valiant clokmakers in their struggle, and also to help put The DAILY WORKER on a sound and solvent basis.

Ruthenberg's Ashes Will Be Laid 'Neath Walls of Kremlin

Chicago Holds First of Many Memorial Meetings Thruout the Nation

The ashes of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg, General Secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party, who died Thursday in Chicago, will be carried over thousands of miles of land and sea to be laid beneath the towering walls of the historic Kremlin in the Red Square of Moscow and in the shadow of the Lenin Mausoleum, there to rest with the ashes of other outstanding heroes of the Nov. 7, 1917 Revolution.

The Central Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party yesterday received the following radiogram from the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Union of Soviet Republics.

"Central Committee, Communist Party of Soviet Union deeply grieves with you at the loss of Comrade Ruthenberg, leader of your party and of international labor movement. His ashes will rest beneath Kremlin wall together with those of heroes of November Revolution."

Comrade Ruthenberg's remains will rest in the vicinity of the ashes of Jack Reed, the only other American revolutionist—buried in this historic spot.

Memorial meetings to Comrade Ruthenberg are rapidly being arranged in the principal cities of the United States. The workers who have come in contact with Ruthenberg's outstanding personality through working with him in the Left Wing Socialist or Communist movements, or have heard of him from those more intimately acquainted want to meet and hear more of him. At the memorial meetings during the first part of next week speakers will tell of Ruthenberg's life and work, of his place in the labor movement, and of the Communist cause to which he gave his whole strength.

RUTHENBERG MEMORIAL MEETINGS IN CHICAGO AND MANY OTHER CITIES

(Special To The DAILY WORKER.)

CHICAGO, March 3.—The memorial meeting to be held here for Comrade Ruthenberg will take place here Sunday, March 6, at Ashland Auditorium, at one o'clock. At the mass memorial service Comrades W. Z. Foster, Jay Lovestone, Max Bedacht, Nat Kaplan, James P. Cannon and Arne Swabeck will speak.

All of the speakers were day by day in direct communication with Ruthenberg, in his capacity as General Secretary of the Party. They knew him intimately.

Comrades and friends can view the body of Comrade Ruthenberg Saturday at the Ashland Auditorium in the East Room, front ten in the morning to ten in the evening and on Sunday at twelve noon. The body will be taken to the crematory after the meeting.

The funeral will be held Monday morning at ten o'clock from the chapel at 3183 West Harrison Street.

Chicago workers knew Ruthenberg well. His activities had been necessarily largely concentrated in the city in which the headquarters of the Workers (Communist) Party were established and his presence was frequently required at mass meetings and party membership meetings.

The memorial meeting is held under the auspices of District 8, Workers (Communist) Party of America.

New York Workers Will Remember Ruthenberg

Many union headquarters such as those of the needle trades workers of New York are draped in black today in honor of C. E. Ruthenberg, the Communist leader who died yesterday. The headquarters of the Workers (Cohmunist) Party at 108 East 14th Street are draped in red and black.

The Party has issued a call for a mass meeting at Carnegie Hall next Wednesday night in honor of the memory of its leader at which William Z. Foster, James P. Cannon, Jay Lovestone, Jay Lovestone, William W. Weinstone and other members of the Central Executive Committee of the Workers Party will speak.

Ruthenberg's ashes are being brought from Chicago, where he is to be cremated, to the meeting in Carnegie Hall and after that they are to be taken to Moscow, where they will rest under the Kremlin wall.

Cleveland Meeting Tuesday.

CLEVELAND, March 3.—Ruthenberg memorial meeting is being arranged for here, to take place Tuesday, March 8.

Grand Rapids to Have a Ruthenberg Memorial

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., March 3.—R. Baker will be the principal speaker at the Ruthenberg memorial mass meeting arranged here for Sunday afternoon at Workmen's Circle Hall. In this industrial city, Comrade Ruthenberg's message was especially needed, and the workers will meet to hear of his life and what he had to contribute to the solution of workers' problems.

Detroit Memorial.

DETROIT, March 3.—On Monday, March 7, the workers of Detroit will meet at eight p. m. in the Majestic Theatre, on Woodward Avenue, near Willis, to commemorate the life, activities and death of Comrade Charles E. Ruthenberg.

The speakers so far announced are Max Bedacht, Herbert Zam and Scott Nearing.

All Workers Invited To Bronx Mass Meet On Chinese Situation

The Bronx English Branch 1, Workers Party, has arranged a mass meeting on the Chinese situation. "Come and demonstrate for anti-imperialistic struggle in China, on Friday, March 4, at 2345 3rd St., 8.30 p.m.

Editor of Chinese Labor paper in New York, and other prominent speakers will address the meeting. Admission free.

Many Tributes to Ruthenberg Genius

Unanimous Decision by Communists to Carry Out Great Leader's Order: "Fight On!"

The death of Comrade Charles Emil Ruthenberg, coming so suddenly, and striking him down in the midst of his many activities in the cause of the workers, has shocked all who were associated with him in his Communist work, and also many who had more casual relations with him. By telegraph and cable, labor leaders, liberals and organizations continue to send messages of regret.

From the members of the Workers (Communist) Party, who frankly admit the great loss the movement in America and throughout the world has suffered, there is also in every case expressed a determination to follow the last command of the now dead leader, and "CLOSE RANKS," "BUILD THE PARTY," "FIGHT ON."

Some of the testimonials to Ruthenberg's genius and loyalty to the revolutionary movement were printed in yesterday's issue of the Workers (Communist) Party press, more are printed today, and still more will appear later.

JEWISH COMRADES ISSUE STATEMENT.

JEWISH SECTION WORKERS PARTY.—"With grief and sorrow we mourn the death of our leader Charles E. Ruthenberg.

"Comrade Charles Ruthenberg was the national secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party, the leader of the American working class.

"His sudden death was a great loss to the Communist Party and to the left wing which is at present engaged in a hard and determined struggle against the treacherous union bureaucracy.

"The class conscious Jewish workers know and loved Charles E. Ruthenberg and appreciated his great services to the revolutionary movement in America.

"The workers will honor the memory of Comrade Ruthenberg by joining the Workers (Communist) Party and supporting the cause for which he gave his life."

(Signed) National Bureau Jewish Section Workers Party; Editorial Staff "Freiheit", Editorial Staff "Hammer."

SINCERITY AND COURAGE ALWAYS CONCEDED.

H. G. TEIGAN, Secy. Minn. Farmer Labor Party.—"Ruthenberg's devotion to the cause of the workers was unquestioned since nineteen eighteen when he went to jail for opposing war. His sincerity and courage have been conceded by all. There can be no doubt that the Workers Party and the radical movement have sustained great loss in Ruthenberg's death."

HYMAN SAW HIM AS HONEST LEADER.

LOUIS HYMAN.—"With the death of Ruthenberg the radical labor movement has lost one of its best leaders and loyal fighters for the cause of the emancipation of the working class the world over. The labor movement has few enough leaders whose honesty of purpose and action is so clear. The loss of Ruthenberg is a severe blow."

WEISBORD TELLS NEED OF HIS GENIUS.

ALBERT WEISBORD, Leader of the Passaic Strike.—"With the passing away of C. E. Ruthenberg, the workers of America have lost a foremost leader and fighter. Especially will the most oppressed sections of the exploited masses feel his loss. In every struggle, in every critical historical movement, the workers of America will miss the genius of this man.

"We can make up this loss only by redoubling our efforts and our numbers. The vanguard of the workers must close their ranks. Inspired by the example of this leader, undeterred by his loss, we must carry on the work so nobly championed until final victory will hallow his death."

ITALIAN WORKERS WILL CARRY ON.

ITALIAN BUREAU, WORKERS PARTY.—"The Bureau of the Italian fractions of the Workers (Communist) Party mourns the loss of our Party leader. Every class conscious Italian worker in America will feel that in the death of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg we lose a fearless revolutionary fighter. The Italian workers in common with the rest of the American working class will mourn the death of Comrade Ruthenberg.

"We the Italian Fractions Bureau in this hour of our sorrow pledge ourselves in the name of the Italian and American proletariat to carry forward the work in which Comrade Ruthenberg showed such fearless and loyal devotion. Long live the Workers Communist Party! Long live the Communist International!" —(Signed) EXEA SORMENTI.

"TYPE OF BOLSHEVIST INTEGRITY"

WM. E. WEINSTONE, Sec'y New York District, W. P.—"Comrade Ruthenberg represented steadfast devotion to the Party, loyalty to its principles, faith in its growth, undying conviction of the ultimate realization of its aim.

"He typified bolshevist integrity, reliability, determination. He was a valiant fighter. During the trying period of the war, he held high the banner of Internationalism. In the mad, capitalist hysteria of the post-war period, he was persecuted but he did not flinch from carrying forward aggressively the ideas of revolutionary struggle. He was a Party man in every sense of the term—a professional revolutionary. His entire life was bound up with the Party he helped to form and of which he was its foremost leader.

"Comrade Ruthenberg is dead but the Party he led in founding lives on. Our membership must make up for the loss of our comrade by enrolling fresh forces into the Party, by redoubling our energies in the class struggle, by closing in indissoluble unity the revolutionary vanguard of the working class—the Workers (Communist) Party.

"Comrade Ruthenberg is dead!

"Long live the Workers (Communist) Party!

"Long live the Communist International!"

HIS COURAGE LIKE A TORCH.

J. MINKIN, Secretary, Jewish Section, Workers Party, Philadelphia, Pa.—"With deepest grief in our hearts we mourn the loss of our leader in the working class battles in the United States. We swear to give our hearts' blood for the struggle in which our brave leader has given his life. The years he spent in capitalist dungeons did not break the courage of our great leader and this will serve us as a torchlight and banner in the struggles to emancipate the world from the capitalist-imperialist yoke of oppression. Ruthenberg is dead! Long live the Workers (Communist) Party of America!

MAHONEY CALLS HIM A CLEVER STRATEGIST.

WILLIAM MAHONEY, Editor, Union Labor Advocate.—"Mr. Ruthenberg was an able, earnest and determined advocate of the principles of Communism and was a clever strategist in promoting its progress. He has a record of loyalty to the cause of the workers from his viewpoint that has been rarely surpassed. By his death the Communist movement has lost one of its foremost leaders."

LOCAL TWENTY-TWO PAYS RESPECTS.

EXECUTIVE BOARD, LOCAL 22, International Ladies Garment Workers' Union.—"We the members of the executive board of Local 22, assembled at a meeting on March 2 mourn the loss of our devoted comrade, C. E. Ruthenberg.

"We feel the labor movement has lost one of the most active and devoted fighters for the liberation of the workers from the clutches of capitalism.

"In paying respect to our dear comrade we pledge to go on with the work where he left off and carry on the struggle until the producers will be the rulers of society."

CABLEGRAMS FROM MOSCOW TELL THE SORROW FELT BY RUTHENBERG'S COMRADES IN HIS STRUGGLES FOR THE WORKERS IN AMERICA

Messages from those who were associated with Comrade Ruthenberg in his work in America, are beginning to arrive from Moscow, the capital of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, and headquarters of the Communist International, of whose executive committee and presidium Ruthenberg was a member.

HAYWOOD REMEMBERS EARLY STRUGGLES.

WILLIAM D. HAYWOOD sent the following cablegram: "Profound regret and sympathy to our Communist Party and to the working class of America on the death of Comrade Ruthenberg. We hold dear the memories of his brilliant leadership in early struggles for the revolutionary cause in the Socialist Party in 1912 and again in 1917 and 1918 and his great part in the founding and leadership of our Communist Party up to the moment of his death. The working class suffers a great loss at his death."

"CLOSE PARTY RANKS," SAYS ASHKENUZE

GEORGE ASHKENUZE cables: "The loss of Comrade Ruthenberg is a great blow to our Party. I am confident that by closing our ranks the Communist Party of America will continue the work of Comrade Ruthenberg and will fill its ranks with new thousands of workers."

MUST CARRY ON HIS WORK

A Moscow cablegram signed by C. A. HATHAWAY, KARL REEVE, WILLIAM F. KRUSE, TOM BELL, MAX SALZMAN and DOUGLAS says: "The death of Comrade Ruthenberg is a great loss to our Party and to the Communist International and the world revolutionary movement. Party unity is necessary to carry on his unfinished work."

All Admit Great Loss to Labor

Lead Thousands of Workers Thru Cleveland Streets.

I. Amter, secretary of the Cleveland district of the Workers (Communist) Party.—"Cleveland workers will always remember Ruthenberg as a fearless leader who organized them in a movement in defense of their rights.

His courageous opposition to world war, his fearlessness regarding imprisonment were an example for every revolutionary worker. May 1st, 1919 will stand out as a bright day in the history of the revolutionary movement of Cleveland when Ruthenberg led masses through streets.

Ruthenberg's leadership has welded a Communist Party that fights for Sovietism in the United States. His sound judgment, clear understanding, sterling Communist character were an inspiration.

Workers (Communist) Party and Comintern have lost a born leader stricken in maturity of his great revolutionary work."

Hungarian Bureau Expresses Sorrow.

The Hungarian Bureau, Workers (Communist) Party.—"The Hungarian Bureau of the Workers (Communist) Party can hardly find words to express its sorrow over the great loss inflicted upon our Party by the death of Comrade Ruthenberg.

"We keenly feel that we lost a great leader, whose devotion and energy was always an inspiration to the revolutionary proletariat."

"Friend of the Farmers."

ALFRED KNUTSON, Farmer Labor Editor, Superior, Wis.—"We are shocked to hear about the death of Comrade Ruthenberg. The exploited farmers and farm workers lose less than the city workers have lost a great and tireless champion for their interest.

His intelligent leadership and unflinching devotion to the Party and the cause of labor will always inspire our work of mobilizing the American working masses against the rubber system of capitalism."

"An Inspiration," Says Alderman Scott.

ALDERMAN I. G. SCOTT, A. E. GISSLEN and P. J. PRYTS, Minneapolis, Minn.—"It is with deepest regret that we learn of the passing of our beloved Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg. His long years of service in the working class movement will serve as a lasting inspiration for those who are left behind in the struggle."

The Loss Of Revolutionary Labor.

JOHN KISS, for the Editorial Board of The U'j Elore:—"The editorial staff of the U'j Elore, Hungarian organ of the Workers (Communist) Party mourns the loss sustained by the revolutionary proletariat through the death of our great leader, Comrade Ruthenberg."

Anna Porter Recalls St. Paul Convention.

ANNA PORTER, noted labor journalist, San Jose, California.—"Stunningly the news struck us today of Ruthenberg's death. It recalls my own impression of the St. Paul Labor Party convention when our leader faced the hostile politicians and demagogues who expected easily to confound the 'crazy Bolsheviks'. Then Ruthenberg spoke, low voiced, scholarly, poised, sure of his ground and of his cause. Never have I seen such baffled astonishment. Club women were present and one said to me, 'Well if these are Communists then I guess we are too.'

The party is not left without able guides but we have lost a consecrated leader. We here shall carry on with redoubled zeal."

"Will Follow Ruthenberg Line"

Four Active Members of the Workers Party, Pittsburg, Pa.—"We express condolence with death of the American great working class leader. C. E. Ruthenberg, we are shocked with this sad news but are determined to redouble our activities with the support of the Ruthenberg line of party leadership and ajpundling of DAILY WORKER."

Superior Youth Express Loss

The Superior District Committee of the Young Workers (Communist) League sent the following message: "On behalf of the entire membership of the Superior District Young Workers League we express our deepest sorrow for the grievous loss to the American Party and League and thereby to the World Communist Party in the death of our Comrade Ruthenberg."

"Faithful, Tireless Worker"

FRANKLIN P. BRILL, active worker in the Buffalo labor movement.—"In the untimely death of Comrade Ruthenberg the Party has lost a faithful, tireless worker, possessed the rare combination of a warm sympathetic nature and a militant spirit so necessary for leadership in the revolutionary labor movement."

Admired in His Home City

MAX S. HAYES, editor of The Cleveland Citizen.—"Charles E. Ruthenberg was a man of outstanding ability and in Cleveland, his home city, he was generally admired and respected by all who knew him, whether they agreed with his political views or not, all of whom regret to hear of his untimely passing away."

"He Meant Well" Berger

CONGRESSMAN VICTOR L. BERGER, Socialist Leader:—"Ruthenberg was a bitter enemy of the socialist party and a strong partisan, but the socialist movement is greater than any one person or any one party and undoubtedly is benefitted by containing a great variety of opinions. I am convinced that Ruthenberg was strong, but he undoubtedly meant well. Requescat in Peace. May he rest in peace."

"Ideals for Which He Fought Will Conquer."

A. BIMBA, Editor of Laisve, Lithuanian Communist Daily.—"Comrade Charles E. Ruthenberg is no more with us. In his death the Communist movement and the working class of America sustained a great loss. He was a great leader, courageous fighter, Bolshevik in the truest sense of the word. His role in the development of the Communist movement of America was gigantic.

"We mourn our great loss. We bow our heads before the earthly remains of this courageous fighter and pledge ourselves to continue the great work which he carried on so nobly. Comrade, death has snatched you from our midst, but the ideals for which you fought all through your life will live and conquer the world.

"The Communist Party of America, for which you sacrificed your all, and under whose banner and leadership the working class of America will organize itself from the yoke of capitalist oppression and exploitation, is your monument."

"His Life Was Not In Vain"—Laisve.

Laisve, Lithuanian Communist Daily paper, the following statement:

"We deeply mourn the loss of Comrade Ruthenberg, our fearless leader of the most advanced working class battalions, a man of revolutionary wrought steel, who dedicated the whole of his deep mind, stout heart and tireless energy to the cause of the proletariat.

"Our loss in the more appalling at this time when we stand in the greatest need of such comrades as Ruthenberg in view of the increasing capitalist reaction and re-awakening class struggle in the ranks of the American workers.

"Comrade Ruthenberg's devotion to the interests of the exploited, oppression and persecution knew no limits, no bounds, and obviously underlined the moral endurance of his iron constitution and brought him to an untimely and lamented death.

"But his life was not in vain. He left behind a deep and glorious example of living and dying for the highest and most sublime cause under the sun.

"Rest in peace, dear Comrade. Your job is well done, your mission gloriously carried out to the last breath. We, the living soldiers of your army, pledge to redouble our efforts under the Red Banner for the ultimate victory of your and our Communist ideals!"

"Ruthenberg's Death Loss to Ukrainian Workers."

The Ukrainian Bureau, Workers (Communist) Party adopted the following resolution:—"The Bureau of the Ukrainian Communist Fraction of the Workers (Communist) Party of America very deeply grieves the loss of our beloved Comrade Ruthenberg.

"For the Ukrainian workers as a whole, the death of Comrade Ruthenberg is a great loss.

"We bow our heads before the dead body of our great leader and comrade, but we raise the leaving revolutionary spirit of Comrade Ruthenberg and we will follow and continue the struggle against the exploiters. We will finish the work which is left us by Comrade Ruthenberg."

From Pittsburgh South Slavic Workers.

"Bratstvo," South Slavic Workers Club, Pittsburgh, Pa., has sent the following telegram:—"It is with deep regret that our organization, South Slavic Workers Club, 'Bratstvo,' learned of the death of our well beloved fighter for the interest of the workers, C. E. Ruthenberg."

Fighter Against All Oppression.

CHARLOTTE ANITA WHITNEY, noted fighter for labor, Oakland, Calif.—"Ruthenberg's death is an irreparable loss to American labor. A fearless fighter, he showed undaunted courage in advocating revolutionary changes necessary to insure workers the right to organize and take control of the economic and political life of the country, since they are the majority of people and great suffering and misery exist and grind the workers. He was a friend of all oppressed and for the protection of the foreign born, the needs of the unemployed, organization of the unorganized, right of Negroes to fight and to rule their own countries without interference.

"With head up he met prosecution and imprisonment at the behest of Wall Street. Farewell, Brave Spirit!"

Deserved Opprobrium.

Ross Westen, Local 23, I. L. G. W. U.—"C. E. Ruthenberg began to fight for the interests of the workers in the old socialist party. He proved there his qualities of leadership that have made him a force in the American labor movement. In the critical test of the war, when the socialist party fell a prey to the policy of social patriotism, and other leaders let themselves be made the tools of militarism, Ruthenberg understood and denounced this opportunism.

"His clear sightedness and courage made him a natural leader in the new, vital movement of American Communism, and his untimely death at least did not rob him off from seeing the Communista a real force in the struggle of the American workers for a militant labor movement.

"His loss will be keenly felt by all workers, for he was a fighter in the first ranks of the workers' struggle."

Only Death Stopped Him.

Herbert Benjamin, district organizer, W. P.—"Death the only force that could have removed him from active participation in the revolutionary struggle of the working class has suddenly taken from our ranks our leader and comrade. The shock is too sudden, the pain too sharp and overwhelming to permit of adequate expression at this moment. We who loved and respected Comrade Ruthenberg, who were taught and inspired by him, will never forget him. The working class whose ever-ready, courageous champion he was will build to his memory an imperishable monument through their victorious struggle for power which will establish the American Soviet state that will become part of the world Union of Soviet States."

More Than General Secretary.

LUDWIG LORE, Editor of Volkszeitung—Comrade Charles E. Ruthenberg, who died yesterday in the American Hospital in Chicago, after an appendicitis operation, was much more than the general secretary of his party, the Workers (Communist) Party. He has been for years the foremost leader of the Communist movement in America. He pronounced organizational ability, which was united with a thorough knowledge of Marxism, made as is seldom found among American revolutionists, quickly caused him to excel. His unusual courage, known to many of his associates, his faithfulness to principles which he held to be correct, and finally, the many cases of "shadowing" and third degree" by the authorities, proved him keen and wise even in such circles of labor and the liberal intelligentsia as had only very little in common with the Communist movement. (Editorial).

He Could Least Be Spared.

ROSE PASTOR STOKES.—"In the death of our Comrade, C. E. Ruthenberg, the party and the working class have sustained a heavy loss.

"He was, perhaps, the man who could least be spared from the work of building the Workers Party, the true leader of the working class, and of directing its various activities.

Another, vital intensification of work in every unit of the party can alone make good in a measure the severe loss.

"Ruthenberg is dead. Long live the American section of the Communist International—the Workers (Communist) Party of America!

"On with the work of organizing and clarifying the masses! Comrade Ruthenberg lives—in us!

"Courage, Strength, Judgment . ."

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.—H. W. L. Dana has wired the Workers Party: "Ruthenberg's sudden death is a very terrible loss. He combined in one person so many different qualities; courage, strength, judgment, vision. It will take many different men to replace him. All the more reason for everyone's redoubled efforts and for more new blood in the movement."

Harry Dana Says: "Mean Redoubled Efforts From All."

PROF. HENRY WADSWORTH DANA, of the Boston Labor College:—"Ruthenberg's sudden death is a very terrible loss, please accept my deepest sympathy and the tribute of my great admiration for his character.

"He combined in one person so many different qualities—an undaunted courage, a firm strength, a well grounded judgment and a far-reaching vision. It will take many different men to replace him.

"All the more reason for everyone's redoubled efforts and for more new blood in the movement."

Long Record of Unceasing Struggle

THE whole militant Labor Movement of which the International Labor Defense is a part mourns the death of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg. The grief is heavy indeed. It is hardly possible to say anything at this moment. Comrade Ruthenberg left to the Workers' Movement a long record of unceasing struggle on the side of the oppressed. The Working Class Movement lost a great leader. His memory will be an inspiration to continue the work for which he gave his life.

PITTSBURG LABOR MOURNS DEATH OF RUTHENBERG

Finnish, South Slavic, Workers Shocked

(Special to The DAILY WORKER.)

PITTSBURGH, Pa., March 3.—Numerous workers' organizations and prominent individuals are expressed deep sorrow at the death of C. E. Ruthenberg.

Finnish Club Sends Condolences.

The Finnish Workers' Club of Pittsburgh "learned of the death of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg, the secretary of the Workers' Party with great sorrow, which cannot be expressed in words. The working class of this country has lost a great leader, who went through many battles for the emancipation of the workers in this life."

"International Labor Defense of Pittsburgh expresses its deep sorrow at the death of C. E. Ruthenberg, a member of the national executive committee of the International Labor Defense, who courageously fought for the right of the workers to express their opinions and to organize," stated Carolyn Scollon, secretary.

"In behalf of the Lithuanian workers of this vicinity we express deep regret for the death of the champion of the workers, C. E. Ruthenberg," said Joseph Sliekas, secretary, Lithuanian Literary Society.

Lithuanian Women.

The Lithuanian Women's Progressive Alliance expresses its deep sorrow at the death of C. E. Ruthenberg, the leader of the working class of America," said Emma Sliekar, secretary.

"The South Slavic District Bureau of the Workers Party of District 8, speaking in behalf of thousands of South Slavic workers of this district, sends its condolence at the death of C. E. Ruthenberg, general secretary of the Workers Party, in whose person the workers of this country lost a great leader," stated Fletich, secretary.

"Follow Ideals of Ruthenberg," Says Epstein.

MELECH EPSTEIN, editor of the Jewish Daily "Freiheit," noted journalist and lecturer.—"Comrade Ruthenberg's sudden death was a great loss to the revolutionary vanguard of the American working class. Particularly will he be missed by the Jewish workers, for whom Comrade Ruthenberg has a record of revolutionary struggle, courage and devotion.

"Comrade Ruthenberg was a true friend to the foreign-born workers and greatly helped them in their struggles. He was the one who cemented the ranks of the foreign-speaking workers with the native American proletariat, and helped to build one revolutionary movement of the oppressed of the country.

"The Jewish workers call upon the Jewish workers to follow the ideals of Ruthenberg, which are the ideals of Lenin and the Communist International."

"One of Our Best Leaders."

GUS SIRKLAN, organizer of the Workers (Communist) Party of Boston.—"We mourn the death of Charles E. Ruthenberg, the leader and founder of our party. The International Communist movement has lost one of its most loyal, most courageous, devoted and best trained leaders.

"The American Workers (Communist) Party stands as a proud monument to his work and achievements. His life and work will always guide the work of our party.

"We will build and strengthen our party, which he loved so much, and we will carry on the fight to a complete victory, for the cause for which he gave his life, the abolition of the capitalist system and the establishment of the workers' rule here in America."

Finnish Communists In Superior, Wis., Express Grief.

The Workers (Communist) Party, Superior, Wis., and the employees of Tyomies Finnish Communist Daily: "The death of Comrade Ruthenberg is an occasion of deepest grief in the ranks of the revolutionary proletariat. Let it also be the occasion to pledge anew our united determination to carry to final victory the cause he also held his own."

His Death Our Loss.

Isadore Bornheswitz, manager, Local 2, I. L. G. W. U.—"With the death of Charles Ruthenberg the workers sustain one of their greatest losses. He was one of the bravest fighters for the emancipation of the working class from exploitation of the present capitalist system. In his fight for the workers' rights he braved all storms and he did not fear imprisonment, if it was in behalf of the cause of the workers. His death is our loss and the loss of every class conscious worker."

Chang-Tso-Lin Army Cut Off From Base

Nationalist Forces Outflank Militarists and Straddle Tiensen-Pukow Railroad

LONDON, March 3.—Shantung forces, going to the relief of Sun Chuan Fang, have been cut off and isolated in the province of Anhui, according to the Daily News correspondent at Shanghai. This correspondent states that the Cantonese have succeeded in out-flanking the northerners and have cut the Tiensen-Pukow railroad at Wuvi, north of Nanking.

The Daily Herald, right wing labor organ, commenting on the scandal, offers the information that a few years ago a Labor Party research bureau found 140 peers were concerned in finance, fifty-three in railways, thirty in mining, eighteen in shipping and fifteen in breweries and hotels . . . . Recently it was disclosed that a distiller, who is now dead, paid $250,000 for a peerage." This is sweet but we would remind the Daily Herald of the strange case of Sir Alexander Grant, the biscuit manufacturer, who purchased a title from Ramsay MacDonald while "Mac" was premier, the latter receiving $140,000 worth of stock in Grant's biscuit factory and a Rolls Royce. Grant was a tory. Lloyd George make no defense against the charge of selling titles. He has the money. The other capitalist parties have done it and furthermore George has the swag.

ASSUMING that a travelogue appeal no longer appeals to the stomachs of unemployed American citizens the United States recruiting sergeants are now "saying it with beans" instead of with scenery. The army ration has been increased from 26 cents a day to 50 cents. This is illuminating. The wealthiest nation in the world whose upper classes throw away money on rare pleasures can only afford to give their cannon fodder the miserable meal ticket of 50 cents a day.

Those who follow the professson of tooting the capitalist government of the United States will hail the action of the United States supreme court in invalidating the leases granted to Edward L. Doheny on the ground that corruption was involved in their acquisition, as proof that our legal system makes no distinction between rich and poor. Is this so? Doheny employed A. B. Fall with a little black bag full of money. There is a law to punish such conduct. But both Fall and Doheny are not in jail and the average worker whose head is not full of capitalist gudgeon grease will smile cynically.

ALEXANDER Kerensky, the menshevik leader without a following, who did his best to hold Russia for the capitalists after the Czarist regime was kicked out, landed here last night from the palatial liner Olympic. Kerensky lasted four months. But during best time he sent thousands of Russian workers and peasants to sure death in a futile offensive against the Austrian army, at the instigation of the British government. Since then the renegade has been plotting against his native land in every capital in Europe. His object in coming here is not for the good of the Soviet Union but the workers' government can now laugh at his efforts.

ACCUSE SENATOR SCHALL OF USING BOOTLEG MONEY

ST. PAUL, Minn., March 3. (INS).—The Minnesota State Senate, by a vote of 54 to 8, today ordered an official investigation into charges that corruption, including collection of campaign funds from convicted bootleggers on the promise that they would be given immunity, figured in the election of United States Senator Thomas D. Schall (R.) of Minnesota in the 1924 general election.

In adopting the resolution providing for the inquiry, the state senate raised the question of whether Senator Schall has a legal right to hold his seat in the United States Senate.

Flood In Boston.

BOSTON, March 3.—The several wharves at high tide today were inundated, cellars on the water front were flooded and sewers were backed up. The tide, driven by a gale, was the highest in years. Merchandise in the cellars was ruined by water. Streets on the waterfront at Hull were flooded and great waves beat over the sea wall at Winthrop.

Russia That Drove Her Bosses Into Frenzies

CHICAGO (FP).—Before a crowded, forum audience Sherwood Eddy practically repeated the famous address he gave in Soviet Russia that he delivered from the platform of the American Federation of Labor convention in Detroit last October. Again he made his three major criticisms of Soviet rule and again he launched the eulogy that had enraged the conservative labor misleaders in Detroit.

Eddy, who is an international secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, has been speaking lately under difficulties as the Y. M. C. A. has found it harder to approach the wealthy for donations with such an outspoken and influential friend as Eddy on their roster. Among his utterances at the forum were:

"In Russia the man who goes into profiteering for himself is scorned as a moral leper as in no other country in the world and if he is a member of the Communist Party, after a fair trial, he is executed or expelled.

"Russia with all her faults stands as a challenge wherever imperialism or capitalism are ruthless."

Eddy's audience listened with eager attention and then held him for another hour to answer questions. He recommended some of the Soviet agricultural policies to save the American farmer from ruin and he strongly urged the sending of an American labor mission to Russia.

Sentence Another White Guard Fiend; Catch Man Who Ran Train Of Death

SVERDLOVSK, Russia, March 3.—Found guilty of wholesale atrocities against supporters of the Red armies, Commander Theodore Volkoff, puppet of Admiral Kolchak, was sentenced today to be shot.

Thousands of Red soldiers, Communists, and simple peasants, with no political affiliations, were tortured by Volkoff's Three hundred of his victims were discovered in a single mine shaft, according to evidence submitted at the trial.

Bill for More Cruisers

Strategy Involved in Call for Arms Conference

WASHINGTON, March 3.—President Coolidge has signed the naval supply bill carrying an appropriation of $450,000 to start construction of three new cruisers.

As predicted by independent observers, the administration gave up its gesture of "economy" and "disarmament" when the actual test came. Opponents of President Coolidge and his "Big Navy Group" in congress declare his strategy was as follows: He pretended to oppose the bill for more cruisers, and at the same time through the hypocritical plea for an arms conference, forced France and Italy into a bellicose position, thus assuring the passage of the American armaments bills.

Then, with attention concentrated on the warlike flourishes of European nations, it was easy to switch sides, and sign the bills, thus making it a law.

Millions Appropriated.

More than $15,000,000 was appropriated to naval armaments by congress when the senate approved a bill for increasing the firing range of the big guns of the battleships Oklahoma and Nevada. Senate action was taken without discussion.

DROP CHARGES AGAINST BIMBA IN MASS. COURT

State Drops Its Suit Against Editor

BROCKTON, Mass., March 3.—The case against Anthony Bimba, Communist editor of the Lithuanian daily "Laisve," printed in Brooklyn, who was convicted last year in the district court for seditious utterances, has been dropped by the district attorney.

This means that the prosecution did not believe that a re-hearing of the case in the supreme court would render a second conviction. Also it is believed that the expenses connected with such a trial would be too heavy a burden and would considerably work up hostile sentiment against the district attorney's office.

Anthony Bimba was arrested in 1925 after having made a speech denouncing the working conditions in the Brockton shoe factories. Many of the workers in that industry are Lithuanians.

His speech drew the ire of the shoe factory bosses, at whose behest he was arrested and charged with heresy and sedition. This heresy law is a relic from the days of Cotton Mather of some two hundred years ago, and was resurrected to fight Bimba. At the trial Bimba reiterated his denial of a god but was acquitted on the heresy charge. However he was convicted for having made seditious utterances.

Bimba immediately appealed the case.

Melnitchansky Is Now Member of Presidium; Heads Textile Union

Editors The DAILY WORKER:

Dear Comrades:—In your issues of Jan. 27 and 28 last, in the introductory remarks to my answers to the Chicago Daily News correspondent's questions, you refer to me as president of the Moscow Central Trades Council. I no longer occupy that post, being at present a member of the presidium of the USSR Central Council of Trade Unions and chairman of the executive committee of the Textile Workers' Union. Fraternally yours, G. MELNITCHANSKY.

to be misled by flimsy innuendos and dishonest insinuations which constitute the so-called charges; they are fully conscious that it was the present Joint Board that led them to victory in the recent strike of the furriers which resulted in the establishment of the forty hour week, to which principle the American Federation of Labor is supposedly committed and of which victory President Green of the A. F. of L. spoke with such pride at the last convention of the A. F. of L.

The dastardly attempts on the part of the International Fur Workers Union to destroy the Fur Workers Union will fail; they will not succeed in destroying the morale or the determination of the membership to maintain the organization which they have built up at such sacrifice.

McGrady Aids Police

Already an attempt was made by the International Union with the aid and assistance of Edward F. McGrady, member of the special committee of the American Federation of Labor, to terrorize with the aid of gangsters and the police, union workers in the shop. Under the cloak of charging union workers with unlawfully picketing in front of the Wexstein shop, McGrady caused the arrest of several workers, and for the first time in the history of the American Labor Movement, the spectacle was presented of a professed Labor leader appearing in court as a witness for the prosecution against a worker charged by his boss with unlawful picketing. This latest attempt to intimidate and frighten the workers has proven an absolute failure. The Joint Board will mobilize the workers for the purpose of defeating this attempt to demoralize them and will exert every effort to maintain in the shop the conditions of work that they have won by the workers through their sacrifices and their strikes. In this struggle, the Joint Board will mobilize the sentiment of not only the furriers in other sections of the United States and Canada, but the full sentiment of all sections of organized labor everywhere.

Expulsion Notice

The letter of President Schachtman to the Joint Board and the detailed terms of surrender as laid down by the sub-committee of the general executive board working under instructions of the special committee appointed by President Green are as follows:

Joint Board Furriers Union,
Locals 1, 5, 10 & 15,
Mss. Cohn, Manager,
32 E. 22nd St.,
New York City.

Dear Sirs & Brothers:

Enclosed herewith you will find charges and findings of the sub-committee of the General Executive Board pertaining to the New York Joint Board Furriers Union, Locals 1, 5, 10 and 15, as well as the individual members herein who will receive individual copies shortly.

1. The immediate expulsion from membership of all individuals specifically mentioned in the foregoing charges and findings.

2. The immediate dissolution of New York Joint Board of Furriers Unions.

3. The immediate delivery of all funds and properties held by the Joint Board of Furriers Unions, to the Special Committee of the American Federation of Labor, consisting of Matthew Woll, Hugh Frayne, Edward F. McGrady, who are authorized by the General Executive Committee and the Sub-Committee of the International Fur Workers Union to hold all such funds and properties in trust as is provided in the constitution of the International Fur Workers Union.

1.—The immediate suspension of Local Furriers' Unions, Nos. 1, 5, 10 and 15.

2.—The immediate delivery of all funds and properties held by local furriers' Unions Nos. 1, 5, 10 and 15 to the special committee of the American Federation of Labor, consisting of Matthew Woll, Hugh Frayne and Edward F. McGrady, who are authorized by the General Executive Committee and Sub-Committee of the International Fur Workers' Union to hold all such funds and properties in trust, as is provided in the constitution of the International Fur Workers' Union.

3.—The members of Local Fur Workers' Unions Nos. 1, 5, 10 and 15 are directed not to pay dues of assessments or to make any financial contributions or render any support or assistance of any kind whatsoever to any other group, association or other form of organization other than as many be instituted or be designated as the proper and legal agency or organization to collect such dues, assessments or contributions and of which the members of Local Fur Workers' Unions, Nos. 1, 5, 10 and 15 will be duly advised.

The officers and members named in the charges are:

I. Shapiro, W. Wolfner, M. Polinsky, B. Frieman, M. Aintrater, H. Cohen, J. Herskowitz, F. Polansky, Lena Greenberg, Esther Gumberg, S. Gold, M. M. Cohen, J. Rosinick, F. Warshafsky, M. Pinchefsky, S. Mencher, J. Schneider, S. Kass, H. Kravitz, E. Schiller, M. Gursky, M. Suroff, S. Resnick, Lena Rabinowitz, I. Hera, S. Lelbowitz, A. Gross, I. Winogradsky, B. Garff, M. Spivack.

The fur working industry now becomes the scene of a struggle similar to that in which the right wing has been defeated in the ladies' garment industry. It is believed that the special committee of the American Federation of Labor in charge of the offensive will try to register the fur workers with the right wing and carry the fight against the rank and file into the shops with the aid of the bosses.

The arbitrary action of the A. F. of L. officials has incensed the membership and the repudiation of the gangster-informer leadership by the workers of the Wexstein shop is a good indication of the temper of the rank and file and strength of the support they will give to the left wing Joint Board.

Foster Speaks Sunday Night In Chicago, Ill. On "Strike Strategy"

CHICAGO.—This Sunday evening, March 6th at 8 p. m., William Z. Foster, leader of the steel strike of 1919, will conclude his series of talks on "Strike Strategy." Mr. Foster delivered the first talk a month ago, which was well received by the workers present.

The Workers School announces for the Sunday following, March 13th, "Who Owns America?" a lecture by Leland Olds, industrial writer for the Federated Press.

It is expected that several hundred workers will appear to hear the final talk of Foster on Strike Strategy. This Sunday, March 6th at 8 p. m., at Northwest Hall, North and Western Avenues.

Comrades and Fellow Workers:

After a year's heroic struggle of the Passaic textile workers, the mill barons were forced to submit to a union in the textile industry of Passaic. They are however putting obstacles in the way of maintaining such an organization. Although the strike is almost over, they are taking the workers back very slowly, with the result that thousands of families are without means of existence. Their children are hungry.

There are many families whose sole supporters were sent to jail for long periods because of their activities in the strike. You must come to their rescue. Relief must go on with full speed!

The General Relief Committee, who is maintaining a few food stores in Passaic, appeals to all those who have taken milk coupons to send in their money as soon as possible, no matter how much you have collected. Send the money immediately to the General Relief Committee, 799 Broadway, Room 223, also ask for more coupons to sell.

The office is open from 9 a. m. to 7 p. m. daily.

The Baumes Laws—Vicious Reaction

A government by policemen is what the Baumes Crime Commission is trying to put over on the people of New York State.

The 38 new recommendations of the commission, prefaced by the statement that the people "of New York State may still be said to be living in a fool's paradise" leaves no doubt as to its purpose.

The Baumes law, and the host of subsidiary measures which bulwark it, while passed ostensibly to secure more rigid control over criminal elements, is actually directed at the working class and their organizations. These measures are an expression of the general tendency toward complete reaction which has marked the legislation of the recent period. It is a matter of established fact that members of the working class are most often in difficulty with capitalist law machinery. This is not only because poverty is the principal cause of crime but because the working class is the subject class against which the machinery of the capitalist state is organized. Property rights take precedence over human rights.

Many of the "crimes" with which workers are charged and for which they are convicted are in reality political offenses—acts committed as a result of the class struggle.

Under this classification come the cases of the members of the Furriers' and Ladies' Garment Workers' Unions which grew out of the recent strikes. These cases are handled in the courts simply as criminal cases and to them the Baumes law applies. The same is true of the large number of cases which come under the general head of "civil liberties"—cases which arise as a result of protest against infringement of the right of free speech, free press and assemblage. Violations of the criminal syndicalism laws are in the same category.

Just a few of the new recommendations of the Baumes commission are sufficient to convince one of the inherent viciousness and Prussianism of these measures:

(1) "Two policemen for each 1,000 inhabitants." This is a minimum and for some communities the commission wants one policeman to each 250 inhabitants.

Policemen in the United States now have more power than in any other "civilized" country and such an increase for all practical purposes would be military government—open ascendancy to almost supreme power of that "special body of armed men" of which Frederick Engels spoke.

(2) "Take the padlock from the lips of the judge and permit him to control the trial and express his opinion on the case."

This proposal in effect would make the system of trial by jury a farce. The American judiciary is notoriously an instrument of the capitalist class and besides is composed for the most part of individuals who have little if any of the personal integrity which serves at times in other countries to temper the fury of class justice. It is possible to count on the fingers of one hand the judges in the United States who even pretend to be governed by the provisions of the Bill of Rights.

(3) "Tighten the presumption of innocence now resting with the defendant."

This is a euphemistic way of saying that the intention is to hold the defendant guilty until he proves his innocence and thereby abolish whatever advantage the accused now enjoys by placing the burden of proof upon the defense.

The danger to accused workers, with the existing extortionate charges for legal service under the present rules of evidence, is obvious.

These three recommendations alone give a true picture of the utter reaction which the Baumes commission represents.

As is customary these vicious proposals and others which are in logical sequence are made in the name of the interests of all the people. American capitalist democracy is especially skilled in maneuvers of this kind.

Without much protest the original Baumes law was passed with the understanding that it would rid New York of crime and criminals. It has not done so but it has increased enormously the opportunities for graft and corruption among the members of the bench, bar and bureaucrats generally.

The ones who have suffered the most are those who are the least guilty—the poor.

The organized labor movement has been disgracefully apathetic and the "liberal" middle class journals approve this legislation almost unanimously.

The Communist press has the task of exposing the Baumes laws as part of the general imperialist reaction and arousing the workers to the danger of such legislation and to action for their repeal and against their extension.

FARMERS DRIVEN FROM THE SOIL

Tariff, Trusts, Freight Cause Farm Poverty

WASHINGTON (FP.)—American farmers are doomed to suffer, for a long period of years, a continual increase in their economic burden, which will reduce their standards of living, drive a great part of them from their land and demoralize the labor conditions in the towns.

This is the view taken by W. A. Anderson, chairman of the Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota, and formerly secretary of the Industrial Commission of North Dakota. Anderson has been consulting progressive senators as to the chances of federal action on farm problems.

Farm Banks Fail.

Farming in the Northwest has so far decreased that 200 state banks in Minnesota are now in process of liquidation, while many national banks have likewise failed in the past two years, Anderson said to the Federated Press Merchants are suffering because the mass of the farmers cannot buy, on the one hand, and business is falling into the hands of the chain stores on the other. Small capital is helpless against big capital, and the losers are turning radical without fully understanding why their economic security has vanished.

Three Reasons.

Reasons for farm poverty, Anderson declared, are chiefly three: high protective tariff for manufactured goods which increases the price the farmer must pay; high charges for rail and other distribution of farm products and goods which the farmer buys, which further widens the gulf between what the farmer is paid and what he must pay; finally the growth of monopoly power, which fixes prices of commodities manufactured at home and abroad.

"Farmers cannot increase the prices of their own products because they must compete in the world export market with like products from countries such as Argentine, where costs are low. These differences in costs of production and haulage—Argentine wheat goes almost wholly by water to the Liverpool market—will apply to all staple crops to which American farmers may turn. They simply cannot compete abroad. Hence they must raise their crops ever to employ laborers, and many of them must hunt jobs in town.

Rochester Central Body Puts Yellow Taxi Upon Unfair List; Strike On

ROCHESTER, N. Y., March 3.—The strike of the taxi drivers of the open shop Yellow Taxi Company is still on despite the fact that local police are being used to break the strike. The drivers are very active and are to be seen every morning picketing the company garages.

At a meeting of the Central Trades and Labor Council at their headquarters in the Reynolds Arcade, the Yellow Taxi Company was put on the unfair list to organized labor by the request of the drivers Local 113, composed of striking yellow drivers. This means, drivers say, that union workers numbering over 20,000, affiliated with the Central Trades and Labor Council which is itself affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, will withdraw their patronage of the Yellow Taxi Company.

Vote Assessment.

An assessment was voted upon all local unions to help carry the strike of drivers to victory over the bosses.

Letters to all company and fleet owners of taxabs in the state of New York outside the city of New York inviting them to a conference to be held in the city of Rochester, New York, have been sent by Fred Zorn, president of the open shop Yellow Taxi Company of that city.

The conference is being called, say leaders in the taxi driver's union movements throughout the state of New York, to draw up plans to break up the various attempts to organize the drivers.

WHAT TRIBUTE SHALL WE PAY!

How shall we pay tribute to the memory of Comrade Ruthenberg? How shall we do fitting honor to the memory of our dead leader?

The DAILY WORKER is a monument to his efforts, under his leadership The DAILY WORKER was born. His driving force made it the ready and effective weapon of the American working class in every important struggle. With tireless energy and unshakable determination he steered the paper through the most difficult crises. With shocking eloquence and power he inspired us to heroic efforts to maintain and build up our American Communist Daily. No more substantial tribute can be paid to the memory of this great man than the establishment of a bigger and better DAILY WORKER, reaching the broadest masses of American workers with the message which he so ably carried forward.

TORIES IN ANTI-SOVIET CONSPIRACY

a remarkable series of documents which threw light on the peculiar and close relations which appear to exist between certain Tory leaders in this country and the leaders of the "White" Russians, who are still actively engaged in conspiracy against the government of their country.

These documents (photographs of the originals of which are in the possession of the Daily Herald) consist of a series of memoranda from M. Sablin, who still calls himself Russian Diplomatic Representative" in London, to his colleagues in other countries.

The most remarkable of them is a memorandum, dated August 26 of last year, in which M. Sablin sets out the history of his relations with British political leaders during the past few years.

"During all my activity in London after the revolution," he writes, "I have used all my strength, and utilized all possibilities in order to maintain our friendly relations with members of the British Government and parliament, and with various figures who could help the Russian cause.

"In the time of the governments prior to the present, all this gave very insignificant results, and at times some of the British ministers even tried to avoid us for fear of violating political etiquette towards a 'friendly nation.'

"But lately a change has taken place in this respect and our diplomatic representation is slowly regaining effectual rights and effectual recognition on the part of the British authorities.

"A beginning was made by the energetic and successful participation of our representatives and of some White Russians in the election campaign.

"After that very friendly and trustworthy co-operation was established by me with the Minister for Home Affairs, Sir William Joynson-Hicks, who is the most convinced and energetic enemy of the Bolsheviks.

"During the general strike many White Russians offered their services to the British Government for the purpose of keeping order and for performing various work, and some of them were even beaten up by the strikers on the streets.

"As I have already informed you, Sir William expressed to me his sincere gratitude for the loyal way in which the Russians behaved, and our relations have become even closer, although outwardly he has thought it necessary to maintain proper correct behavior in relations to the 'friendly Power.'

"At present many members of parliament are beginning to tire very much at this necessity for maintaining such an absurd fiction, and in the last parliamentary debates on the Russian question a number of speakers pointed out that they considered it unnecessary and unworthy to maintain this masquerade.

Thinks Crisis Coming.

"In general I avoid making prophecies. But now, however, I think that the crisis is coming at last, and that we should at once take steps to do what lies in our power in order to support the Commander Locker-Lampson campaign.

"We cannot, of course, assign any considerable sums of money towards the new campaign, and, indeed, this would hardly be desirable from the point of view of its possible effect as well as from the point of view of tactics.

"However, we can undoubtedly place at the disposal of the commander much material which can be distilled by his speakers, announced at meetings, and published in the press.

"I have always shared my materials with the commander and other British friends, and I have often had the pleasure of seeing how my material, which not one newspaper accepted directly from me, appeared in the press sometimes in a slightly changed form."

Suspicions of Emigrees.

M. Sablin then goes on to make the remarkable suggestion that as propaganda works, "which carry the obvious stamp of the creation of the White Russian Emigration, meet with sons degree of prejudice," another means should be employed.

"If these words could be compressed and published under the guise of intercepted correspondence of the various Moscow Opposition leaders, then there would be a great demand for them, and they would be of great service."

He instances the remarkable success of a "Declaration by Rakovsky," published by the Russian press in Paris during the Franco-Soviet negotiations.

"In conclusion, I consider it my duty to appeal to all Russians and to all our foreign friends and well wishers not to spare either energy or money to help Commander Locker-Lampson in his campaign to clear the Reds out of England.

Future at Stake.

"Our political future within the next year or two depends largely on this campaign. If it fails, the Bolsheviks will be strengthened for years. They will again receive those short-time commercial credits which have decreased lately, due to unsettled conditions.

"If the campaign is successful, and results in the clearing out of the Soviet agents, then our representation will be established legally be reinstated in its rights, and under the title of 'Russians' will again be understood the real Russians and the real Russia, and not the Communists as is unfortunately customary at present.

"The time is ripe, the occasion is here, and if you don't take advantage of it it will not come again for a long time, or it may never come."

In a further memorandum sent out by M. Sablin on November 7, he regrets that he has heard in a confidential conversation with a prominent member of the British Cabinet, that Mr. Baldwin has no intention of breaking off relations with the Soviet Government and that Locker-Lampson and his followers will not succeed in achieving any real results."

Scores Baldwin.

Obviously Mr. Baldwin adopts towards Moscow the same undecided shilly-shallying policy to which he adhered during the six months of the miners' strike, in the hope that sooner or later everything would straighten up by itself.

"Sir Austen Chamberlain comes from the same industrial circles as the prime minister, and also tries to carry on his politics on the same basis as Big Business is carried on. He tries primarily to avoid conflicts, and to this end evades all decisive actions, in the hope that more suitable conditions may come which will allow him to accomplish his political problems with less risk and the expenditure of the minimum amount of effort. . . .

"The majority of conservatives still think that all evils arise from the destructive influence of Moscow and the propaganda of Communism, and console themselves with the hope that things can be improved by expelling Krassin from England and by breaking off all relations with Moscow.

"Of course I do all I can to keep up this sentiment, and do all in my power to help to clear the Reds out. Nevertheless, deep in my soul there is a big doubt in this regard, and I fear that even the possible clearance out of the Bolsheviks would not suffice in the present state of things to bring a decisive change in the condition of British industry and trade.

"Such doubts most probably exist in the minds of Baldwin and Chamberlain, not to speak of other statesmen in the Cabinet, who understand economic questions better than all the rest.

"In a practical sense the disposition of our forces at the present moment is approximately as follows:—

"The campaign of Locker-Lampson is being continued with unfailing energy. A resolution was also accepted by the annual conference of the Conservative Party at Scarborough . . . In a week from now the autumn session of parliament opens, and the followers of Locker-Lampson are preparing a new campaign in order to force Baldwin at last to specify their programme and take decisive measures to fight the Reds and the British trade unions, which are striving to establish dictatorship of the proletariat.

"Baldwin himself is no more enjoying the unanimous support of the whole membership of his party, and possibility is not excluded that he will once more decide to take the risky step of calling for a general election for the purpose of receiving a mandate from the country—a step which he courageously took three years ago."

A Real Political Interest

By EDWARD KOTLA

CHICAGO, March 3.—The heavy vote cast in Chicago primary elections shows the phenomenal interest the Chicago voters took in the elections, say the Chicago newspapers.

This phenomenal interest may be explained by a description a republican committee man in one Chicago precinct gave of the election on election eve.

"I bet Thompson will win," he said, "I voted for him ten times. After having voted 7 or 8 times a cop at the polling place remarked: 'Say, fellow, didn't you vote once before?'

"Certainly not," said I, "don't you know that I work around this place all day.'" Saying this I hinted to a friend that it was his turn to take the cop to a nearby saloon for a drink, and in the meanwhile I voted a few more times.

"In the morning I asked a neighbor if he was going to vote. 'No, I guess not,' he replied.

"All right and good," says I to myself, "don't worry, I'll see that your vote will be cast.

"Among the names our election committee had picked for me to vote with was one Greek named with a dozen syllables and I had to protest. 'I don't care how many times you want me to vote,' says I, 'but for heaven's sake don't pick me those mile long Greek names; get me some short, snappy ones!'

"Of course, for safety, we had to have both election judges republicans, so we had one of us republicans swear himself as a democrat and have him nominated as a democratic judge.

"And of course there are always lots of voters that are too lazy to register, but that didn't bother us any as we had them registered beforehand without any inconvenience to voters.

"After having assured myself that we had a big majority in our polling place I jumped to my car and drove to the next polling place.

"'Hello, hello, Bill. How did you make it?' I was greeted by the judges.

"'Hush! Don't call me Bill, call me Mr. Dependable!'

"Then I inquired if my help was needed.

"'No Bill, we got plenty of votes, not today; may need you next time, so good-bye.'

"Well, when Thompson gets elected for mayor this spring I'll see if I can't jack up my wages to $12 a day at least, for doing nothing."

Pirandello Comedy to Be Put On at Regular Performances

The success of "Right You Are If You Think You Are," the Pirandello comedy produced for special matinees at the Guild Theatre, has prompted the Theatre Guild to consider putting it on for evening performances, and will do so late this month. Until a theatre has been secured, "Right You Are" will continue at the Guild Theatre for Wednesday and Friday matinees.

The Guild is also planning to revive "Mr. Pim Passes By" to alternate with "Right You Are." The Milne play, first presented in the early days of the Guild will be done with Laura Hope Crews, Dudley Digges and Erskine Sanford of the original cast, all playing their original roles. When "Right You Are" and "Mr. Pim" begin alternating the Guild will have six plays alternating on Broadway. The others are: "Pygmalion" and "The Brothers Karamazov" at the Guild, "Ned McCobb's Daughter" and "The Silver Cord" at the John Golden. This revival is part of the Guild's plan to utilize the members of its Acting Company for the revival, from time to time, of its earlier productions.

BROADWAY BRIEFS

The 150th performance of the Winter Garden revue, "Gay Paree," takes place this evening. Mary Milburn, Winnie Lightner and Frank Gaby will introduce new specialties.

"New York Exchange," at the Forty-ninth Street Theatre, will conclude its engagement tomorrow night, preparatory to opening in Chicago.

William Harrigan has been signed to play the sailor, and will be co-featured with Lillian Foster, in L. Lawrence Weber's production of "Homecoming Road" which will open in Albany next Monday night.

The Neighborhood Playhouse has challenged the New Playwrights Theatre to produce "Pinwheel," Francis Edwards Faragoh's play which is now being played at the Playhouse. The new organization has accepted the challenge and will stage their version of the play—but this will not take place until later in the season.

This Saturday night, at the Mecca Temple, a four-cornered debate will be held on Stage Censorship. Opposing stage censorship will be William A. Brady, producer, and Robert Emmet Sherwood, author and playwright. Advocating censorship will be John S. Sumner, and Canon William S. Chase.

Grace Valentine, recently starred in "Trial Marriage," has been engaged to star in the road company of "Night Hawk" which opens in Rochester next Monday.

Another opening tonight will be the presentation of a new program of one-act plays by the Grand Guignol Players at the Grove Street Theatre, in Greenwich Village. The plays include "The Minuet," by Lewis N. Parker; the "Maker of Images," by Arthur Caesar; "Casualties," by Martin Flavin, and "We're All in the Gutter," by Elfreda and Clarence Derwent.

Georges Renevant will offer tonight a new program of one-act plays by the Grand Guignol Players at the Grove Street Theatre, in Greenwich Village. The plays in-

On the Screen

"Metropolis," the German production, directed by Fritz Lang, will begin its run at the Rialto Theatre tomorrow.

Production has been started on "The Thirteenth Hour," a new mystery drama, in which Lionel Barrymore is featured.

Following the completion of her next Paramount vehicle, "The Woman on Trial," Pola Negri is planning to take a vacation trip to Europe. She will return late in April.

"King Harlequin," a new Samuel Goldwyn production, is now in rehearsal. Vilma Banky and Ronald Colman are co-featured.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has signed Erich Pommer, prominent German director, to serve as associate producer under Louis B. Mayer and Irving Thalberg. For many years Pommer, as head of the UFA Company, has been Germany's best known cinema producer. His productions of "Variety," "The Last Laugh," "The Waltz Dream" and "Faust" are well known in this country. Emil Jannings first rose to fame under the sponsorship and with the aid of Pommer.

"Abie's Irish Rose" has been sold for the movies—rumor has it that the price paid is over a million dollars. Anne Nichols, its author-producer, sold the motion picture rights to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The Film Arts Guild will give a special showing of "The Living Dead Man," the French film based on Pirandello's "The Late Matthew Pascal," which is to be presented at the Guild Theatre this Sunday for two performances, at 3 and 8:45 p. m.

The Roxy Theatre has announced the official opening for Friday, March 11. The film feature will be the first showing of Gloria Swanson's latest picture, "The Love of Sunya," with an added attraction, a Vitaphone presentation of "Carmen."

WORKER TELEPHONE AS EAST AND WEST ARRANGE FOR ANTI-BRITISH IMPERIALISM MASS MEETING

SHOE WORKERS ON STRIKE AGAINST THE OPEN SHOP

Demand Agreement Before Returning to Work

A strike has been called by the Shoe Workers' Protective Union against the F. & W. Shoe Co., at 641 Blake Street, Brooklyn, because the company refused to sign an agreement with the union. The eighty employes of that shop, all union men, have come out on strike and are maintaining a solid picket line. No scabs have yet come near the establishment and the men are certain of their victory.

Some time ago the bosses stated they would be willing to sign agreements, but postponed action thereon. In the meantime a speed-up system was adopted to finish up all the contracts on hand so that a strike would not hurt them. When the union on March 1, demanded action the bosses stated that the workers were not doing their work in the proper manner and that the wages were too high. Yet when the threat for a strike was made the bosses promised to continue the union scale of wage, but that they would not sign agreements.

The workers knew that this meant eventual wage reductions, and discriminal of all active union men, and therefore to forestall any such discrimination an appeal was made to the district council to call a strike. The union demand is for a 44-hour week, the closed shop, union wages, employment through the union and the agreement to expire in the month of March, which is the busy season in the shoe industry.

The-o-ling-ing went the telephone in the Daily Worker editorial room. "Call for O'Flaherty" came from the City Editor's chair. O'Flaherty put the phone to his left ear and the following dialogue took place:

"This is Samuel Sha of the Chinese Nationalist Daily talking."

"Samuel who?"

"Samuel Sha. I want to know about the Irish meeting."

"Oh, yes. Now I get you. How are you today? Sure, anything you want to know."

A Superfluous Question

"Will the meeting be anti-British?"

"Ha. Ha. Haw, Haw, (telephone goes out of order. When the repairman gets thru O'Flaherty and Sha are still laughing. When they recover sufficiently to make coherent speech they exchange compliments on the humorous proclivities of the Chinese and the Irish).

"By the way said O'Flaherty, "400,000,000 Chinese should be able to make things look kind of dreary for John Bull."

"I have no doubt," replied Mr. Sha in a soft musical voice," that John will feel rauher uncomfortable by the time we get thru with him with the assistance of four million Irishmen, who have had considerable experience in sticking pins in his shirt. But where will this meeting be held and when?"

Meeting Tonight

"Tonight at 8 P. M. in Bryant Hall, 42nd street and 6th avenue with yourself as one of the principal speakers, in addition to William F. Dunne, of the Daily Worker, Butte, Montana, and Kanaas, T. J. O'Flaherty as chairmen and let us hope a goodly audience."

"I'll be there," said Sha as he hung up.

By the way "Sha" is Irish for "yes." It looks like a real united front this time between the Irish and Chinese. Here is where East meets West with a wallop—at John Bull and world imperialism.

LONE WOLF SOLON BARKS SENATORS INTO INSOMNIA

Scared of Quiz Into Price of Senate Seats

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 3.—A single senator—Cole L. Blease, a democrat of South Carolina, was responsible for the second all-night session within a week of the venerable U. S. Senate. The dignified senators are getting messed up and losing their regular sleep because Senator "Jim" Reed, democrat, of Missouri, insists that that body continue its investigations into "slush funds" during the summer months.

In an effort to block consideration of this move, the "filibusters" used the time-honored technique of objecting to all motions to proceed with the business, before the senate.

Day and Half Left.

With 18 hours left to the present session of congress, David Reed, of Pennsylvania, a distant relative of the Missouri politician, was leading those who are eager to avoid the embarrassment of further legislative investigation into the manner in which millions of dollars were disposed in electing men like Frank Smith of Illinois to the senate.

Big Bills Dying.

The present feud, which has its origins in private quarrels of the various senators, has the senate hogtied while measures which are considered of vital importance to various interests were skidding to a quiet death. A quorum—more than half of the august body remained on hand throughout the night, debating savagely on the floor, dozing in chairs, sleeping exhausted on couches in full view of crowded galleries, and pacing the floor in a brave senatorial attempt to fight away sleep.

Just Won't Be Examined.

It looks very much as though the senate will adjourn, after being exhausted by the continuous technicalities at the disposal of the members of the body. When it does there will be much weeping by various interests and groups who have axes to grind, and have already paid their deposits on account.

So eager are many of the virtuous senators to kill the further investigations of the committee examining the sums spent to purchase a seat in the upper house of congress, that much legislation dear to the hearts of many of the leaders of the body, will be sacrificed as a result.

Carpenters Volunteers Needed for the Bazaar

The International Labor Defense is calling for volunteers, carpenters in particular, to build booths for the bazaar which is to be held in two weeks. Volunteers should call ready for work at the Star Casino, 107th Street and Park Avenue on Saturday and Sunday, March 5 and 6.

But the average commuter knows that apartments are at a premium everywhere in the greater city, so he plugs along, catching the 8.15 in the morning, and the 6.15 at night.

Westchester Wages At $29.

Even in the slums of Westchester, there are no rooms for less than $8. The average rent in Westchester is high, $70; but Westchester, as a whole is not a working class county. Taking just the figures of working class rents, the average is $42. But the average wage is $29, in those same districts. Perhaps the actual average for rentals is too high; at any rate, according to most real estate specialists I interviewed, it varies between that figure and $38.

In spite of this high rental, the worker must pay a goodly portion of his wages to the railroad company for commutation. Of course, except for the slum district of Westchester, the surroundings are many times more pleasant than they are elsewhere. There is room for the kiddies to play. But usually the employed members of the family spend half their lives on the trains, traveling from one point to another.

Long Island Shortage Acute.

Long Island is replete with working class communities. Jamaica is one. Flushing is another. Mineola must be included. Yet many of these are almost self-sufficient; they have enough jobs to keep their workers off the trains. So that their housing problem is strictly local, and in most cases, due to the landlords monopoly, as acute as in greater New York.

In most of the Long Island communities, I found the average wage to be $30, and in Flushing $32. The average rental is $44, and in Flushing $48. These are figures that will need a lot of legislative seasoning before they can be stomached by Mr. Average Citizen.

In Jersey, due to the number of girls that commute, I believe, the average is only $27, while the average rental is $39. These figures are corroborated by a railroad company's survey. And in Jersey, it must be remembered, except for a few instances, the living conditions rival those of New York's cheaper districts.

Suburban New Yorker Hard Hit.

The suburban New Yorker is getting a dirty deal. He spends much of his time travelling to avoid the noise, dangers, hustle and bustle, living standards, and rentals of the big city. And the suburban landlord is trying, without much organizational backing, to frame him up with these undesirables.

The housing problem, it will be easily seen, is not merely plaguing greater New York. The suburbs are in for a few headaches, too.

Uruguayan Fliers Lost.

MADRID, Spain, March 3.—All available vessels and aeroplanes were ordered out today by the Spanish government to search the waters between the African coast and the Canary Islands for Major Larre-Borges and his companions, Uruguayan fliers who have been missing since yesterday.

FROM PUBLICITY ATTACKS WORKER

Raves Over Communist Press at Labor Council

Smarting under the lash of publicity, Ernest Bohm, manager of the Bookkeepers' and Stenographers' Union, rose on the floor of the Central Trades and Labor Council last night and tried to explain away the charge made by The DAILY WORKER that gangsters were present at the expulsion of 21 militant members of his union at the meeting last Monday.

Says Daily Worker Lied.

Bohm's defense was that those present, gangsters and all, evidently had cards in his union. He said that many of the Daily was lying.

This is the second attack in the C. T. L. C. on The DAILY WORKER by reactionary labor officials. The first was two weeks ago, when Matthew Woll delivered a spread-eagle speech against it, on the occasion of the expulsion from the council of some of its best members.

Woll Was Exposed.

Woll was shortly thereafter caught, and publically castigated by James Manrer, head of the Federation of Labor of Pennsylvania for co-operating with the bosses to defeat old age pension laws.

At the beginning of the meeting John Coughlin, secretary of the body, announced that he had received two communications. One from Otto Schachtman, president of International Furriers' Union, and the other from an organization "that has no standing with this body." No direct reference was made to the resolution sent the council from the furriers' Cooper Union meeting.

A motion was passed to refer both of them to the executive board, instructing that body to co-operate with the anti-hunting committee of the A. F. of L. appointed by President Green, consisting of Matthew Woll, Edward McGrady and Hugh Frayne. Frayne and McGrady were both present at the meeting.

Delegates Help Passaic.

John Marshall, representing the United Textile Workers of Passaic, was given the floor to sell tickets for the motion picture of the Passaic strike being shown at the Waldorf Theatre this coming Sunday. The council bought $15 worth of tickets and many members who were present bought additional ones.

Joseph Ryan, Jerome Keeting and J. W. Costello were appointed as a the hearing on injunctions to be held committee to represent the council at at Albany next Tuesday.

Librarians Start Discussion.

Miss Malone, representing the Librarians' Union, asked for assistance in their struggle against the politicians of Queens who have discharged two members of the union for appearing before a hearing at Albany that was taking up the question of wage increases.

After a lengthy discussion in which many delegates participated a motion was passed to refer the entire matter to the executive council for consideration. This motion was introduced by Abraham Lefkowitz of the Teachers' Union.

A tendency not to press the question too far was noticeable. Secretary Coughlin admitted that politicians were riding roughshod in Queens in relation to the libraries but opposed appealing to the mayor "because it might have a poor effect on future questions that we will take up with them.

1500 Dressmakers Hear Encouraging Report

The fact that the reactionary officials had just expelled them all over again on Wednesday night was not even seriously considered by the workers. They discussed only the work of the union, and what must be done to protect the workers against the attacks of the reactionary International officials, and to maintain union conditions in the shops.

Right Wing Fails.

It was a meeting full of enthusiasm and determination, and a dramatic contrast to a meet which the right wing attempted to call for nomination of officers" last week, where it is reported that 992 people appeared, and even in that number there were only a handful of dressmakers.

The chairman of last night's meeting was Rose Wortis, and the speakers were Louis Hyman, general manager of the Joint Board of the cloak and dressmakers, Julius Portnoy, manager of Local 22; I. Weissberg and H. Koretz.

Meeting at Workers Center Will Protest Deportations

A mass meeting of protest against the deportation of political refugees is being held in the Workers Center, 62 Liberty Avenue, Brooklyn, Friday, March 4th at 8 p. m.

Prominent speakers will be present. All workers are invited to attend. Protect your fighters. Demand the right of asylum.

DEFENSE BAZAAR; LABOR UNIONS PARTICIPATING

Preparatory to the annual bazaar of the International Labor Defense to be held in Star Casino, 107th Street and Park Avenue on March 10-13, a special delegate meeting was held in the Ukrainian Hall, at which forty labor organizations were represented. Very satisfactory results have been obtained up to date to make this bazaar a huge success. It was reported that twenty-eight (28) booths have been taken by the following organizations: Millinery Workers; Capmakers; I. L. G. W. U.; Working Women's Council, 2 Rochester Unity House; Hungarian Women's Council Group; Workers (Communist) Party and DAILY WORKER. Also the following I. L. D. Branches; Cheeho-Slovak; Bronx; Germa... 2 booths); Passaic; Greek; Brownsville; Oriental; Polish; Lithuanian; Russian; Armenian; Staten Island; Branch 82 and New York District.

Bishop Brown is having a special booth for which Mrs. Brown has made some splendid articles.

Other booths will have beautiful handpainted shawls which are now in the rage. Dainty importations from Russia; a valuable collection of drawings and paintings from renowned American artists including Grooper and Gellert will be featured. Rare vases with the seasons flowers will give a pleasant fragrance and will contribute greatly to the success of the affair.

4-B to Multiply Work.

Subsection 4-B, New York City—"The members of Subsection 4-B of the Workers (Communist) Party learned with a great shock the death of the leader of the American revolutionary forces of this country, Comrade Ruthenberg. It was decided unanimously that we are going to multiply our work in the struggle in which Comrade Ruthenberg fought and died."

STRIKE THE SHOP WHEN BECKERMAN FINES A WORKER

Amalgamated Terrorist Sternly Rebuffed

A severe blow to Abraham Beckerman's terrorist rule in the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' Union, was given yesterday when all workers in the shop of M. Kulok, 39-41 Eldridge Street, came out on strike in protest against the union's removal of one of the workers from his job, and the imposing of heavy fines on him and several other members of the shop.

Beckerman Fined Him.

Because he had attended a "left wing" meeting several weeks ago, M. Littman was taken off the job by Beckerman and was also fined fifty dollars. A number of members of his shop came out on strike last week in protest, and on Monday, five of them were brought before a committee of the union and were fined $25 apiece.

Whole Shop Struck.

Yesterday the entire shop stopped work, and defying Beckerman and all his gangsters, refused to go back to their jobs and to continue the strike until Littman is reinstated.

This is the workers' answer to Beckerman's attempts to crush all progressive thought in their union. His rule by force must be ended, and the strike of the Kulok shop is an important blow for freedom.

Ruthenberg Told Judge of Capitalists Meaning of Word "Expropriation"

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

YOU use an unusual word there, the word 'expropriate'."

It was the infamous Judge Weeks speaking. Our Comrade Ruthenberg was on the witness stand in the New York court room of the capitalist inquisition.

Ruthenberg was on trial with I. E. Ferguson, charged with violating the criminal anarchy law of New York State in that they were alleged to have been instrumental in issuing the manifesto of the left wing of the socialist party that had held a national conference in New York City, June 21-24, 1919.

Thus the judicial larkey of the exploiters, who insisted on sitting as trial judge in spite of the fact that an affidavit of prejudice had been filed against him, recognized that something unusual was taking place in the land. Workers were earnestly and sincerely advocating a definite program for the abolition of capitalism. The judge was correct in his viewpoint.

Throughout the whole history of the socialist party there had prevailed the opinion among large sections of the socialist movement that the way to end capitalism was to buy it out. That view had been urged by many prominent members of the socialist party, then as now.

Sketch of C. E. Ruthenberg at one of the several trials in which he appeared as a witness for Communism.

It was from the left wing of the socialist party, inspired by the Bolshevik revolution in Russia, and later organized as the American section of the Communist International, that capitalism received its first clear challenge, that made it sit up and take notice.

There was Ruthenberg, the champion of Communism, and Judge Weeks, the spokesman, as the same time the jury, judge and prosecutor of capitalism, facing each other in the capitalist court room. Thus did our comrade Ruthenberg, so suddenly taken from us, appear as one of the first symbols of the more conscious struggle of the American working class against its capitalist oppressor.

Ferguson is a lawyer and throughout the case acted as one of the Communist counsel. It was he who asked Ruthenberg the question:

"I would like to ask you to explain in the phrase there. When the workers take possession of the means of production, as you have now used it?"

Ruthenberg answered, "Yes. The view of the socialist, the left wing socialist, was that, with the establishment of a working class state, that state would proceed to expropriate the present owners of industry and establish social ownership of industry."

Then Judge Weeks, referred to as "The Court" in the record of the trial, hurriedly interjected:

"You use an unusual word there, the word 'expropriate.' / What do you understand to be the meaning of that word and what is the meaning of it as you use it?"

Ruthenberg's answer was: "I understand the meaning of the word 'expropriate' to be the taking by the state, the existing government, of certain property necessary for the whole of society, and transferring the ownership from individuals to that state or government."

Further extracts from the record show that Comrade Ruthenberg and Judge Weeks fought it out this way:

"By the Court:

"Q. Does that mean with or without compensation to the present owners? A. It would mean without compensation.

"Q. So that when the word 'expropriate' is used in the socialist program, you, as a student of socialism, understand it to mean to take private property without compensation? A. Yes.

"Q. Does that view of yours, that theory of yours, contemplate the person from whom it was taken without compensation, and who is not himself a worker, should become a part or should have the full powers in connection with the state of voting in that new state, of voting and holding office? A. My personal view would be that during the transition period, that those who did not render service to society in the form of useful labor, would very likely be excluded from the suffrage, although that is not necessarily a condition to the existence of that transition period.

"Q. You say that is your view. Isn't that the view that is exploited by the socialist party? A. It is not the view exploited by the socialist party.

"Q. By the left wing of the socialist party? A. The general position of the left wing or the Communists is that during the transition period there would exist a dictatorship of the proletariat, with the exclusion from the suffrage of those who refused to participate in the new society by rendering useful service. However, that is not necessarily a condition to the existence of the dictatorship of the proletariat, for such an authority on the subject as Lenin has stated that it is not necessary to exclude the exploiters from the suffrage in order that a dictatorship might exist.

"Q. But they are excluded from the suffrage under the Soviet form of government in Russia? A. They are.

Then Ferguson asked Ruthenberg what he meant by the "dictatorship of the proletariat" to which our comrade replied:

"I mean the domination and the control of the government by the working class as it is now dominated and controlled by the capitalist class."

Which excited Judge Weeks some more. He asked:

"Q. You say domination and control of the government. What government? If the dictatorship of the proletariat is in control of the government, are they controlling an existing government or a new government? A. It is my view that the working class will establish a government in a form that will be suitable to the exercise of the working class power; that is, the form of government will very likely be the Soviet form of government."

Thus Ruthenberg, the Communist, courageously set forth the theories and practices that the leaders of the socialist party had turned their backs on during the whole history of the American socialist movement. This was the program of greater American working class struggle in harmony with the triumphant Bolshevik revolution. It is the program that American labor will adopt to achieve its own victory.

A Can of Spice Does

By JOEL SHOMAKER

A long time ago there lived a big fish known as the shark. The shark family kept house in the oceans of water that covered most of the surface of the earth. As those waters have a depth of about two miles the sharks had plenty of room for colonizing.

The shark family grew in numbers and became masters of the deep. Man has not been able to count the millions of vicious sharks. Some are known as cow-sharks, others are classed as bull-head sharks and many wear the plain title of dog-fishes.

The shark is a sleek member of the royal tribes of the deep. It lives by devouring others. It does not have to worry about the next meal for the waters are generally kept in motion by schools of little fish. The shark does not keep a record of meals.

Man has always been afraid of the carnivorous shark family. He avoids the swimming holes, where sharks congregate, and tries to remain on the land as much as possible. The man-eating shark does not hesitate to take the life of a man and satisfy appetite.

A few years ago the World War was on the screens of the picture shows of the earth. The masters of finance were much troubled over the matter of feeding the multitudes. For the young men were facing cannons and the old men were unable to work.

The spirit of commercialism had to be kept at high tension. The man with money wanted more wealth. He was the day of the future millionaire. So something had to be done to boost prices on the common necessities of the overworked and starving people.

Some wise man, holding down the swing of a swivel chair, suggested the idea of utilizing the food fishes of the oceans. He pounced upon the dog-fish—one of the lowest of the sharks—as a possible table delicacy for the human family.

The dog-fish is listed as a shallow water scavenger. It swims along the beaches and collects the garbage and animal refuse from land and sea. It is the under-water gull of the sea and buzzard of the shore. It is one of the unclean fishes.

Man decided to commercialize the stinking dog-fish. The fish were caught in traps and seines and on hooks tied to set lines. The catch went to fish canneries, where the flesh was cooked and put in tin cans, to be marketed as a new fish.

One day I discovered a group of men tasting a fresh food. A salesman, with a glib tongue, was extolling the virtues of the fish. Men would dip small toothpicks into the prepared mess, lift a morsel to their lips and carefully taste the stuff.

"Have a smack of the new food," called a well-dressed man I knew as a growing capitalist making profits on the labors of working men.

"I am always ready to look into the merits of anything new," was my reply, as I grasped a small toothpick. "What's this stuff?" the man with big progress in front of his eyes, volunteered. "It will make a good cheap food for the working man."

"What is nothing but dog-fish," I almost shouted. "I have caught those fellows by the hundreds. The only use I have for them is to bury in the ground for fertilizing the soil."

"You will never get rich," sneered the man of wealth, as he started to turn and walk away in disgust.

"Your idea is to feed the working people on the dog-fish so that you and others of your class can amass fortunes by profiteering on the daily food necessities of humanity," I almost shouted in his face, for I was a little out of humor.

"Cut out all of that talk about the profiteering in the food of the working man," said the man with goggles, as he stamped a broad shoe and scowled at me, much the same as a wild animal. "We have two classes of people on this earth. One makes money and the other does not make anything. I am glad that I am able to make money. Money is the thing that talks."

"Glad to hear you talk as you act," I returned with much emphasis. "I do not possess wealth. I have lived for more than fifty years and at no time have I had an income of as much as two thousand dollars per year."

"You poor fool," grunted the animal that I classed as a man shark. "I understand you work seven days in the week, for one of the money-grabbing institutions of the city, and draw a salary of less than fifty dollars per month."

"I plead guilty," was my quick reply. "That is because of the sharks. You want me to exist by eating the carcass of a low dog-fish member of the man-eating shark family. When I am a few years older, I suppose you will favor sending my body into the sea, to be devoured by sharks that they may be made fat enough to slaughter and put in cans to feed the working people."

"No use of our talking any longer. Time is too precious," said the man as he started to move on. "I will say one thing more. There are two classes of people in this world. The one that makes the money is the only one that counts. You can go on with your writing, talking and speaking for the working people, but you will never get anywhere. You will live a poor man, die of starvation and be buried in the potter's field. The people you prattle about do not pay for labor. Money talks."

He shoved the can of dog-fish back to the inner edge of the glass case. The salesman put toothpicks into the prepared mess, lift a morsel to their lips and carefully taste the stuff.

"Have a smack of the new food," called a well-dressed man I knew as a growing capitalist making profits on the labors of working men.

Importance of Anti-Militarist Work

By P. FRANKFELD.

AMERICAN imperialism is today the most powerful, most ruthless and most feared imperialism in the world. American investments abroad total 25 billions of dollars. Greater and greater appropriations are voted every year by congress for military purposes. The CMTC's can now accommodate 35,000 each summer. The ROTC has 125,000 enrolled in its ranks. New and more deadly gases are being invented. In short as American imperialism grows and expands, militarism in America grows and expands proportionally.

Latter Day Signs.

The recent events in Nicaragua, the sending of marines and warships to intervene in the internal affairs of a small and weak nation in order to establish as president a puppet of Wall Street to protect its interests are indications of the accelerated trend of development of American imperialism.

The threatened war with Mexico to safeguard the interests of Standard Oil and Doheny, and the mobilization of forces to invade China as soon as American investments become endangered as a result of the victories of the nationalist revolutionary movement of China, are positive indications that American imperialism has adopted an aggressive policy.

Guns Make Empire.

Militarism is the product and handmaiden of imperialism. The war department of the U. S. government will begin to carry on its propaganda early this year in order to attract more young workers, especially to the CMTC. Last year, in spite of as intensive rampaign to get the "young people from all walks of life," i. e., young workers instead of students only, the number of young workers averaged less than 10% of the total attending. The camps will be advertised more extensively in the year than ever before and the help and co-operation of employers with the war department will be closer too.

Bringing It Home.

The campaign to increase young worker attendance at the camps will be brought right into the large shops and factories. Militarism will become a living, vital issue to the young workers who do not feel acutely the immediate effects of anything not concerning them either directly or indirectly. This will offer the splendid opportunity for the league to educate the masses of young workers to the real dangers of war and the purposes of militarism.

Anti-militarist Struggle.

The importance of carrying on a struggle against militarism in the U. S. cannot be over-estimated at this time. A struggle against militarism is a struggle against capitalism and imperialism. This struggle can be put on a broad basis because it involves thousands of young students, and we can reach them on this issue even if we cannot reach them on any other.

Present the Problem.

To the young workers we can present the problem in the following fashion: you receive $13, $14, $16 a week, work 50, 52, 54 hours a week under most unsanitary conditions; what interests have you in the 25 billions invested by Wall Street? Why should you fight against fellow workers in some other countries who are also exploited as you are?

To the student we must say: you are an integral part of the working class of America. You are in school to study, not to prepare for war. You will go back into the ranks of the working class after you have completed your education, and as a worker you have no interests to fight and die for in China, Mexico, Nicaragua, etc.

By presenting the problem in this way, we will be able to awaken the young workers and young students to the class basis of society, mobilize for a struggle against militarism against capitalism.

Prince Takes House.

PARIS, March 3.—Prince Carol has received no reply to his request of a week ago for safe conduct to Bucharest to visit his father, King Ferdinand, who is seriously ill.

Prince Carol, however, has received Colonel Baief, attached to the Roumanian household, who has submitted a project, originating with the royal family and the Roumanian government, to buy a house for Prince Carol's permanent home, either in France or Italy. Prince Carol has welcomed the offer and has asked that he may select a house in the outskirts of Paris.

Imperialism Talks Differently in the Orient Today.

That Telegraph Pole

MANY years ago, I stood before a monument in Damascus, smiled—and pondered.

It was a peculiar thing—that monument; a sort of Cleopatra's Needle of Modern Imperialism. Imagine, if you can, the upper half of a telegraph pole done in bronze, (without idealization, without embellishment) and set upon a pedestal in the public square for the happy contemplation of the enslaved populace!

Last year, when the papers were full of the accounts of war between French and Syrians, I remembered that monument. Monuments, it seems, even when cast in bronze, don't make imperialist rule permanent, but that one seemed especially a symbol of revolt.

The Arabs fought. Damascus, which was the capital of Sultan Pasha Atrash, brave leader of the astounding Druses, was lost to the French.

Natives were forced to surrender the city and with it, no doubt, the public square—the site of the bronze chastening rod—a rod of Science wherewith the absentee exploiters belabor and torment the native workers.

During those months last year, the Arabs suffered heavy losses, but they "punished the enemy" (had it but been in person!) severely.

The struggle for Syrian independence is not yet ended—although the battle of "Peaches" against "Daddy" Browning may crowd out of the news altogether the French-Syrian conflict.

Suffice it to say, the Syrians are still fighting their would-be saviors, the French Imperialists.

But what I set out to tell was not the story of the monument, nor the square, nor the defeat or victory of the French or the Arabs. What I meant to tell about was the stuff the Druse women are made of.

But if you've read about the monument, perhaps you'll read further.

It is said of the Arabs that all of them are born fighters, but of the Druses it is said they are the bravest and most formidable fighters of all the Arab tribes.

You can then imagine what the Druse women are like when you are told that the women of this tribe are braver and fiercer even than their men.

Last spring, at the height of the Syrian revolution, it was frequently reported that several battalions of women appeared in the ranks of the Druses, and fought as fiercely as the men. Batallions of Druse women also appeared in defense of the ancient city of Damascus which the French had bombarded and partly destroyed.

When the villages were attacked the women who were left behind took up arms and defended their homes. Once the French attacked a village ruled by a woman chieftain. She lost no moment but called together all the able-bodied women and men in the village, and led them, armed, to defend their homes against the imperialist invaders.

More than 30,000 Syrian lives were lost since the French were given the mandate over Syria.

During the world war, the Allies had promised Syria a native government if they came in on their side and helped them "lick the Turk." The Syrians accepted the bargain and did their share of the "licking," then found—to their sorrow, that there is no pledge made by a robber nation to a little nation that the robber nation is bound to respect—especially if the Capitalist League of Nations endorses the sentiment.

Since the League had given the French Imperialists the mandate over Syria, there have been twelve native rebellions against the invaders. And the women of the Druses—especially the Druses, have done their warrior-share.

The Syrian armies are said at present to be encamped in the wilds of the Lebanon Mountains. There each village on the crest of a hill is a citadel, and the Druse men and women are prepared to defend with their lives their right to freedom from imperialist domination.

Some day, the masses of Arabia will gather in the Square of Damascus to celebrate their true freedom—when a Soviet Syria will melt down that "chastening rod" of Imperialism to turn the metal to the beautiful uses of machinery of production, owned and controlled by the workers.

In that day, too, they will, perhaps, spare one small bit of the metal for a modest figurine—the fearless, intrepid Woman Warrior of the Druses.

TO THOSE WHO DARE

(Dedicated to Sarah Victor on March 11th, 1927.)

Out of seconds,—tiny bits of Time,
Centuries arise in awe or in grace,
But who's to count the years of One who chimes
With Liveliness in Life whatever there's to face?—

Not I. Yet, let Time's chisel cut the bone and flesh away,
The Years remain more carvings in the air.
My Song of Life and Love and of their mighty sway
To those erect,—to those who dare.

Six or seven years ago the people of the United States in their sovereign wisdom had passed a law forbidding the sale of alcoholic liquor for beverage purposes. But the advocates of law and order reserve to themselves the privilege of deciding which laws they will obey, and the prohibition act is not among them. All ruling class America celebrates its political victories by getting drunk. Bunny knew how it was, having got drunk himself four years ago when President Harding had been elected; he could smile appreciatively when the announcer of QXJ tripped over his syllables—"Thass not polite now, Polly, quit your shovin' this microhiecrophone!"

The householder next door was a workingman, or clerk, or such humble being, denied the royal privilege of breaking the law at ten dollars a quart for gin and thirty for champagne. But he could sit here till after midnight, and turn from one studio to another, and enjoy a series of vicarious jags. "Radio VXZ, the main dining-room of the Admiralty Hotel." A chanteuse from the Grand Guignol in Paris was singing a ballad, and you could hear the laughter of those who understood the obscenity, and those who pretended to understand it, and those who were too drunk to understand anything but how to laugh. Bunny was there in his mind, because it was in this dining-room that he had been drunk, and Dad had been drunk, and Vee Tracy and Annabelle Lamee and Vernon Rocco—and Harvey Manning sound asleep in his chair, and Tommy [illegible] table, and having to be kept from fighting the waiters. The Voodoo Orgy of Election

"Loud Speaker" Is Biting Satire on American Political Fakery—and Then Some

Reviewed by HARBOR ALLEN.

GEORGE Jean Nathan says the Cahill trouble with the New York stage is the lack of intelligent critics. If you read the reviews in the newspapers on John Howard Lawson's "Loud Speaker" (playing at the New Playwrights Theatre, West 52nd St.) you will agree with him. One of them finds the play "vague." Another refers to the constructivist setting as "just a distracting thicket of bright green stairways running in every direction." A third grows excited over the oratory of actors on chutes; people don't do that in real life! Still another finds Lawson "overshrieking his match."

There is nothing "vague" about "Loud Speaker." The "distracting thicket of bright green stairways" is intelligible enough if you have a little imagination. The materials from which the play is drawn are so commonplace and so American that almost everybody but a professional dramatic critic can understand and enjoy them. If comedy means to you the part handling of a tea-cup by a gentleman in a frock coat, "Loud Speaker" will be "overshrieking its match." But if you are revolutionist, if you like good coarse burlesque, flashing satire and snappy action, you will be neither puzzled nor bored by this play.

"Loud Speaker" is a satirical epic on American fakery. Every American fake is here. Fake religion, fake eminence, fake politics, fake news, fake women, the fake "younger generation," fake booze, fake newspaper confessions, fake radio speeches. The clothing beauty parechaart, the sob sister, the tabloid reporter, the political campaign manager, the black bottom dancer, the amorous coupie exchanging battery songs in the spotlight; all, all are here, the old familiar faces. Elke Faragoh, author of "Pinwheel," Lawson has drawn his material from the tabloids. Highbrows sniff. They find him vulgar, commonplace, not quite refined. Once too they sniffed at jazz and at the movies. But that was before Gilbert Seldes wrote his "Seven Lively Arts." Nobody from the Dial has yet come along to proclaim the tabloid the eighth lively art.

"Loud Speaker" tells of the rise to fame of Henry U. Collins, "a good man." Having salted away his millions, Henry has political aspirations on a "return to decency" platform. While his wife dabbles in religious balum, his manager issues advice on bootleggers, his daughter experiments in "flaming youth," his house is overrun with reporters, and his 1903 bathing beauty dream girl emerges from an Atlantic City past, Henry becomes New York's "tabloid governor." He does it with bunk.

Nobody before has done the voodoo orgy of an American election the justice it is done in this farce. Elections must have been crying out for just such a farce. You wonder how it could have been passed up.

All this is mounted on the first Russian constructivist setting used in America. The Actors Theatre posed at constructivism in "God Loves Us." The Neighborhood Playhouse gave it a careful bath (one has to debunk these immigrants, you know) in "Processional." The Playwrights give it full play. To me it was a revelation. The stage suddenly acquired new dimensions, new spaciousness. It became a sort of circus. Scenes dovetail, actors flow from one episode into another. You see three color windows, go upstairs, see three things, shoot down, form strangely new and exciting pictures. With constructivism a new rush of physical action stirs a paralyzed stage. It's the sort of setting a Shakespeare or a Schiller would have reveled in. The drawing room boys won't like it. It's too big, too new; It isn't "four walls and a ceiling" (one of them complains); it has to be used with some imagination; it offers too many unexpected corners, corners in which you have to do something besides sit and talk in the fashionable pose of the moment on the fashionable topic of the moment. No wonder they didn't know what it was. No wonder they thought it "just a distracting thicket of stairways." To me "Loud Speaker" is worth seeing if only to see how constructivism smashes the flatness of the stage.

Let us grant that "Loud Speaker" is not a great play, that it is thin in some places and must be cut in others. It still remains lively, biting entertainment. What I want to know is this: Why do critics who indio out indulgent reviews to fifty boilerplate shows now running on Broadway pour such ill-concealed venom over "Loud Speaker!" Is it true, what I was told some time ago, that they have been "laying for" this new theatre of five young radical playwrights? Is it because "Loud Speaker" bites, because it doesn't make compromises, because it hits a rotten thing squarely on the head instead of toying with it gracefully, as a gentleman should? Is it because Lawson, for all his pure art theories, here comes down to the forum with straight propaganda? Because he says our governors are asses and our "Miss Americas" whores?

And why do they get so hot about it?Ti, these playboys to whom heat is the ultimate vice? Well, why do critics always get hot about a new and penetrating idea? Why do they get hot about new art and new music? Why did they call Shaw "offal" and ahower Ibsen with tomatoes? Ask me another.

SATURDAY, MARCH 5, 192 — ALEX BITTELMAN, Editor

EDITOR'S NOTES

By ALEX BITTELMAN

WE do not know definitely what the outcome will be of the "War Game" now taking place around the Panama Canal, but it is safe to assume that, among other things, new arguments will be discovered in favor of Coolidge's so-called disarmament schemes.

The theory of the Panama war game deserves a little consideration. What is it?

It is assumed that an Asiatic power called the Orange, bound by a treaty with a European power called the Black, are making a combined attack on the Panama Canal from the Atlantic and Pacific sides. The task of the game is to repulse this attack.

True that this innocent looking game is earnest preparation for the grim business of real war, one has got only to put actual reality into camouflaged imagery. Call the imaginary Asiatic power by name and you get Japan instead of Orange. Do the same with its imaginary ally, the European power, and you get England instead of Black. And what have you got? You have got a vivid forecast of the coming world war for the mastery of the Pacific between American imperialism on the one hand and England and Japan on the other.

The commander of the canal zone forces, Brig. Gen. Charles Martin, in a statement to the press, said the following:

> All conditions of actual warfare are being simulated, even the espionage system. The international situation is growing worse hourly and the canal is expecting to be attacked from the Pacific by the Asiatic-Orange (Read: Japanese—A. B.) forces. The attitude of the Blacks (Read: English—A.B.) is quite puzzling. Both the Blues (Red: American—A.B.) and Blacks seemingly do not wish to consider the situation acute, yet the hitherto courteous policy of the Blacks has changed to a cool curtness. The recent note from the Blacks to the Blue state department can easily be construed as an ultimatum, or at least a finality.

Exactly. This is how the thing is going to happen. And while we are being lulled with "prosperity," preparations are going on for the bloodiest war the world has ever gone through. It is time that the American labor movement wake up to this danger.

THE outstanding event in the life of the sixty-ninth congress was undoubtedly its handling of so-called farm relief measures. The critical condition of American agriculture, the deep dissatisfaction of the farmers together with the aggressive stand of various farmer organizations were instrumental in compelling congress to pay attention to the farmers' problems.

Labor, on the other hand, can not even claim that much. Labor did not figure at all in the deliberations of the last session of congress. And the reason for this was that labor as a class failed to struggle politically.

Primitive as the farmers' struggles were, insufficent as was their program and the basically wrong tactics of the Farm Bloc, yet on the whole they waged a political fight which at least compelled attention. What has the official labor leadership accomplished during the same period?

It is true that the McNary-Haugen bill, which was the bone of contention in the last congress, is totally inadequate to meet the present needs of the toiling and poor farmers. At best the measures contained in the bill would relieve somewhat the pressure upon the well-to-do farmers, leaving the exploited mass of them precisely where they were. To really improve the conditions of these masses much more sweeping and radical measures would be necessary, and for these the farming masses must organize to struggle.

It is also obvious that the tactics of the farm bloc in congress were basically wrong. The alliance between the farm bloc and the elements representing the bankers and financiers carried over the top the McFadden bill in which the bankers were interested, but failed to get Coolidge's signature for the McNary-Haugen bill in which the farm bloc was interested. In plain language, the leaders of the farm bloc were fooled. They showed lack of political maturity and a completely wrong outlook when they based their tactics on the expectation that the banking interests will stand by the farm relief measures to the end.

The alliance that will help the farmers is an alliance with labor AGAINST banking capital instead of with it. Herein lies the lesson of the farmer bloc's recent experience.

However, there is a lesson in this for labor also. The first question that forces itself to the front is: Where is the labor bloc in congress? Why hasn't the working class and the labor movement a group of senators and congressmen to function as a bloc in the name and in the interests of labor?

We do not mean to imply by this that the present farm bloc is all that the farmers need. Nor are we of the opinion that the present policies and tactics of the farm bloc are in any way adequate ready to serve the interests of the toiling and poor farmers. Far from that. To become truly representative of the farming masses, the farm bloc must thoroughly radicalize its program, break with and wage a real struggle against the old capitalist parties and orientate itself definitely on an alliance with the working class. But with all this in mind we still maintain that the so-called crowned and official leadership of our labor movement is even more backward than the official leadership of the farmer movements. And we therefore continue to press the question: Where is our labor bloc in congress?

About the only willing concession that big capital would make the farmers if the latter press hard enough is to sacrifice Coolidge. Lowden and vice-president Dawes are already in the offing. Both of these worthies have been trimming themselves for the republican nomination. Both have "championed" the McNary-Haugen bill, and Lowden even took a trip to Scandinavia to study agricultural conditions there.

We know of nothing that would recommend either of these two gentlemen as a friend of the farmers any more than we could recommend Coolidge, despite the fact that Lowden is supposed to be a "dirt" farmer and Dawes is known to be a "dirt" something else. However, the boom is on and who will undertake to forecast the result. One thing is certain that if the tide runs too high against Coolidge, big capital will not hesitate a minute to throw him overboard, since there are so many others willing to serve who could be used more conveniently to fool and exploit the masses.

Last week's condition on the London stock exchange was rather erratic, according to capitalist financial experts. No wonder, since the world situation of British capitalism is erratic, too.

The Chinese market is slipping fast and the Russian market may go the same way if the "die-hards" in the British cabinet prevail. One may say that the decline of British capitalism and its world power is beginning seriously to affect the minds of English statesmen. Nothing illustrates this better than the truly stupid way in which the Soviet Union is being threatened, villified and attacked every day.

"Blame it on the Bolsheviks" seems to have become the alpha and omega of British capitalist statesmanship. Anything that goes wrong — and nothing seems to go right with British capitalism now-a-days—is blamed on the Soviet Union. The obvious intention of the British government is to shift responsibility for its own failures and incidentally to mobilize sentiment in favor of its criminal conspiracies against the peace of the world and for war against the Soviet Union.

At last the Supreme Court of the United States felt compelled, for reasons best known to themselves, to affirm the cancellation of the oil land leases and contracts awarded dishonestly to Edward L. Doheny by Albert B. Fall during the latter's regime as secretary of the interior. It would seem from this that it was no longer possible to cover up the downright robbery of the people's wealth perpetrated by the oil magnates—the same fellows who are now driving us into war with Mexico—in combination with leading men in the American government.

Says the opinion of the Supreme Court:

> The facts and circumstances disclosed by the record show clearly that the interests and influence of Fall as well as his official action were corruptly secured by Doheny for the making of the contracts and leases . . . that the consummation of the transaction was brought about by means of collusion and corrupt conspiracy between Fall and Doheny.

Quite outspoken, isn't it? And an interesting phase of the whole business is that practically the same statement holds true with regard to the infamous Teapot Dome oil lease held by Harry F. Sinclair.

And now who are the fellows who refuse to recognize the Mexican land laws, who are plundering Mexico even more violently than they do the United States? Precisely the same people. In his reply to the inquiry of Senator Borah, for which the Coolidge administration is now trying to cook up something against the senator from Idaho, President Calles of Mexico says that the people who refuse to recognize the Mexican law are the companies controlled by the Standard Oil of Indiana, Edward L. Doheny and Harry F. Sinclair. These are the fellows for the sake of whose profits Kellogg and Coolidge would have the American people go to war with Mexico.

Mesaba Impressions

By JOSEPH KALAR

A MOTLEY assortment of children streaming to school, Slovenians, Croatians, Roumanians, Finns, Italians and Russians, trudging trustfully to the potent fount of education to learn to be better Americans than their parents, stop and examine with awe the colossal piles of iron ore, a conglomerate pin-wheel of colors, yellow, red, and orange. Often they would stop and fill their pockets with the ore and then get one hell of a pounding when they got home. It made very good chalk. The watchman, if he saw them, would shout out, "Hey there, you damned bohunks, get the hell away from there!"

After they got to school they would steal some paper and draw. They were furnished with pencils, by the city, but they always preferred the ore chalk, especially the red. In a way it was symbolical, though they never knew that then. They would draw grotesque men, with big bellies and round heads with the red chalk. They called them Papa, or Uncle Mike, or Grandpa. They were too young then to know that there papas might be brought home any day, crushed, groaning, and red with blood.

A man we all knew well and who was damned good to us kids got killed one day. The papers called it an "unfortunate accident." It just happened that the shaft caved in. He sure was hurt some. I guess he only lived long enough to taste the iron ore in his mouth. Anyway his neck was all twisted to hell, his legs were broken, and hi; bloody guts hung over the tops of his trousers.

My folks went to see the wife of the man. A nice town, eh? Wife and kids left without an old man, he having been brought home with his insides all out of him. It was a very nice house, too, nice pictures on the wall. There was one showing an old guest with a sheep in his arms on which it said, "The Lord is my Shepherd. Another one showed this same guest on the cross, and it said He Died for Man.

When I left, the old lady and kids were bawling to beat all Christ. I couldn't help but howl myself, for I was only eight years old then.

I had an uncle, Mike his name was, who wouldn't work in the mines anymore. He had worked long enough and I suppose he figured that it was time he took a lay-off. He hummed around on freight cars and came home and said, believe me it sure is tough humming around. Don't get anything to eat half the time. Yes, Joe, he would say, laying his hand on my shoulder, you gotta work to get along in this world. And then the next thing we would know he would be off again, digging ditches in a mucky mine International Falls. When he came back he got a job bartending for Agnich, in Eveleth, where my father always bought his beer. My father would ask him why he wouldn't work in the mines anymore. Mike would just say: "to hell with it!" Well he got sick, and being bartender didn't help him any. T. B. it was. They would tell Mike to go to a doctor, or see the priest anyway. Mike would cough and say: "to hell with it!"

Well, he got worse and worse. Sure, he said, I'll go and see the sawbones. He would go out and spend the day in the saloon, come home and say, the doc says I'm all right. He coughed more and more, and each time he coughed a bloody piece of his lung would go plunk in the spittoon. He did go to a sanitarium after he wasn't able to walk anymore. I guess when the docs told him he was going to kick the bucket, he says, between the couch: "well, to hell with it!"

You smug bosses, when you've stepped on a man's foot so long that he says: "well, to hell with it!" look out. And Mike, you bohunk, you were a piece. I give you my love. I didn't understand you then, thought you were a little bughouse, but I see it now.

Every Sunday after church a lot of the miners come over to our house. Well, we got by this time. The uncle re held up pretty good. Then they would drink.

But Christ, I don't know as how you can blame them, working in the shafts and expecting any minute to have the wall cave in on you and miss your guts with the rest and see your pals, with whom you came over from the old country, carried home, bleeding and groaning, Jesus, Jesus.

Saturday night coming around, another week. Well, well, we got by this time, eh? Let's celebrate eh?

The Mesabe strike. No wonder our pay check is fat and the rest of the good American say, "Keep those damned foreigner out of the country. The dirty bastards, don't know when they've got a good thing. Too inflammable. T. N. T. Any damned long whiskered agitator can run them up to russia—hell. We want American for the Americans. We Yordlies, be Lord! we're the solid men. You can't make us think with our stomachs. Those damned bohunks and wops, christ you can even call them s. o. b's before they want to stick you." What the hell kind of a country is this, anyway, where a man can't even tell another man what he is. Haven't our ancestors fought for the freedom of speech?

To the fellow Slovenians, Croats, Finns, Wops, Russians, my love. By God you showed that that your blood was redder than the iron ore, eh?

To my dear friends, the bosses and owners, the manufacturers and stock-keepers, my love. You are doing wisely when you keep a bohunk's belly full of food. You sure got the grey matter.

I say this just because I remember only too well my days on the Mesaba Range, when I was a little tough, and my mother sent me after beans for the dog to make soup out of, and the mines shut down.

Mine-watch the iron ore stick, muttering "what the hell, men, what the h ll?"

The Four Power Conference

By S. YAVORSKY (Moscow)

WE should indeed be hopelessly blind, if we failed to observe the extraordinary increase of British diplomatic activity in the last few weeks or failed to estimate the importance and aims of this activity as they deserve. It is possible that we are now on the eve of very far-reaching steps or decisions.

The increasing vigor noticeable of late in the campaign of the conservative party in Great Britain, which is striving more eagerly than ever to characterize the organization of the Chinese revolution and its logical connection with the Soviet Union, must be described as an attack on the latter of more than ordinary significance. It is not only the "Morning Post" that now repeats daily that "the real enemy of Great Britain is neither the Chinese in general nor the Kuomintang, but Moscow"; also the "Daily Telegraph," which can generally be trusted to reproduce the attitude of the British foreign office fairly accurately, is now, as we see by telegrams, violently attacking the Soviet government for the latter's "open attempt to oust the British from China." In pretty much the same spirit, the influential "Times" constantly repeats that the key to the Chinese problem is to be found at Moscow.

Under circumstances such as these, the attempts of the British diplomats to arrange at least a temporary settlement of the relations between Great Britain and the Canton government and to avoid an open rupture, have necessarily assumed the form of an endeavor not to engage too deeply in Chinese affairs, so as to preserve full freedom of action in Europe. The unusual love of peace evinced by Great Britain in China is indeed altogether in keeping with the energetic work of British diplomacy towards the creation of favorable premises for the realization of Chamberlain's favorite idea, viz., that of forming a uniform anti-Soviet bloc out of the most prominent European powers, with the small states bordering on Soviet Russia as outposts.

To speak of the work of British diplomacy in the Baltic countries, in Poland and Roumania, would mean repeating a series of well-known facts. One need but recognize the substantial success of this work during the past year in the successful fascist revolutions in Poland and Lithuania. Nor is there a lack of foundation in the statements made by the "Daily Herald," the organ of the British labor party, in regard to the preparations for a similar upheaval in Latvia.

If in any of the Baltic states, a democratic petty-bourgeois government still feels relatively safe, it is only because it can count on the support of France, of which, indeed, it makes full use in counteracting the influence of Great Britain on the fascist organizations. The rivalry between Great Britain and France hampers the freedom of action of British diplomacy like a dead weight.

So as to be able to manoeuvre more freely, imperialist Great Britain must either disarm France and cost it from the European diplomatic theatre, or else it must at any cost come to a temporary understanding with its French neighbor. The rapprochement between Great Britain and Italy, the celebration treaty between Italy and Germany, the armed threat directed by Italy against France, and the recent understanding between Italy against the recent understanding established between Italy and Albania, which so effectually showed France's impotence in the Balkans, were all events which were directly or indirectly aided and abetted by Great Britain and supported to convince France of its complete incapability to cope with Great Britain in Europe, and on the other hand of the fact that even in the most serious affairs Great Britain could quite well manage without French support. These manoeuvres are quite sufficiently elucidated by the observations of the "Daily Herald" on the subject of the conference arranged by Great Britain among the four leading European powers with a view to their cooperation in the settlement of the urgent problems of European politics.

As the "Daily Herald" quite rightly observes, such collaboration can only be secured so far as Germany and Italy are concerned, if the main claims of these two powers are satisfied. As regards Italy, this wishes of the Italian bourgeoisie long ceased to be a secret. Fascist imperialism insists on the acquisition of colonies. In this direction Germany is fully as much in Italy, and, however much the diplomats and publicists of the two countries may proclaim their love of peace, which according to them has led to the conclusion of the treaty of arbitration between their governments, there can be no manner of doubt but that the approach between Germany and Italy is based chiefly on the uniformity of the German and Italian colonial aspirations. On the condition of some colonial sacrifices on the part of France and Great Britain the latter could be sure of Italian cooperation in any possible British combination in the near future. The case of Germany is certainly a little more complicated.

The new German imperialism energetically demands that Germany be placed on the subject of colonial exploitation. But at the same time, and perhaps still more, it is interested in the question of seeing the Polish wedge extracted from out of the compact German territory. Without seriously risking the loss of its popularity, no German government can agree to a settlement with Poland, so long as East Prussia is divided from the rest of Germany by the Danzig corridor. A solution of the Danzig question is a necessary premise for any plan of the inclusion of Germany in the bloc to be formed against the Soviet Union. The diplomats of Great Britain therefore intend to attain by a new conference what they were unable to put through at Locarno, and on this occasion the question of a restoration of the territorial integrity of Germany in the east would necessarily have to be brought into intimate connection with the "settlement" of the relations between Poland and Lithuania. It is quite obvious that Poland could only be compensated for the loss of Danzig in an open or veiled annexation of Lithuania and thus also of the harbor of Memel.

If, however, Great Britain counts on creating the possibility of a successful isolation of the Soviet Union by "fascistizing" the Baltic states and satisfying the national aspirations of Germany, it is still somewhat difficult to understand what compensation it intends to offer to France for the latter's support of the British plans. In all conceivable cases, France would only be the one to pay for the losses incurred, without being able to derive any advantage from the enterprise. A participation in the Four-Power Conference, especially if in harmony with the plans of Great Britain, cannot but tend to strengthen the position of both Italy and Germany, and will, therefore, have just that result which the French nationalists most fear. At the same time, the colonial aspirations of the Italian and German imperialists run in the main only be satisfied at the cost of the colonial possessions and mandates of France. As regards final results, even supposing the anti-Soviet plans of Great Britain to succeed, the French bourgeoisie could at best be accord a very doubtful advantages of a financial nature, which at the cost of a certain degree of complaisance and good will could be attained even now without any particular sacrifice.

We must naturally not allow ourselves to be misled in regard to the feelings which the French bourgeoisie entertains towards the Soviet Union, but we can well doubt whether at the coming Four-Power Conference France will act in full harmony with Great Britain. At the same time, France is entering upon a period of serious, and probably of grave internal complications. Under such circumstances, France will hardly venture to take part in an enterprise which may result in the most serious consequences to itself. Without the participation of France, however, the conference is doomed to failure in advance, since in that case Great Britain loses its trump card, Germany, which could never be agreed without the consent of France.

The tasks of the diplomacy of the Soviet Union in the face of all these operations are perfectly clear, as are also the immediate tasks of the Communist Parties in the most important countries of Europe. The "grenade" campaign of the German social democrats and the full solidarity between them and the French socialists in their common attacks on the Soviet Union show that the danger of public opinion among the working masses is also not of the general program of the campaign conducted against the Soviet Union by British diplomacy. The reconference, however, between the present temporary work of the British imperialists and those operations which were conducted during the world war. In fon obvious not to cause the revolutionary sections of the working class to sound the alarm in due time and to take all such steps as may appear necessary.

"BREAKING CHAINS," VIVID RUSSIAN FILM TO BE SHOWN MARCH 27 AT NEW STAR CASINO

BROADWAY BRIEFS

The Civic Repertory Theatre announces its fifth month and over 150 performances of plays in repertory at the Fourteenth Street Theatre. Its record of production under the direction of Eva Le Gallienne is eight plays.

Ramsey Wallace, has has placed in rehearsal a new play by A. E. Thomas and George Agnew Chamberlain, titled "Lost" with its New York premiere early next month. The cast is headed by Ramsay Wallace and will include Mona Kingsley, James Crane, Zita Johann, Edward Van Sloan, Louise MacIntosh and Will H. Hayes.

The Shuberts are placing in rehearsal a new operetta by Emmerich Kalman called "The Circus Princess."

George Kelly, author of "Daisy Mayme," is taking a month's vacation in the West Indies. He is planning a new play to be called "Till the Day of Her Death."

Elmer Rice, author of "On Trial" and "The Adding Machine," has returned from Paris with a new play, "Helen and John." It is concerned with married life.

Jed Harris will try out "The Racket," a play about gunmen, in Chicago, the Spring. Bartlett Cormack, a newspaperman, wrote it.

Grace George has engaged Moffat Johnston to play the judge in her production of Sir James M. Barrie's "The Legend of Leonora," which opens in Washington March 14 and due here a fortnight later.

A. H. Woods' next production, an adaptation of "Au Premier de ces Messieurs," a Parisian farce, will be directed by Harry Wagstaff Gribble.

A. H. Woods' next production, an adaptation of "Au Premier de ces Messieurs," a Parisian farce, will be directed by Harry Wagstaff Gribble.

"Black Velvet" which had a run in Chicago, is to be presented here about March 14 by M. E. Nicholas, with Arthur Byron in the leading role. Willard Robertson wrote the play.

LARGOOD ARTICLE DELAYED

Francis Edwards Faragoh, author of "Pigs," and other of the Civic Repertory Theatre, has notified The DAILY WORKER that owing to added rehearsals he is unable to finish the article on the new drama in time to appear in the New Magazine Section of March 5.

The article will appear on March 12.

We look for his views on what will happen when American playwrights break up worn dramatic formulas to let in new light on American life.

For the benefit of the impoverished cloakmakers and furriers and their families, "Breaking Chains," a great Russian picture of the Soviet Union before the Revolution, will be shown on Sunday, March 27, at the New Star Casino, 107th St. and Park Avenue. The picture will be under the direct auspices of the International Workers Aid, which will donate the entire proceeds to the defense fund, so Chairman Hendrik Feldstein announced yesterday.

Vivid Russian Scenes.

"Breaking Chains," which has been shown only twice before in America, is a thrilling story of events in a tiny Russian village after the revolution. It combines the action of great masses of people with the story of one peasant girl's development from an unthinking careless child, easily led by the more ambitious son of a wealthy family, to a woman of mature understanding, fully aware of the changes in Russian society and looking to be a part of the great mass movement of Communism.

Pictures of the life of "aristocratic" expatriates in Paris are interestingly contrasted with the vigorous, healthy development of the loyal Russians. A high-light of the drama is an actual picture of Lenin speaking to a mass meeting. The news of his death, carried from the home town by a rider on horseback, is one of the most moving scenes of the play, revealing the sorrow of simple people over the death of the great Lenin.

Workers as Actors.

"Breaking Chains," is a real proletarian moving picture. All but four of its large cast are actual working people, not professional actors trained in artificiality. The few professionals used in the making of the picture have blended their art into a direct technique that results in a fine and moving performance.

Every worker will want to see this picture, and the I. W. A. has arranged for several showings during the afternoon and evening of March 27. It is expected that at least 10,000 people will view it on that day. Tickets will be sold by workers and organizations and will be fifty cents if bought in advance. Seventy-five cents will be charged at the door.

Help the imprisoned cloakmakers and furriers and see this great Russian picture.

"Collette," a new musical comedy, is to play Brooklyn the week of March 11 and opens here the following week. Charles T. Abramson and Paul M. Trebitsch are sponsoring the adaptation from the German of Jacobson. Bodansky and Robert Stolz. Joseph J. Garren is doing the book and lyrics. Dwight Ellinger, Gertrude Vanderbilt, Allan Prior and Victor Morley will play leading roles.

The New Plays

MONDAY

"INHERITORS," by Susan Glaspell, opening Monday evening at the 14th St. Theatre, will be the eighth and last production of this season of the Civic Repertory Players. Josephine Hutchinson will have the leading role of "Madeline Morton". Others in the cast are Egon Brecher, Leona Roberts, Sayre Crawley, Eva La Gallienne, Harold Moulton, Ruth Wilson, Robert F. Ross and Alan Birmingham. The play has been directed by Eva La Gallienne.

"HOT" DESPERATE PILOT," a new play by Zoe Akins is scheduled for Monday evening at the Morosco Theatre under the management of Rachel Crothers and Mary Kirkpatrick. The principals are Helen Ware, Miriam Hopkins, Roberta Beatty, Adelaide Fitzallen, Shirley Gale, David Hawthorne, Percy Ames, Ffrich Haupt, Charles Henderson.

TUESDAY

"THE HEAVEN TAPPERS," a new play by George Scarborough and Annette Weatbay, with Margaret Lawrence featured, will be presented by Lee Shubert in association with Edwin Carewe, at the Forrest Theatre, next evening. Others in the cast are: Charles Waldron, Jessie Bennison, Florence Gerald, Joseph Allen, Dale Warrenton, Charles Abbe, Thomas Chalmers, and J. C. Kline.

WEDNESDAY

"EARTH," a Negro play by Em Jo Basshe, will be the second production of the New Playwrights Theatre, opening Wednesday night at the 52nd Street Theatre. Earle Browne directed the play with scenery by Clenn Throckmorton. The cast includes Inez Clough, Daniel Haynes, Hayes Pryor, William B. Townsend, Carre Young, Ruth Carr, Bonnie Morgan, Elsie Winslow, Gertrude Evans, Hemley Winfield, H. Webster Elkins, Jerome Addison, Mckinley Reeves and Harold Des Vernet.

MUSIC

Boston Symphony to Hold Beethoven Celebration

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, will hold a Beethoven centenary celebration on March 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 28 and 29 at Symphony Hall, Boston, when all the composer's nine symphonies will be played. In the Ninth Symphony the orchestra will combine forces with the Radcliffe Choral Society and the Harvard Glee Club, led by Dr. Archibald Davison. They will also take part in the "Missa Solemnis" and the Great Mass. It is reported in Boston that Ernest Newman of The London Sunday Times is coming especially to America to pay a verbal tribute to the genius of Beethoven when the New York Symphony and Philharmonic orchestras give their joint concert in honor of Walter Damrosch in the Metropolitan Opera House March 15.

Music will play a very important part in the program of the New Roxy Theatre, which opens next Friday night. The orchestra includes some 110 pieces. The list of soloists includes Harold Van Duzee, tenor; Gladys Rice, soprano; Douglas Stanbury, baritone; Julius Bledsoe, Negro baritone. Four musical directors, H. Maurice Jacquet, Erno Rapee, Charles Previn and Frederik Stahlberg, will divide the conductorial honors.

The Barrere Little Symphony under the direction of George Barrere will give the first of his concerts this Sunday evening at the Henry Miller Theatre. The concert will be the occasion of the premiere of two new works, a suite by Dubensky and Ichabod by G. Harnisch, and the presentation of eleven infrequently played dances by Beethoven.

The fourth pair of children's concerts of the Philharmonic Society, with Ernest Schelling conducting, will be given today, at 11 and 3 o'clock. The program will be devoted to dance music, drawn from Rameau, Grandos, Tchaikovsky, Mozart, Glazounow, Paderewski, Langley and Skilton. The Philharmonic String Quartette will assist.

Carlyle and Roland Davis, pianists, appear in a recital of compositions by Carlyle Davis at Town Hall Monday evening. Celest Bradley, violinist, will assist.

METROPOLITAN OPERA

"Mignon" will be revived next Thursday evening with Bori, Talley and Gigli, Whitehill.

Other operas of the week: "Das Rheingold," Monday evening, with Mueller, Brannell, and Kirchhoff, Bohnen.

"Aida," Tuesday evening, with Mueller, Brannell, and Johnson, DeLuca.

"Fidelio," Wednesday evening, with Larsen-Todsen, Fleischer and Laubenthal, Schorr.

"Siegfried," Friday afternoon, with Larsen-Todsen, Brannell, and Laubenthal, Schorr.

"The King's Henchman," Friday evening, with Easton, Alcock, and Johnson, Tibbett.

"Pelleas et Melisande," Saturday matinee, with Bori, Hunter, and Johnson, Whitehill.

"Lucia," Saturday night, with Talley, Egener, and Gigli, DeLuca.

NEW YORK SYMPHONY

Otto Klemperer will conduct his farewell concert as guest conductor of the New York Symphony Orchestra in Mecca Auditorium this Sunday afternoon. For his final program today, Klemperer will perform Mozart's Symphony in G-minor and a new work, "Sinfonietta," by Janacek. Other numbers on the program are a group of German dances by Schubert and "The Bartered Bride" by Smetana.

Fritz Busch will make his American debut as guest conductor Thursday afternoon.

The program: Overture, Leonore No. 3, Beethoven; Variations on a theme by Mozart, Reger; Symphony No. 4 in F-minor, Tschaikowsky.

Busch is one of the youngest guest conductors ever invited to this country by a major symphony orchestra. He is only thirty-six years old, but he has had seventeen years of experience as a director of opera and symphony orchestras. At the close of Busch's visit, March 29, Walter Damrosch will resume direction of the orchestra for the last three weeks of the season.

PHILHARMONIC

The Philharmonic Orchestra, under Wilhelm Furtwaengler, will appear at Carnegie Hall this Sunday afternoon. The program includes: Weber's Overture to "Der Freischuetz," Sibelius' Overture to "The Tempest," Strauss' "Don Juan" and Brahms' Second Symphony.

Monday the orchestra will appear in Philadelphia, Tuesday in Washington, on Wednesday in Baltimore, Thursday in Harrisburg and Friday afternoon and Saturday night in Pittsburgh.

Next Sunday afternoon, March 13, the Philharmonic will give the sixth Metropolitan Opera House concert. Three numbers scheduled: Symphony in D minor, Cesar Franck; "Romeo and Juliet," Tschaikowsky; and "Roman Carnival," Berlioz.

MUSIC NOTES

Three leading symphony conductors, Wilhelm Furtwaengler of the Philharmonic, Walter Damrosch, of the New York Symphony, and Fritz Busch, new guest conductor of the New York Symphony, will appear at the same performance when the New York Symphony and Philharmonic orchestras give their joint concert in honor of Walter Damrosch in the Metropolitan Opera House March 15.

OUR LETTER BOX

Fight Child Labor—Join Pioneers.

Dear Comrades: What is the difference between an American worker's child and a Russian worker's child? The difference is that the American worker's child in most cases must go to work, either before school, after school or the whole day. The reason is because his father does not make enough money to support his family, which means that the boss does not give enough wages. The boss likes Child Labor because its cheaper for him and he makes more profits. He does not care what happens to the children who work for him. That's why WE PIONEERS are fighting against Child Labor in America. YOU should join us and we should all stick together and make this country, a good country like Russia, where there is NO Child Labor.

Your Comrade,
BILLY TAPOLCSANJI.

"I pledge allegiance to the workers' flag."

By ROSE MIOVIC—Akron Pioneer Group.

One day we were saying our pledge in the school. Then a girl friend of mine got up and said:

"I pledge allegiance to the workers' flag."

The teacher got sore and said: "You say it as I'm telling you." But she won't. The teacher took her to the principal. The principal gave her a dirty look and forced her to repeat what he said. He also gave her a whipping.

The girl cried. Then the teacher took her back to the class room.

"Now you say the pledge," said the teacher.

And the girl said:

"I pledge allegiance".....big silence.....to the workers' flag."

Answers to Questions

1.—The difference between a capitalist and a worker is that the poor worker has to work for the capitalist. And the capitalist gets FAT on the poor man's LARD. That is why the worker is SKINNY.

2.—The worker has to work his head off and gets almost NOTHING.

3.—The rich man does NOTHING and gets EVERYTHING he wants.

4.—The difference is that a poor worker WORKS but the fat capitalist does NOT work.

DO YOU BELONG? IF NOT, WHY NOT?

Do you belong, where? Why, the YOUNG PIONEERS of course. Don't you know that the YOUNG PIONEERS of America is the only workers' children's organization (club) that fights for the workers' children throughout America, no matter whether they are white, black or yellow. Don't you know that the YOUNG PIONEERS fight in the schools against the teaching of hate, such as, strikers are lousy people and a bunch of no-good Bolsheviki. They also fight against the teaching of religion, which is forced on the children whether they want it or not. They fight for better conditions IN the school as well as OUTSIDE of the schools. They also help their older brothers and sisters and their parents to fight against the great bosses who pay small wages, forcing young children to go to work. The YOUNG PIONEERS of America stand side by side with their older comrades in every struggle to make America as well as the rest of the world a better place for workers and their children to live in.

Why, everybody knows this or they ought to know it. But it will do nobody any good if you only know it. You must join the PIONEERS if you are a worker's child and help them help you.

WHAT THE CHURCH HAVE CLAIMED TO BE.

THE LITTLE GREY DOG

"I must drown the dog," answered the coachman.

At that the eyes of the little boy filled with tears, he took the dog in his arms, held him close, and begged, "Don't do it, just see how darling he is!"

"I must do it, Benjamin. The master has commanded me. If I don't obey him he will punish me severely."

The little grey dog licked Benjamin's face, looked at him with his large eyes that seemed to implore him. "Save me, save me!"

"Give me the dog," pleaded Benjamin. "I will hide him well, so that the master will not see him."

The coachman thought for a moment, then replied, "Good, you may hide him. But," he said warningly, "you must not betray the fact that I have given him to you. If the master should ever see him, you must say that you saved him from the river. Then he will give you a bad beating."

"That is no matter," cried Benjamin eagerly. "As long as the little dog is allowed to live."

The coachman laughed, removed the string from the neck of the dog, and Benjmain ran to the hut with him, crying to him, kissing him, full of joy. At evening when Benjamin's parents came home, he showed them the dog, and the parents also were happy because they had to be away from home all day and always feared that the little boy might go to the river, fall in and be drowned. But now he would stay near the huts with his play-fellow, so that he might hide himself quickly in case the rich man might pass by.

It was as though the little grey dog knew that Benjamin had saved his life. He did not leave the side of the little boy, obeyed him, and showed himself to be quite intelligent. Benjamin spoke to him like a person, and the dog looked at him as wisely as though he understood every word.

Benjamin's parents were young and strong, the best workers on the sugar plantation. Therefore the overseer was satisfied with them and beat them less often than he did the other slaves. On that account they were both, in spite of their hard life, satisfied, and in the evenings when they returned to their hut and their little Benjamin, all three of them were gay and happy.

Benjamin's mother Hannah was also an excellent seamstress, she knew how to weave pretty baskets from reeds and rushes, and was a very good cook.

One day the eldest daughter of the rich man, who lived with her husband in the north, came to visit her father. She was glad to see her old home again and everything seemed to her more beautiful than in the north. She complained of the trouble she had in getting servants in the city. "These whites are not nearly as desirable as the blacks," she said. "They cannot be driven to work with whips. You should present me with a good slave, father, so that it will be more comfortable for me. My husband will be quite angry about it, for the people in the north are crazy, they claim that the blacks are also human beings, and that slavery should be abolished. But he loves me dearly, and will be glad if he sees me happy."

The rich man thought a while and said, "The young slaves that I own are all clumsy, incapable; the old ones of course could not learn to become used to living in a large city and would be more trouble than help to you. Whom can I give you?"

Young Comrades' Corner

ANOTHER SUBSCRIBER.

Dear Comrades—One day my teacher said that Russia was a bad country. I asked her why it was and she said because it is a Bolsheviki country. I don't see why it is a bad country when it is really truly a free country, not like in America. I am subscribing to the Young Comrade because it tells everything the way things are, not just the opposite like the English papers do.—P. F.

Last Week's Puzzle

The answer to last week's puzzle No. 3 is STRIKE. That's what workers do when they want to fight against the bosses for more pay or better conditions. Here are the comrades who answered the puzzle correctly:

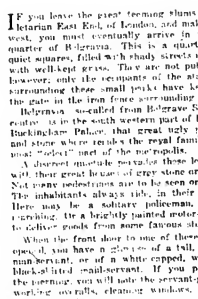
It is the most "select" part of the metropolis.

A discreet quietude pervades these leafy squares, with their great houses of grey stone or drab stucco. Not many pedestrians are to be seen on the streets. The inhabitants always ride, in their automobiles. Here may be a solitary policeman, unaesthetically clanking the brightly painted cast-iron railings to deliver goods from some famous store.

When the front door to one of these mansions is opened, you have a glimpse of a tall, clean-shaven man servant, or of a white capped, white-aproned, black-skirted maid-servant. If you pass early in the morning, you will note the servant-girls in their working overalls, cleaning windows, washing the white stone door steps.

In these great houses, as many as eight to a dozen domestic workers are often employed. These are cooks, under-cooks, kitchen-maids, butler, footmen, chauffeurs and page-boy. The houses were built about one hundred and fifty years ago, and, although solid enough in construction, they are most difficult to work in, from the point of view of domestic workers. They were built in the days when domestic labor was assisted by labor-saving devices, not simplified by the good sense of the architect, in planning his house.



The servants' part of the house is in the basement. Here are the kitchen and scullery, and, in the larger establishments, the servants' hall. This latter is a room in the basement—a part of the house which enjoys practically no daylight, and where artificial light is used all day, even in winter. This room is elegantly furnished with all the broken or rejected furniture from the upper portion of the house. Here the servants enjoy their "social life." They sleep, either in the basement, or in small rooms at the top of the house, in the attics. And in by is the domestic worker who has a room to herself!

The household slaves are permitted to have one evening free per week, the hours for evenings, however they must return home before a certain hour—usually eleven o'clock—or be locked out for the night, as they are not allowed a door-key. And, unless a very satisfactory excuse is forthcoming, to be late, or out is generally punished by dismissal.

Those servants, desiring to attend church, are usually given Sunday mornings or evenings free, or, if they reside Sundays. But it is understood that they really must go to church, and not deceive their employers by just taking a walk in the fresh air! The hours of labor, among these domestic serfs, are about 11 per day. They rise at six in the morning, and are on duty until eleven or later at night. And when their employers are giving a ball or other social functions, they may be kept up until two or three in the morning, and, in the latter case, they have the job of clearing up the remains of the party, on the following day.

In the large country houses of the rich, similar conditions prevail. The average small country estate has about twelve domestic servants. Their hours are about 15 per day. Often their sleeping quarters are of a most primitive nature, especially when a large number of guests are entertained, and room must be made for them and for the personal servants they bring with them.

On some of the larger estates, over fifty servants are employed, including many men, who work as chauffeurs, butlers, footmen, valets and gardeners. These slaves are the witnesses of the most gorgeous entertainments, where the women of the rich wear, in one evening, jewels which would maintain several working class families for a year. They see all the arrogant snobbery and insolence of the wealthy, surely this should breed in these workers the passion of class hatred, and the understanding of the class war?

But it is not only in the houses of the very rich that the exploitation of the domestic workers is met. In another part of London, you will see houses which were once the residences of the rich—the comfortable streets of the rich British merchants of a hundred or more years ago. But these streets have degenerated; they now have an air of respectable squalor. These houses have become cheap boarding-houses, or rooming-houses. In these houses, in the small rooms, into which the former spacious salons have been sub-divided, live the under-paid clerks, the thousands of "white-collar slaves," who work in the myriad offices of the city. In such houses, one or two women servants may be employed. There is certainly a life of hell. Their work is not even organized as is the domestic work of a wealthy household, where many servants are employed. These miserable slaves of the kitchen are at the call of their mistress, the landlady, or of the guests of the house, every minute of the day. In the underground kitchens, amid dirt and darkness, they start, in the early morning, preparing breakfasts. Each lodger in the house has his or her time for getting up and eating breakfast; and, laden with trays, the servant must climb the high narrow stairs twenty times. While this is being done, there are rings and calls from other rooms: one requires hot water, brought in a can, for shaving—in the average English rooming-house there is no running water in any room except the kitchen. Another requires his boots cleaned, another this and another that. The landlady is nervous and hysterical—the inevitable result of such an existence. She visits her own fretfulness on the poor little slave of the kitchen. Abused and over-worked, from early morning until late at night, for a shamefully low wage; living amidst dirt and discomfort; without privacy or leisure; such is the life of the domestic worker in the cheap boarding-house.

In the cheap boarding-houses, also, one often meets foreign boys who work as waiters at tables. They are French, Swiss, German or Czech lads usually. They work only for their board and found receiving no money wages, or perhaps just a shilling a week pocket-money. These boys have been secured for the boarding-house proprietors by unscrupulous employment agents who advertise in Swiss or other newspapers for boys who wish to learn languages and British hotel methods. Wishing their son to become a waiter later in a first-class hotel, the parents often save just enough for the boy's third-class fare to London. Once in London, penniless and friendless, not knowing the language, the boy is compelled to take any job the employment agent offers, however vile the conditions.

No better than the lot of the private domestic workers is that of those who labor in the hotels and expensive clubs of London. Recently, for instance, the British labor press gave details of cases which had come to the knowledge of the newly-formed Domestic and Hotel Workers' Union. A girl of 17, for instance, employed as kitchenmaid at a well-known conservative club in London, works 90 hours a week for eight shillings! She also complains that her life is made miserable by the continual nagging and bullying to which she is subjected. This is no unusual instance, but is typical of the cases of thousands of young girls, in scores of hotels or residential clubs in the fashionable parts of London. The infamous exploitation of young girls, in domestic service—many of whom are from country villages, and have no friends or advisers in the city—has led to many of them, in desperation, adopting the career of prostitution, in preference to the miserable life of a kitchen slave.

Another section of domestic workers consists of those who live at home, int work, either by the hour or the day, for a family, or for several families. These are usually married women—often widows, with children to support, or the wives of unemployed workers. One typical case was revealed recently in a letter from one of these domestic workers to the "Sunday Worker," the well-known militant left-wing newspaper. The writer says:

"At my last job I was promised fifteen shillings a week, and my first pay day I received only twelve shillings, after an awful arrangement. Each week I am left living all over the house, probably to see if I would steal it! Food there was in plenty, but being paid by the hour, all that I was allowed was a cup of tea. The children of the house had lots of toys and playthings. What chance has my girl at home of toys, on my miserable pay?"

The above affecting document is merely typical of the cases of thousands of others. These domestic have been sub-divided, live the under-paid clerks, the thousands of "white-collar slaves," who work in the myriad offices of the city. In such houses, one or two women servants may be employed. There is certainly a life of hell. Their work is not even organized as is the domestic work of a wealthy household, where many servants are employed. Slaves of the Kitchen

By CHARLES ASHLEIGH

IF you leave the great teeming slums of the proletarian East End, of London, and make your way west, you must eventually arrive in the favored quarter of Belgravia. This is a quarter of large quiet squares, filled with shady streets and carpeted with well-kept grass. There are not public squares, however; only the occupants of the stately houses surrounding these small parks have keys to enter the gate in the iron fence surrounding them.

Belgravia so-called from Belgrave Square, in its centre, is in the south-western part of London, near Buckingham Palace, that great ugly pile of brick and stone where resides the royal family. It is the most "select" part of the metropolis.

A discreet quietude pervades these leafy squares, with their great houses of grey stone or drab stucco. Not many pedestrians are to be seen on the streets. The inhabitants always ride, in their automobiles. Here may be a solitary policeman, unaesthetically clanking the brightly painted cast-iron railings to deliver goods from some famous store.

When the front door to one of these mansions is opened, you have a glimpse of a tall, clean-shaven man servant, or of a white capped, white-aproned, black-skirted maid-servant. If you pass early in the morning, you will note the servant-girls in their working overalls, cleaning windows, washing the white stone door steps.

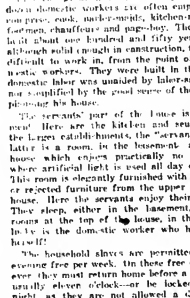
In these great houses, as many as eight to a dozen domestic workers are often employed. These are cook, under-cooks, kitchen-maids, butler, footmen, chauffeurs and page-boy. The houses were built about one hundred and fifty years ago, and, although solid enough in construction, they are most difficult to work in, from the point of view of domestic workers. They were built in the days when domestic labor was assisted by labor-saving devices, not simplified by the good sense of the architect, in planning his house.

The servants' part of the house is in the basement. Here are the kitchen and scullery, and, in the larger establishments, the servants' hall. This latter is a room in the basement—a part of the house which enjoys practically no daylight, and where artificial light is used all day, even in winter. This room is elegantly furnished with all the broken or rejected furniture from the upper portion of the house. Here the servants enjoy their "social life." They sleep, either in the basement, or in small rooms at the top of the house, in the attics. And in by is the domestic worker who has a room to herself!

The household slaves are permitted to have one evening free per week, the hours for evenings, however they must return home before a certain hour—usually eleven o'clock—or be locked out for the night, as they are not allowed a door-key. And, unless a very satisfactory excuse is forthcoming, to be late, or out is generally punished by dismissal.

Those servants, desiring to attend church, are usually given Sunday mornings or evenings free, or, if they reside Sundays. But it is understood that they really must go to church, and not deceive their employers by just taking a walk in the fresh air! The hours of labor, among these domestic serfs, are about 11 per day. They rise at six in the morning, and are on duty until eleven or later at night. And when their employers are giving a ball or other social functions, they may be kept up until two or three in the morning, and, in the latter case, they have the job of clearing up the remains of the party, on the following day.

In the large country houses of the rich, similar conditions prevail. The average small country estate has about twelve domestic servants. Their hours are about 15 per day. Often their sleeping quarters are of a most primitive nature, especially when a large number of guests are entertained, and room must be made for them and for the personal servants they bring with them.



On some of the larger estates, over fifty servants are employed, including many men, who work as chauffeurs, butlers, footmen, valets and gardeners. These slaves are the witnesses of the most gorgeous entertainments, where the women of the rich wear, in one evening, jewels which would maintain several working class families for a year. They see all the arrogant snobbery and insolence of the wealthy, surely this should breed in these workers the passion of class hatred, and the understanding of the class war?

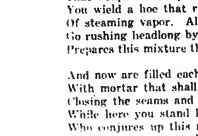
But it is not only in the houses of the very rich that the exploitation of the domestic workers is met. In another part of London, you will see houses which were once the residences of the rich—the comfortable streets of the rich British merchants of a hundred or more years ago. But these streets have degenerated; they now have an air of respectable squalor. These houses have become cheap boarding-houses, or rooming-houses. In these houses, in the small rooms, into which the former spacious salons have been sub-divided, live the under-paid clerks, the thousands of "white-collar slaves," who work in the myriad offices of the city. In such houses, one or two women servants may be employed. There is certainly a life of hell. Their work is not even organized as is the domestic work of a wealthy household, where many servants are employed. These miserable slaves of the kitchen are at the call of their mistress, the landlady, or of the guests of the house, every minute of the day. In the underground kitchens, amid dirt and darkness, they start, in the early morning, preparing breakfasts. Each lodger in the house has his or her time for getting up and eating breakfast; and, laden with trays, the servant must climb the high narrow stairs twenty times. While this is being done, there are rings and calls from other rooms: one requires hot water, brought in a can, for shaving—in the average English rooming-house there is no running water in any room except the kitchen. Another requires his boots cleaned, another this and another that. The landlady is nervous and hysterical—the inevitable result of such an existence. She visits her own fretfulness on the poor little slave of the kitchen. Abused and over-worked, from early morning until late at night, for a shamefully low wage; living amidst dirt and discomfort; without privacy or leisure; such is the life of the domestic worker in the cheap boarding-house.

In the cheap boarding-houses, also, one often meets foreign boys who work as waiters at tables. They are French, Swiss, German or Czech lads usually. They work only for their board and found receiving no money wages, or perhaps just a shilling a week pocket-money. These boys have been secured for the boarding-house proprietors by unscrupulous employment agents who advertise in Swiss or other newspapers for boys who wish to learn languages and British hotel methods. Wishing their son to be-



This Week's Puzzle No. 4.

This week's puzzle gives the name of something that all workers should belong to so that they can fight against the bosses altogether and win easier. Let's see how many comrades can answer it. Try and do it!

My first letter is in UP, but not in DOWN.
My second is in NIGHT but not in DAY.
My third is in CITY but not in TOWN.
My fourth is in WORK but not in PLAY.
My fifth is in NEVER and also in NOW.
When workers join me, I make bosses low.
What am I?

Send all answers to the Pioneer Editorial Committee, c/o Young Comrade Section, 33 East First Street, New York City, giving your name, age, address, and number of puzzle.

DON'T DRINK THIS

If the man in the picture is [illegible] and the stuff in the bottle is PATE'S [illegible], who is forced to drink it, and where?

Victory

By SIDNEY NADOLSKY

Four Passaic mills went back to work,
And four are still on strike
They're going to keep it up,
Until they get first what they like.

They're going to strike some more, some more.
They're going to strike some more,
Until they get what they demand
They're going to strike some more.

MORTAR MIXER

You seem a witch that hovers over charms—
You move within this cauldron's reeking smoke
Arrayed in your long white-baspattered cloak
That wraps around your swaying legs and arms.
You wield a hoe that raises hot alarms
Of steaming vapor. All the timid folk
Go rushing headlong by, while your swift stroke
Prepares this mixture that the quick-lime warms.

And now are filled each barrow and each hod
With mortar that shall build a pleasant home,
Closing the seams and holding bricks together—
While here you stand like to some kindly god
Who conjures up this miracle, this dome
Of happiness against the wind and weather!

ELECTRICAL WORKER

You spread your cunning cables o'er vast walls
And string your lamps upon the faery towers
Of lofty structures. Through long toiling hours
You labor in your grimy overalls
To rear these beacons and great waterfalls
Of light to flood the city. Mystic powers
Are yours to turn gray buildings into flowers
On dancing girls with many-colored shawls.

For at your touch black midnight becomes noon,
You rob the dusk of all its terrors now,
The world is lit by myriad glowing fires
That you have kindled, and the sun and moon
Are put to shame—the while you mop your brow
And gather up your blue prints, tools and wires.

BOY WANTED

By MAX GELTMAN

THE boss had told him he was through. That was last night. And now, as he was looking over the Help Wanted advertisements, he was still thinking of it. He was through. And he was going to ask for a raise the very next week. Now he was through. He had mumbled a few questions as to why he should be fired. Overhead. Slack. Expenses. Cut. That was a funny word. Something about a young man wanted in a printing shop. He had always wanted to work in a printing shop or a publishing house. Where words were printed. He thought that he would like it. He folded the paper, tucked it under his arm, pulled his cap a little over his eyes, turned his coat collar up; his right shoulder bulging out, he started walking against the stinging hail-rain-snow fury that was driving diagonally against him.

He arrived at the printing shop. Wiped the snow from out the crevices of his eyes and nose. He saw about twenty or thirty more young men like himself waiting in front of the entrance, stamping up and down, blowing on their fingers, waving their arms, massaging their ears, moving, stamping, blowing, grunting to keep warm. He fell in with the group and waited. After twenty minutes somebody showed up. No, it was not the boss. They were told they'd have to wait a few minutes more before the boss came. Ten minutes after nine the boss came. The boss opened the door and told them not to crowd. They would all be interviewed. He again warned them against crowding. Someone shouted something about getting in and warming himself. The rest of the crowd sh-h'd him down. He was singled out four of the young men nearest the door. Each one of them slowly removed his hat and followed the boss in. The door was shut. Those outside tried as hard as they could to keep warm with lusty gusto. He wondered if he would be taken in with the next group. The door opened. One of the boys came out. He thumbed his nose and hurried away. A grunt of disgust followed him. The second fellow came out. He leered. He'd never work for that price. Not he. A volley of verbal dung greeted him. Impatience. The door opened again and the remaining two boys came out. The boss picked out three more of the young men. He was sure he'd be picked with the next group. What could he say? Better position. Advancement. Chance for—the three boys came out. He couldn't make out what was said. Crescendo. The boss showed himself. Low muttering. He inquired if Yost was right. Yes, it was right. The job was taken. Nobody knew by whom. They questioned the boss. It was taken. The boss told them to disperse or he would call a cop.

He pulled his coat a little closer and walked away. He wondered who got the job. He decided on the first guy. That one had hurried away so knowingly. It was nasty cold. He found himself on Seventh avenue and Twenty-seventh street. He looked up at an amazingly square, massive building. He wondered how many people worked there. The brass sign told him it was the largest mail order house in the east. They always needed a lot of people there he knew. He went around towards the entrance. Boys Wanted. Apply on the fourth floor. Boys wanted. BOY. He didn't want to apply for boys' jobs where they asked for boys. He was a young man. He looked only at the Young Men Wanted ads. Boy wanted. Perhaps they paid well. He looked up at the building. Massive!

The elevator stopped on the fourth floor. The personnel department. Personnel. He saw a number of boys sitting at the table and writing. Writing in ink. He hadn't written in ink since he left grammar school. He thought they worked there. They were only applyng for a job, he found out. Someone handed him an application blank. He sat down at a desk and began fingering a pen-holder. Name, address, age, when born, citizen, father a citizen, last position, position ere that, references, references. He filled them out slowly, methodically. He liked to write with ink. If he was finished he could enter for a private consultation. He was finished. He passed through, a little door that clicked behind him as it shut. He sat down opposite a middle aged man with a tremendous wer law. He looked like Wilson. After glancing over the application he was told that they couldn't start him with what he got at the last place. But there was a great chance for advancement. For advancement. They never started anybody with more than twelve dollars a week. Even college men worked for the largest mail order house in the east for twelve dollars. He would think it over. He'd be back tomorrow. It was all right. They would hold his application. He walked out feeling very warm. He went slowly towards the elevator and waited. The elevator was slow in coming. Going down. He entered the elevator which started down with a jerk. It made him ill. He could never ride down in an elevator.

He lifted his cap somewhat and let the snow beat fully against his face. It felt good. He made his way downtown. It was about ten-thirty. He would go to a movie. He didn't know. Fourteenth street. There were many movies on Fourteenth street that opened early in the morning. Caterers to the unemployed. He entered one. The comedy was going on. Newlyweds and a mother-in-law. He wondered how long he would be out of a job. His mother had looked so scared when he told her he'd lost his job. She didn't say anything. The comedy was over. Announcements of future productions. Pathe news. Dog has litter of pups. It always bored him. He went into the toilet to while away the time until the big picture came on. Applause. He thought the feature picture was on. They had only been applauding the showing of a regiment of marines marching with the colors. The end. He settled himself back comfortably to watch the unrolling of the feature. A dress shop. Odd! He, too, had worked in a dress shop. Pretty girls chewing gum. He couldn't remember any in his shop. Shipping clerk. He had been assistant shipping clerk. Nice picture. The shipping clerk is in love with the model. Adventure. Intrigue. The shipping clerk marries the model. He rose from his seat walked out into the aisle and spat. The shipping clerk had been the owner of the plant.

It was still snowing. He was beginning to feel hungry. No, he wouldn't eat yet. It was about one o'clock. Lot of people hurrying back to work. He walked down with University Place. Perhaps he'd see a sign. A large number of young men and women. They didn't seem to be hurrying anywhere. It seemed as if they were marching around and around. But he couldn't see. STRIKE. He was able to make the word out. He walked nearer to them. They were singing. He knew the melody. Couldn't make out what it was. Solidarity. He wasn't sure now. Union. He had heard the melody before. John Brown's—that was right. Moun-ing in the—and the union. Funny. Girls like sandwich men. More singing. They seemed so fine and strong. It made him feel fine. Thrilling. He wondered what it was all about. He stepped to talk with one of the young men who had a sign on his back and chest saying he was striking for a forty-four hour week and a ten per cent wage increase which averaged sixteen dollars a week. Sixteen dollars a week. The young man told him that a lot of them made less than sixteen dollars. And why were they marching thus? The young man tried to explain. The young man was so sincere. Union. Solidarity. He listened intently. The young man was telling him about sticking together. Sticking together. He wondered if he would have had the job if the others had stuck by him. Sticking together. He'd never thought of that before. Strange. It sounded great to him. The song again. The young boys and girls. Sticking together. The young man asked him if he got the idea. He nodded. Sticking together. And the union makes living Nice song.

He hadn't felt like that in a long time. He felt healthy and strong and light. He started back for the mail order house. Sticking together. The young man had asked him if he got the idea. He tried to remember the melody. He stopped. Glory Glo-. Solidarity-. He remembered. He moved on after. Two more blocks. And the union. The building was like some gigantic box. He asked the elevator man about how many people worked there. He was told about three thousand. Three thousand. Sticking together. There were not many boys now applying for jobs. He took a young lady that he had been there in the morning. He had come to take the job. He was again steered in for a private consultation. The man with the big jaw had quite forgotten him. If he would give his name. He did so. The man seemed to remember. Couldn't start him with more than twelve dollars a week. Great chance. Even college men worked and the union—he would take the job. The man told him forgotten him. If he would give his name. He nodded. He would get a card now, but after he was put on the regular department payroll he would get a factory badge. Something about loyalty and he was told to go and report for work the next morning—promptly. He had hardly listened to what was said to him. Words of a young man were popping through his head. And a song. He liked that young man. Solidarity. Sticking together. The Young man had asked him if he got the idea.

The Secretary of the Navy's Nightmare

A VOICE FROM A FORD SLAVE PEN

"Things are in an awful way here. Two and three days per week is the average. Work has been speeded up to such an extent that only the toughest can stand it. I still have plenty of strength left but I am ready to lie down when I reach home. Too tired even to read or think. To the average Detroit factory worker heaven is a place where one may sleep—just sleep. Nothing else matters. As an instance of how men feel: A teammate of mine stopped a moment and worked a numbing arm up and down over his head. I said to him: "Do your arms pain you at night when you lie down?" "Say boy," he said, "if your arms pained you as mine do you would never put foot in this dump no more; you aint even-tempered enough." The older men are all being weeded out, the rumor is that all over 45 years are to go. However, next week my department is due for a general shakeup; quite a number will be fired, I believe."

The Attitude of a Southern Chinese

By KWEI CHEN

AT times Americans think that the Chinese should struggle only against their own military chieftains. "If you can get rid of them and establish a strong and representative government," they say, "no foreigner will be able to exploit your people." These American friends are not thoroughly acquainted with the complicated conditions in China. Can any one imagine that those who have obtained special privileges from China by force are willing to give them up? Of course not. Therefore, the remoter the day when the Chinese establish a strong and representative government, the better for the foreign exploiters.

In order to accomplish their purpose, they use the Chinese military chieftains as their tools for perpetuating the chaotic condition in China. Since money-making is their end, they like best that means which brings them the greatest material profit. When they see that they can fish with greater profit in foul waters, they do all they can to keep the water ever turbid, never to let it get clear. Do I blame the foreign exploiters without foundation? Again, evidences are before the world. The Japanese government has supported the former bandit, Chang Tso-lin, whom all the Chinese people hate. The British government has financed with Chinese money and with secret loans the mediaeval lords, Wu Pei-fu and Sun Chuang-Fen, who have deprived the Chinese of their freedom of press and speech, and who have closed the colleges to enlarge their memory forces.

While visiting China last spring, Mr. Lewis Gannett wrote: "Canton, hope of China." This opinion has since gained the unanimous support of the intelligent public of the west, and has been dearly cherished by the Chinese people in general and by the young intelligent Chinese in particular. If the government of the "Powers" were sincere in wishing China a good government, they would have recognized the southern government, which is strong and representative of the Chinese people, at least to give them up? Of course not. Therefore, the remoter the day when the Chinese establish a strong and representative government, the better for the foreign exploiters.

We read in the newspapers about the Chinese soldiers looting, about the editors and correspondents shot by soldiers without trial. These are the soldiers of the military chieftains supported by the "Powers" today. We read the Strawn report about the deplorable conditions existing in the Peking government. That is the government supported by the "Powers" today.

Meanwhile in southern China the Nationalist revolutionary armies are fighting for the annihilation of the corrupt Peking government and of the chieftains of the looting soldiers. They are struggling to maintain a strong and representative government and to win for China equality among the nations. They have now received such a reputation that even in foreign countries praise for their discipline and courage is unanimous. They have been so loved by the Chinese people that wherever they go the farmers and workers and students voluntarily cook meals for their guides.

It is through the southern government that the Chinese people have committed the great crime of daring to request the "Powers" to treat them as men and women, not as slaves. What more need I say? What alternative would any lover of liberty in the west advise the Chinese people to choose?

II.

Those who have no sympathy with young China usually blame them for having received Russian help. To them I wish to explain that whatever Russia's motives may be, she, the new Russia, does not share any longer the control of Chinese tariff, nor does she any longer have concessions within Chinese territory. She has returned to China all that was taken from her in the time of the Tsar. She treats China as her equal. In other words, Russia helps the Chinese cause, the liberation of the Chinese people from foreign claims and from bandit rulers. We Chinese welcome such friendly help from any people who may be willing to render it, as did the Americans in 1778 welcome French help. In our attitude toward foreigners, we do not make exceptions of the Russians merely because they are now disliked by those "Powers" which are actually controlling China. Meanwhile we beg China's friends to be kindly patient. Four hundred millions of people, with their five thousand years of civilization, will not perish without a struggle for the preservation and revivification of their ancient life. And we, who are lovers of our country, believe that the time will come when the world will be grateful to us for the labors in which we are involved.

Paul moved one hand; and again Ruth cried in excitement—he was coming back to life! But the nurse said that meant nothing, the doctors had said he might move. They must not let him move his head. She took his temperature, but told them nothing.

Paul's hands were straying over the sheet that covered him; aimlessly, here and there, as if he were picking at insects on the bed. His voice rose louder—Russian, always Russian, and Gregor would tell what the words meant.

They were in the red square, and saw the armies marching, and heard the working masses shouting their slogans; they were on the playing fields with the young workers; they were Siberia, and with Mandel playing the balalaika, and having his eyes eaten out by ants. Da zdravstvooyet Recolutziya!"—that meant "Long live Revolution!" "Vsya vlast Soviet! an!—All power to the Soviets!"

And from there they would be swept to the ballroom of the Imperor Hotel, Angel City. Radio RWKY, the Angel City Patriot broadcasting by direct control. Or was it to the heart of the Congo, where the naked savages danced to the music of the tomtom, their black bodies, smeared with palm oil, shining in the light of blazing fires? For a hundred centuries these savages had paddled the river, and never to the mind of one of them had come the thought of an engine; they had stood on the shores of mighty lakes, and never dreamed a sail. The weight of nature's blind fecundity rested upon them, stifling their minds.

And now capitalist civilization, rushing to destruction with the speed of its fastest battle-planes, cast about to find a form of expression for its irresistible will to degeneracy, and chose the tomtom of the Congo for its music, and the belly-dances of the Congo for its exercise, and so here was America, Land of Jazz.

A voice from the megaphone, raucous, shrill, and mocking:

"There's where mah money goes, Lapsticks and powderpuffs and sucha things like that!"

And Bunny was in that great "Emperor" ball-room, where he had danced so many a night, first with Eunice Hoyt and then with Vee Tracy. All his friends would be there tonight—Verne and Annabelle and Fred Orpan and Thelma Norman and Mrs. Pete O'Reilly and Mark Eisenberg—the cream of the plutocracy, celebrating their greatest triunph to date. There would be American flags and streamers on the walls, and some would wave little flags—a great patriotic occasion—nothing like it since the Armistice—nay for Coolidge, keep cool with Cal! The room would be crowded to suffocation, and by this hour nine-tenths of the dancers would be staggering. Large-waisted financiers with enormous shirt-fronts, hugging stout wives or slender mistresses, with naked backs and half-naked bosoms hung with diamonds and pearls, red paint plastered on their lips and platinum bangles in their ears, shuffling round and round to the thump of the tomtom, the wail of the saxophone, the rattle and chatter of sticks, the banging of bells and snarl of stopped trumpets. "She does the camel-walk!" shrilled the singer; and the hip and buttock muscles of the large-waisted financier would be alternately contracted and relaxed, and his feet dragged about the floor in the incoordinate reactions of locomotor ataxia and spastic paraplegia.

XIV

Paul had begun to thresh his arms about. It was necessary to hold him, and when they tried it, he began to fight back. Did he think the strike-guards at Paradise had seized him? Or was it the jailors at San Pablo? Or the Federal secret service agents? Or the French gendarmes? Or the sailors of the fleet? Or the thugs with hatchets and iron pipe. He fought with maniacal fury, and there was Bunny holding down one arm and Gregor the other, with Ruth and Rachel each clinging to one foot, while the nurse came running with a straight jacket. So with much labor they tied him fast. He would make terrific efforts; his face would turn purple, and the cords would stand out in his neck; but the system had got him, he could not escape.

Meantime, through the open window, Radio VXZ, the main dining room of the Admiralty Hotel; a blended sound of many hundreds of people, shouting, singing, cheering, now and then smashing a plate, or pounding on the table. Some one was making a speech to the assembly, but he was so drunk he could hardly talk, and they were so drunk they could not have understood what he said. One got snatches —glorish victry—greatesh country—soun instooshna—greatesh man ever in White Houish—Caulitouh Cal—ray for Coolidge!" A storm of cheers, yells, laughter—and the voice of the announcer, drunk also: "Baby Belle, hottes' lil babe, sing us hot one, right off griddle. Go to it, Bebe, I'll hold you!"

Yes, the announcer was drunk, the very radio was drunk, the instruments would not send the wave-lengths true, the ether could not carry them straight, they wavered and wiggled; the laws of the physical universe had gone staggering, God was drunk on His throne, so pleased by the election of the greatesh man ever in White Houih. Bunny, dazed with exhaustion, saw the scene through a blur of sound and motion, the shining mouths of trumpets, the waving of flags, the flashing of electric signs, the cavorting of satyrs, the prancing of savages, the jiggling of financiers and their mistresses simulating copulation. Baby Belle was unsteady before the microphone, you lost parts of her song at each stagger; but snatches came, portraying the nymphomania of "Flamin' Mamie, sure-fire vamp —hotter' baby in the town—some scoreher—love's torture—gal that burns 'em down!"

"Oh, God! Oh, God!" cried Ruth. "He's trying to speak to me!" And so for an instant it seemed. Paul's one eye had come open, wild and frightful; he lifted his head, he made a choking noise—

"Comes to lovin'—she's an oven!" shrilled the radio voice.

"Paul! What is it?" shrieked Ruth.

"Ain't it funny—paper money burns right in her hand!"

Paul sank back, he gave up, and Ruth, her two hands clasped as if praying to him, seemed to follow with her soul into that far-away place where he was going.

"Flamin' Mamie, workin' in a mine, ate a box o' matches at the age o' nine!"

"He's dead! He's dead!" Ruth put her hand over Paul's heart, and then started up with a scream.

"Flamin' Mamie, sure - fire vamp," reiterated the chorus, "hotes' baby in the town!"

And Ruth rushed to the window, and threw herself—no, not out, because Bunny had been too quick for her; the others helped to hold her, and the nurse came running with a hypodermic needle, and in a few minutes she was lying on a cot at the side of the room, looking as dead as her brother.

And the householder turned to Radio RWKY, the Angel City Patriot broadcasting from its own studio. "Latest bulletin from New York, the Republican Central Committee claims that Calvin Coolidge will have the greatest plurality ever cast in American history, close to eighteen million votes. Good-night, friends of Radioland."

"Enter Banking," Kahn To Rich College Boys; Tells Them "Sit Tight"

Otto Kahn, famous banker, art patron and general all-round intellectual luminary of Wall Street, has advised idealistic college students to enter banking as a means of bettering humanity.

Kahn's advice was contained in an interview with him in the first issue of "The Daily Princetonian," under its new board, which appeared Tuesday. "I recommend banking to college men because of the breadth of its scope, touching every field in commerce and industry," said Kahn. "Collegians are trained for this, as they have acquired a general interest in varied topics."

Kahn then gave ten golden rules for success. Here are a few samples:

"Know how to bide your time and to 'sit tight'."

"Work hard—it won't hurt you.

"Meet your fellow-man frankly and fairly. You don't have to go through life armed to the teeth."

Nationalists Pocket Chang Mercenaries

Northern Militarists Caught in Trap as General Chen Joins Revolutionists

SHANGHAI, March 4.—The Chihli-Shangtung armies of General Chang Tsung-Chang suddenly found themselves in a pocket today, cut off from both their bases as General Chen Ting-Yueh, military governor of Anhui province, declared his province independent of the Peking government and joined the Nationalist armies.

Anhui, which lies between Chekiang province on the southeast, recently conquered by the Nationalists, Honan and Hupeh on the west, stronghold of Marshal Wu Pei-Fu, who now is apparently hostile to the Shangtung forces, and Kiangsu, in which Shanghai is located, on the east-north-east, occupies a strategical position.

Chen Ting Yueh is reported to have cut the Tientsin-Pukow railway, thus isolating the Chihli-Shangtung armies and preventing any further reinforcing of Shanghai by railway.

Simultaneous with the Anhui governor's announcement, the Nationalists attacked Chang Tsung-Chang's forces in a westward drive in an attempt to join up the Chekiang and Anhui forces.

It was rumored that Foochow has been occupied by the Nationalists.

CURRENT EVENTS

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

ALEXANDER Kerensky went and did it after we had come to the conclusion that the Czarists had collected their last dime thru prophesying the fall of the Soviet Government. Kerensky, who wobuled like a string of adulterated spaghetti during the March revolt against the Czar and who was bounced out of his room in the winter palace by the Bolsheviki is now here biting granite and posing as a "strong man" for the edification of those Americans who have more dollars than brains. Kerensky predicts the fall of the Soviet regime but does not set a date. For this much caution he deserves our thanks.

Kerensky says he is opposed to outside intervention for the purpose of overthrowing the Soviet government, conveniently forgetting his part in fomenting the Kronstadt revolt in 1921 in which thousands of Russian workers lost their lives. But if, as Kerensky says, 99 per cent of the Russian people are against the Soviet regime why does one of the short-lived ex-premier advise the discontented to exhale a few whiffs of garlic and blow the Communists out of the Kremlin?

ANOTHER distinguished visitor to the United States who landed yesterday is Mr. DeValera, president of a faction of Irish republicans that broke with the official body over questions of tactics. De Valera would participate in the Dublin parliament provided he was not forced to swallow the oath of allegiance to Great Britain. The opposing faction considers the parliament unclean. Both factions are busily engaged straining at a gnat, while their stomachs bulge with political camel. A revolutionist would swallow a dozen oaths without the slightest compunction and break them before they had a chance to pass Adam's apple.

The fact is that the DeValera wing and the opposition faction of the former republican party of Ireland are not revolutionists. They are confining their activities to mouthings Rebellion Reported.

LONDON, March 4.—A rebellion behind the lines of the northern allies is rumored in Shanghai, according to the Central News correspondent.

Leaflet Circulated.

Handbills calling on the youth to join the Young Communist League of China were circulated despite the vigilance of the police. The leaflets urged the masses to rally to the cause of a united China and the freedom of the people from the oppression of the foreign imperialists and their native militarist allies.

Thousands of Chinese with unscrutable faces which they have learned to wear thru ages of persecution watched the British royal marines march thru the city.

Li Pao-Chang, the butcher who was responsible for the beheading of hundreds of Nationalist sympathizers and strikers has fled to the north from the vengeance of the masses.

Militarists Demoralized.

The British and the imperialists in general are hoping they can overawe the masses with a show of force. Reports received here hourly from the theatre of war indicate that the Nationalist forces are victorious and that the northern militarists are demoralized.

While the commander of the American naval squadron denied the report that American troops would be landed to break strikes it was admitted that under certain circumstances a landing might be effected. Nothing is easier to find than an excuse.

There are now thirteen American warships in Shanghai with a total complement of 89 officers, 2,275 blue-jackets and 1,434 marines.

Fight Van Swerington.

WASHINGTON, March 4. — The bitter fight waged by a group of minority stockholder of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad to prevent O. P. and M. J. Van Swerington, Cleveland financiers, from linking up five big railroad properties into a billion dollar corporation, which resulted in the plan being turned down by the Interstate Commerce Commission, is to be renewed.

MEXICO CITY, March 4. — Mexico City telephone girls have gone on strike. Two hundred and fifty railroad workers at Aguascalientes and forty at Guadelajara are also reported on strike.

Japan and the Boycott.

PARIS, March 4.— The Japanese ambassador, in a lecture dalivered here, discussed the weapon of the boycott that the Chinase are said to be using against English goods. "We have already suffered much from a Chinese boycott. Now it seems to be England's turn," he said.

25,000 Railroad Men Striking In India

Authorities Fire on Workers; Movement Spreading

Twenty-thousand railroad workers are striking in British India, says a message to the Federated Press from the International Transport Workers' Federation. British authorities are attempting to break the strike by rifle fire and bayonet charges. The message reads:

Appeal for Aid.

"The International Transport Workers' Federation has received a telegram from the All-India Railwaymen's Federation to the effect that the strike which broke out on the 11th of February on the Bengal Nagpur Railway is rapidly spreading, seven important railway centers being already affected. The number of men out at present is 20,000.

"The authorities are trying to break the strike by armed force. Many of the strikers have been wounded by rifle-fire and bayonet charges, and seven have been arrested. Others have been forcibly taken from their houses and compelled to work. Notwithstanding these incidents the men are reported as standing firm.

Discontent.

"The origin of the strike must be sought in the general discontent among the staff which has been provoked by the non-recognition of the union, acts of arbitrariness of superior officials and bad housing.

"In response to a request for financial help, the I. T. F. has already sent a preliminary remittance, and is appealing to affiliated organizations for further assistance. The I. T. F. has also sent a telegram to the Viceroy of India, protesting against the use of coercive measures, and has asked to representatives in England to call the attention of the British Government to the matter."

On Central Lines.

Strike relief funds may be sent through the International Transport Workers' Federation headquarters, 61 Vondelstraat, Amsterdam, Holland.

Further information on the Indian rail strike comes from Sailendra Ghose, secretary, the Friends of Freedom for India, 799 Broadway, New York. The walkout affects the great control lines connecting Calcutta, Bombay and Madras.

Movement Spreads.

Ghose sees a spreading of strike movements throughout India this coming year. The revolutionary Chinese situation has stirred the Indian people tremendously, he says, and Indian leaders who have been comparatively passive for some time are advocating aggressive tactics. Mahatma Ghandi has offered to lead a strike in the great Assam tea plantations if such a move is necessary to raise wages and end the virtual state of peonage that exists. Papers are giving pages to the speeches of Shapurja Saklatvala, radical member of the British parliament, who is making an agitational tour of his native land.

Architect Released.

ST. PAUL, Minn., March 4.—Mann Act charges against Frank Lloyd Wright, nationally known architect and Madama Olga Milanoff were dropped by the federal government when presented to a federal grand jury here today. The grand jury reported there was no avidence to warrant a conviction.

Big Business Boy Dies.

BALTIMORE, March 4.—George W. Baldwin, 79, veteran financier, died at John Hopkins Hospital today of pneumonia.

He was vice-president of Stone and Webster, Boston and New York consulting engineers, although he maintained his home in Savannah, Ga.

Senate Dies In Fight On Graft Investigation

Millionaire "Sammy" Insull Is Also Saved

WASHINGTON, March 4. — The reactionary sixty-ninth congress, which rode into power on the crest of the great Coolidge landslide of '24, went snarling to its constitutional death at noon today.

The punishment of Samuel Insull, Chicago utility magnate, his personal attorney, Daniel F. Schnyler, and Thomas W. Cunningham of Philadelphia, for contempt of the Reed slush fund committee, was postponed for nine months today by the failure of the senate to act on the citation drawn by the committee.

No Extra Appropriation.

In the last half hour, an attempt to appropriate $35,000,000 for the veterans bureau and $37,200,000 for the pension bureau was defeated when Senator Walsh (D) of Massachusetts, declared he would not permit its enactment so long as the slush fund resolution was blocked. In this action he was supported by Senator Howell (R) of Nebraska and Wheeler (D) of Montana.

Senators Reed (R) of Pennsylvania, and Moses (R) of New Hampshire, led the three-day filibuster against the Reed committee resolution. They openly blocked every attempt to consider other legislation during the first 37-hour continuous session, hold to break their filibuster. In the end, though, they were willing to pass the appropriation bill but Walsh and his associates then took up the filibuster and objected.

Bad Record.

The sixty-ninth congress is famous for some very reactionary laws, chief among which are the McFadden branch banking act, creating a money trust, the Dill-White radio bill, creating the monopoly of wave lengths and setting up a commission to bestow them in perpetuity on whomever it selects, and the measures to increase the military and naval arms of the Wall Street government.

Brazen hypocrisy and good teamwork between President Coolidge and the banker senators tricked the middle western senators into support of the branch banking bill, support which cost nothing, as the westerners were cheated of their prize when Coolidge vetoed the McNary-Hauzen farm bill.

"What the Hell."

The senate really died in the midst of the longest filibuster on record. In the last half day was devoted to lame-duck speeches made after all hope of passing any legislation had been abandoned.

The senators listened to several partisan appeals, then the navy band began to play, and the house rose to sing "America." Representative Woodyard (D) of Virginia, sang "The End of a Perfect Day." Followed by a lusty singing of the unexpurgated edition of "What the H—— do we care."

Miami Failure Means Fight, Says Brophy

Progressive Leader Warns American Coal Miners

CLEARFIELD, Pa. March 4. (FP) —Repeating his warning that the hope of the coal miners in the coming crisis lies in the organizing of the non-union fields, President John Brophy of the central Pennsylvania union says:

"The breakdown of wage negotiations at Miami a foregone conclusion. The shadow of non-unionism which has spread in the last three years spelled the breakup of the central competitive field as a base wage-making body.

No Wage Reductions.

"Wage reductions will not correct the situation of which union operators complain and under which union miners suffer. Neither will an attitude of mind on the part of the union which considers the unionization of the non-union fields secondary to the securing of contracts in the union districts.

"The situation in the last five years has lost district after district and tens of thousands of members to the union.

"The need is to so frame union policy as to treat unionization of the non-union areas and the winning of wage contracts for them as of equal importance with the securing of wage contracts for the older organized fields.

Will Raise Standard.

"Such a policy, sincerely and persistently maintained, will ultimately win a hundred percent unionized industry and the standard of wages and working conditions that the productivity of the American miner entitles him to.

"The answer of the union to the breakdown at Miami should be a national drive to organize the non-union fields."

Prepare Ruthenberg Memorial Meetings

Workers In Many Cities Arrange Elaborate Programs In Memory of Party's Leader

Many cities will see memorial meetings for C. E. Ruthenberg. Preparations are being made as hastily as possible, and a general schedule is already being worked out for the more important speakers who will appear at these demonstrations of regard which all Communists and many workers who are not Communists, feel for the man who was, they agree, a real leader and founder of the Communist movement in America.

The central feature at the Ruthenberg memorial meetings will be, so far as is possible, the ashes of the dead comrade. His body will be on view, according to present plans, in Chicago, Ashland Auditorium, East Room, from ten to ten on Saturday, March 5, and on Sunday, in the main hall, before the memorial service starts at one o'clock.

The funeral is to take place Monday, at ten o'clock, and the body will be cremated. The ashes will be taken to eastern cities on their way to their final resting place, in the Red Square at Moscow, beneath the walls of the Kremlin, alongside of those of John Reed, the only other member of the Communist Party in America buried there. Reed died fighting the white guards and the cholera with the Red Army, during the bitterest part of the conter revolutionary civil war, in which the capitalist class of America and Western Europe tried to choke with blood the rising young workers' repnblic.

Ruthenberg Fought Too.

At the time Reed was battling the armies of capitalism in Soviet Russia, Ruthenberg was facing that same capitalism in its own home, and bearding it in its greatest metropolis, going to prison as a result.

The speakers at the Chicago memorial meeting are Comrades W. Z. Foster, Jay Lovestone, Max Bedacht, Nat Kaplan, James P. Cannon, Arne Swabeck, W. Weinstone and Ben Gitlow. Max Bedacht will be chairman.

Grand Rapids Meeting.

District Organizer R. Baker of the Workers (Communist) Party will be the main speaker at the Grand Rapids meeting, to be held also on Sunday, March 6, at Workmen's Circle Hall, in the afternoon.

Detroit, a great industrial center, will hold its meeting on Monday, March 7, in the Majestic Theatre. The speakers so far secured are Max Bedacht, Herbert Zam and Scott Nearing.

In Cleveland.

On Tuesday, March. 8, Cleveland, the city in which Comrade Ruthenberg spent so much of his time in pre-war days as an organizer of the socialist party, and carried on an energetic anti-militarist campaign during the war hysteria, will have a meeting. The date and place are being arranged.

New York Prepared.

New York will hold its meeting on Wednesday, March 9. Already the headquarters of the party are draped in red and black, in mourning for Comrade Ruthenberg, and a list of speakers is being prepared for the evening meeting in Carnegie Hall, which will include Comrades Wm. Z. Foster, James P. Cannon, Jay Lovestone, Benjamin Gitlow, Wm. W. Weinstone and others.

Speakers In Boston.

The Boston meeting will be addressed by Comrades Gitlow, Moissaye Olgin and Herbert Zam. It will take place Thursday, March 10.

On the eleventh, Friday, there will be a meeting in Youngstown. The speakers and hour and place, will soon be announced.

Several Language Speeches.

In Pittsburg the comrades are making preparations to meet on Saturday, March 12, at eight in the evening, at the Labor Lyceum, on Miller Street. An elaborate program is being prepared. There will be speakers in various languages, and workers from all over the district will be present.

The workers in a number of other cities are preparing for the and duty of commemorating Comrade Ruthenberg, but little more than the dates are available for publication now. It is known that there will be meetings in: Los Angeles, March 13; in Minneapolis, March 13, in the afternoon; in St. Paul, March 13, in the evening; in Buffalo, March 13; in Duluth, March 14; and in Superior, March 15.

FACTS CONTRADICT ALL PIOUS HOPES OF BIG BUSINESS AND POLITICAL LEADERS

The bullabaloo about prosperity raised by captains of industry at the beginning of the year seems to have been a little premature.

That business is slowing up and that thousands of workers will be thrown out of work in the near future is indicated by statistics made public yesterday by the Federal Reserve Board and by R. G. Dun and Company.

Numerous Failures

Business failures for January and February of this year reached the unusually large total of 5,500. Business failures for the same period in 1926 totalled 4,097, while failures for January and February 1925 amounted to 4,110.

Compared with the 1,801 insolvencies for February, 1926, the 2,035 failures for the last month represents an increase of 13 per cent. More significant than the number of failures are the liabilities which totalled $26,000,000 last month as compared with $18,500,000 for February, 1926.

The trade of wholesale firms has also declined considerably, according to the Federal Reserve Board's combined index of sales for six leading lines. The index shows wholesale trade for January reached the lowest level since 1922. Nearly all sections of the country reported smaller sales of meat, groceries, dry goods and hardware. Wholesale dry goods firms reported sales 9 per cent lower than those of 1926, while orders for machine tools dropped 15 per cent.

Give Lie To Gary

These figures contrast with the piously hopeful predictions made by Messrs. Coolidge, Gary, etc., at the beginning of the year. They indicate that the United States reached a prosperity peak in 1926, and that business is on the decline. The implications of this are increased unemployment and decreased wages.

Boosters Forget

Pious prophets forget or pretend to forget that building is on the decline (most cities being overbuilt as far as factories and office buildings are concerned), that automobile production is dropping and steel production is facing a considerable slump.

They forget that the farmer, especially the cotton farmer and the fruit grower, have been so hard hit that their purchasing power has been considerably decreased. They shut their eyes to the basic economic facts that mean increased misery for the American working class.

DAUGHERTY FREE; END PROSECUTION AS JURY DIVIDES

Thomas W. Miller, post-war alien property custodian, today was convicted by a jury in federal court of conspiring to deprive the government of his honest services through the approval of a $7,000,000 claim for war-seized property. The case of his co-defendant Harry M. Daugherty, former attorney general, resulted in a jury disagreement. The two former officials of the Harding administration were alleged to have shared in a $391,000 "fee" paid by German interests to obtain approval of the claim.

The full penalty of the charge on which Miller was convicted is two years in the federal penitentiary, or $10,000 fine or both. The last ballot on the conviction of Daugherty stood 10 to two. Ten ballots were taken, but seldom did the vote vary.

Wheeler Applauds Jury Verdict.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—The Miller-Daugherty verdict today was applauded by senate democrats and insurgents.

"It is a great vindication of the work performed by my committee," said Senator Wheeler (D) of Montana, "and it is a great triumph for justice in the federal courts."

Senator Walsh (D) of Montana, said, "little by little, justice prevails."

AMBASSADOR WHO BALKED KELLOGG FACING RECALL

Don Manuel Telles, Mexican ambassador to the United States, is now on his way to Mexico City, but he has not been recalled from his post according to a statement made today to the International News Service by Genaro M. Elias, Mexican consul general in New York.

Consul General Elias declared that the ambassador went directly to Mexico City from Washington and that his mission concerns the latest note which the United States has sent to Mexico. The contents of this note have not be disclosed.

Teller Sacrificed.

WASHINGTON, March 4. — The rumor persists that Telles, Mexican ambassador is being sacrificed to appease the anger of Kellogg. During the controversy over the refusal of Doheny, Sinclair and Mellon to obey the Mexican land laws, Kellogg frequently issued statements to the public and to the senate foreign relations committee which were proven to be false by statistics available in the Mexican embassy.

A bitter antagonism thus developed in the department of state against Don Manuel, and rumor has it, his head is demanded by some of Kellogg's aides, while Kellogg himself is vacationing on a southern plantation, to keep personally out of the squabble.

Dead Leader's Genius, Courage, Integrity Bring Expressions of Regret and Sympathy

COMRADE C. E. RUTHENBERG, probably never knew while alive the place he had made in the hearts and the regard of his fellow men. It is doubtful if those who knew him well realized this either. It waited on his death, striking so suddenly, stopping him so quickly in the midst of busy and important duties, to draw attention to results he had already achieved.

Ruthenberg was always too actively continuing his work to stop to think of what he had done, and everybody else was too much interested in what he was doing next to sum up the life already lived. His death changes that; he works for us no more, and all who knew him suddenly recognize that there is a gap in their world, not easily filled again.

Every sort of labor organization, unions, schools, co-operatives, defense bodies, women's leagues, the Trade Union Educational League, and the various nuclei of the Workers (Communist) Party of which Ruthenberg was General Secretary, hasten to mail or wire or telephone some expression of their sorrow and a pledge to carry on his principles. The press of Ruthenberg's party will print as many as it can of these messages, if some are delayed or omitted, the writers will understand that the Communist press has its regular work to carry on, too, which Comrade Ruthenberg himself would not have had us neglect.

MINNESOTA TRADE UNIONS, FARMER-LABOR CLUBS SEND MESSAGE.

NORMAN H. TALLENTIRE, Minnesota Organiser, Workers (Communist) Party, in the name of workers and farmers of that state says: "The untimely death of our leader, Comrade Ruthenberg, is a heavy blow to our young party, the value of his clear sight and steady hand becomes revealed at this moment.

"His service must stand as a shining example and incentive for greater efforts."

"In the face of imprisonment and persecution by our class enemies Ruthenberg never faltered in his loyalty to the proletariat. His dauntless courage in face of all obstacles will remain as a constant inspiration to those who must carry on the work.

"We mourn the passing of our leader and determine that his work must live and continue gathering greater strength for accomplishment of our aims.

"All sections and organizations of Minneapolis workers are sending expressions of their grief and sorrow to district office of the Workers Party here. Party members and units, Workmens' Circle, Farmer Labor Clubs, Trade unions, and labor leaders deeply moved. Arrangements going forward for the memorial meetings in Minneapolis March 13th afternoon. "THE LIVING PARTY HIS MONUMENT." MESSAGE FROM THE PHILADELPHIA DISTRICT.

DISTRICT THREE WORKERS PARTY EXECUTIVE—"The entire working class feels most keenly the terrible loss of our great leader, C. E. Ruthenberg. The news of his passing comes like the news of a great calamity to us, a calamity bringing sorrow to our hearts.

"To us Ruthenberg expressed everything bound up in a good fighter, a masterful strategist, a keen analyst, an uncompromising enemy of wrong, a hater of cowardice, the embodiment of political intelligence, the lover of the masses, the leader of the oppressed.

"We look upon him as the outstanding figure in the American labor movement who had the knowledge necessary to lead the toiling masses in the right direction and outline the correct path for the workers in their onward march to freedom.

"What Lenin was to Russia and to the world, Ruthenberg was to the revolutionary movement in America. He stood towering above the rest as a keen Marxist and a devoted Leninist, able to project himself into every problem that confronted the workers and direct them aright in their struggles.

"Before the bloodhounds of capitalism he stood defiant. Judges and jails and prisons were to him only the expected equipment of the enemy whom he attacked as methodically as a general attacks a foe in battle. Fear to him was unknown; persecution and terrorism only caused him to stiffen up against the tools of the decaying system of the master class.

"We are building a monument to Ruthenberg, not of bronze or marble, but of a living Communist Party in America. Our slogan in this time of torn feelings and saddened hearts sounds forth in tones of courage and determination:

"SOLIDARITY WITH THE CEC AND THE COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL!

"BUILD THE WORKERS (COMMUNIST) PARTY!

"STRIKE HARD FOR THE OVERTHROW OF CAPITALISM AND ESTABLISH OUR WORKERS' AND FARMERS' REPUBLIC!

"This was the work for which Ruthenberg gave his life. We honor him for his courage and devotion to this great cause."

"UNDERSTOOD AMERICAN CONDITIONS."

BEN LIFSHITZ, Secretary of the National Bureau, Jewish Section of the Workers Party.—"Comrade Charles E. Ruthenberg, valiant fighter of the American working class, is dead. His life, which was full of devotion to the struggles of the workers, was an inspiration to the militants of this country.

"With his clear vision and understanding of the American conditions he visualized the importance of welding together the foreign born workers with the native American proletariat and lead them as a united force in the struggle against American capitalism and imperialism.

"Under his correct leadership we succeeded in building up a strong party, which has proven itself capable to lead the workers in their struggles.

"The American workers will honor the memory of Comrade Ruthenberg by joining the ranks of the Workers (Communist) Party and carrying on the work for which Comrade Ruthenberg gave his life."

RUSSIAN SECTION SAYS WORKERS PARTY WILL CONTINUE HIS WORK

Central Bureau, Russian Section, Workers (Communist) Party, Chicago, Secretary and the Russian Central Bureau of the Workers Party deeply mourns the death of our beloved Comrade Charles E. Ruthenberg. The passing away of the pioneer of the Communist movement in this country is undoubtedly an irreparable loss to the Party, to the American working class, and to the International Communist Movement.

Splendid Organizer.

"The deceased comrade endeared himself to the American militant workers as a fiery tribune, Marxian writer, splendid organizer, revolutionary leader and devoted comrade.

"As one of the originators of the left movement in the United States, Charles E. Ruthenberg laid the cornerstone of the Communist Party in his country, and for eight years he stood guard to the Communist movement, always ready at a moment's notice to plunge into the thick of the struggle with the enemies of the revolutionary cause, inspiring by his example and carrying along the masses.

Valued as Communist.

"His abilities, his energies, his devotion, his deep knowledge of the theory and practice of Communism were highly valued by the Third International and gained him recognition even of the enemies of the movement.

"During the eight years of its existence the Communist Movement in America had its ups and downs. It celebrated victorias, met with reverses, passed through external and internal crises, withstood persecution. Charles E. Ruthenberg was always in the midst, paving the way in the right direction.

"Yes, deep is the wound inflicted by death. But we have one consolation. And that is the great cause for which Charles E. Ruthenberg lived and fought—the Communist cause.

"Our movement, ought not, shall not, suffer a bit from the passing away of even of such an outstanding figure in the movement, as Charles E. Ruthenberg. Ours is a movement deeply rooted in the conditions of the capitalist order of things in its last, imperialistic stage. It lost a great leader truly, but it will produce other leaders to take his place in the struggle. Inspired by the examples of the tireless fighter, we shall double our efforts to make up for our loss.

"Our leader Charles E. Ruthenberg is dead!

"Long live the revolutionary Communist Movement!"

"Will Continue Fight," says Jewish Youth.

Young Jewish Marxian "Yugent" New York.—The Young Jewish Marxian Yugent is deeply grieved by the great loss the American workers suffer by the death of its most courageous leader, Charles E. Ruthenberg who sacrificed his life for the overthrow of the present system and the establishment of a workers' and farmers' government in this country.

"But work Yugent won't allow its lines to be weakened! On we will go. For a Communistic America, the fight our brave Ruthenberg began."

Roll in the Subs For The DAILY WORKER.

Austin Lewis Calls Him "Great Leader."

AUSTIN LEWIS, noted labor attorney, San Francisco, Calif.—"The death of Ruthenberg is a very great loss at this time. His sagacity and deep knowledge were of very great importance to the labor movement and his unsurpassed knowledge of labor conditions and labor psychology marked him as one of the great leaders.

"His integrity was unblemished and his bravery in face of persecution distinguished him at a time when such qualities are by no means common. He had an unusual grasp of economic conditions and the power of determining the chief and determining factors of the labor situation.

"We have had no fuller or stronger personality in the labor movement of this country intellectually and morally. He compelled respect from friends and enemies alike."

Ruthenberg's Work" Says Coal Miners.

Mine Workers send message from Brownsville, Pa.:—"Brownsville, Pa., sub-district forwards these few lines as an expression of sorrow for the great loss that our party has suffered with the death of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg, national secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party of America. The news of Comrade Ruthenberg's death has inflicted a deep pain in the hearts of our comrades and to many members of local labor unions who knew the life and work of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg.

"To those who knew Comrade Ruthenberg's struggles and persecutions by the capitalist courts, the name of C. E. Ruthenberg will never be forgotten. In the mind of the Marxism and Leninist work and policies he will remain with us, and we will transmit them in his behalf to the American proletariat.

"Long live the American Communist Party and long live the Communist International!"

District Eight Bows In Memory.

CHICAGO, Ill.. — "The Workers (Communist) Party of District Eight expresses its grief together with that of thousands of workers over the death of our Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg. Our party has suffered a loss which it could ill afford. We bow in memory and pledge to carry on the work he loved for Communism.—Workers (Communist) Party, District Eight."

Family of Gene Debs Sends Sympathy

CHICAGO, March 5.—Theodore and Gertrude Debs yesterday wired to James P. Cannon, national secretary of the International Labor Defense as follows: "Please convey to the family of Comrade Ruthenberg our deepest and tenderest sympathy." Eugene Debs and Ruthenberg were both members of the executive committee of the I. L. D.

PIONEERS WILL CARRY ON.

New York Young Pioneers.—"Comrade Ruthenberg's death is a tremendous blow to the American working class. The children of the American working class realize that Comrade Ruthenberg was one of their most valiant fighters.

"Comrade Ruthenberg's life as a leader of the working class and of the American Workers (Communist) Party and his sacrifices and endless devotion to the working class will serve as an inspiration to the Young Pioneers League (the children's section of the Communist movement) to carry on the work of our dear comrade and leader, until we have realized that for which he was so bravely fighting.

"We the Young Pioneer League pledge ourselves to be always ready to fight as children for the emancipation of our class."

(Signed), District 2, Y. P. L.

GANNETT LIKED SPIRIT.

Lewis S. Gannett, associate editor of The Nation.—"I knew Ruthenberg only slightly. I didn't agree with his theory or methods, but I liked his spirit.

"America needs more men who have the courage to face her faults and to seek to remedy them even though it means persecution for themselves. She loses more in losing Ruthenberg than in a dozen of her so-called statesmen."

Local Union Secretary Speaks.

G. Goodfert, secretary, Bakers Union, Local 134, Amalgamated Food Workers.—"We express our sincere proletarian condolence for the death of America's foremost working class fighter. Despite this great loss to the American workers the party which he lead so part and will continue in its activities to the final emancipation of the working class of America from the yoke of capitalism."

Takes His Place Among Great Revolutionists.

LAURENCE TODD, Washington correspondent of the Federated Press.—"Ruthenberg was mankind enslaved by capitalism and driven like sheep to slaughter in imperialist wars in order that slavery might be intensified and prolonged.

"His courage in revolt and his vision of a new world where workers shall be free caused him persecution, calumny and place among revolutionists inspired by John Brown, Garrison, Marx, Debs, Liebknecht and Lenin."

"The Most Indicted Man."

BROOKLYN SECTION EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE WORKERS PARTY. — "The sudden death of our comrade, C. E. Ruthenberg, was a great shock to us, and is an irreplaceable loss to the Workers Party, the American working class and the international working class movement. His last words were true to his entire life in showing that his greatest concern was the welfare of the workers and the working class movement.

"His unflinching courage in carrying on the struggle of the workers has served as an inspiration to thousands. We all remember that he was the only organizer who treated the St. Louis majority report "as more than a scrap of paper, even though his putting theory into practice meant his being arrested and incarcerated until he was called the most indicted man in the country.

"We all remember the ringing challenge to the capitalist courts in his New York trial, and his defiance flung to the capitalist powers when they attempted to crush his revolutionary spirit by persecution. We all remember his untiring energy in the daily grind.

"We resolve to honor his memory by devoting ourselves with renewed energy to build the party which was the great inspiration of his life."

LONDON OPINION IS THAT CRUISER CHALLENGES U.S.

Kellogg's Satisfaction Not Shared by Britain

LONDON, March 4.—Though Six Austen Chamberlain is very suave and almost ingratiating in his explanations of the sending of the cruiser Colombo to Nicaragua, speculation and interpretation run rife among the private members of parliament, and in the political columns of the influential newspapers.

The dispatch of the Colombo into a part of the world considered as practically a United States protectorate, and at a time when Wall Streets' government is making it even more of a closed back yard, is considered a significant change in British diplomacy. Especially it is hoped that it marks the limit to a Monroe Doctrine that seems to be spreading elastically, over more than two continents.

All the papers quote the "presidential spokesman" speech which exenses the subjugation of Nicaragua on the grounds that under the Monroe Doctrine, other countries do not send their armed forces to protect their nationals, therefore the United States must do it for them.

The London Times correspondent's comment on this was:

"Here, it is assumed, is not only a statement of what foreign governments do not do but more than a hint of what they should not do. Briefly, if a play on words be permitted for the sake of the truth, it is a further demonstration of how the Monroe Doctrine may go broadening down from president to president."

The London Times correspondent thus outlined the apprehension which crowd the British official mind when it tries to reconcile British ownership of British Honduras in Central America and British Guiana in South America with America's statement that "other governments hesitate to send forces to Latin America because of our position on the Monroe Doctrine."

P. O. Clerks Want Pension.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J. (FP)—Eight grades of pay instead of five are asked for post office clerks by the New Jersey section convention. A pension of $1,200 annually for workers in service 30 years is endorsed. Present pay rates, won from congress by the National Federation of Post Office Clerks in 1925, run from $1,700 to $2,100 per year. Abolition of congressional franking privileges was announced by congressman Clyde Kelly of Pittsburg as a goal, when he addressed the clerks' convention.

against the Free State government, and completely ignoring the needs of the workers and peasants as well as the anti-imperialist movement on a world scale that is sapping the foundations on which the British empire is built. A revolutionary nationalist movement in Ireland would hail the Chinese struggle, it would support Mexico and Nicaragua against American imperialism and it would make common cause with the oppressed victims of international capital the world over. The Irish nationalist movement is doing nothing of the kind. It is too busy crawling and sneezing whenever the pope takes snuff. In fact DeValera organs in the United States are vilifying Mexico and boosting the Doheny oil interests.

No Irish revolutionary leadership that is under the influence of Rome can ever hope to lead the Irish masses to victory. There are people who doubt the wisdom of dwelling on this theme. They think it would be "wiser" to leave the religious question alone. For that matter it would be "wiser" to leave everything alone and join Tammany Hall, get a job in the health department and spend a happy lifetime making out a few burial permits a day. But progress is only made over the dead bodies of superstitions and false theories. Some people are jolted out of their dormatic dugouts, perhaps a few are wheedled.

Mr. DeValera comes to the United States to testify at a hearing where a few million dollars subscribed to the republican cause by Irish workers in America are in litigation between the Free State government and the republican movement. Mr. DeValera will also raise money to conduct election campaigns in Ireland. And among the members of the committee picked by Irish societies to welcome Mr. DeValera we find the malodorous Judge Rosalsky, who earned the hatred of labor in the United States by the way savage sentences were imposed by him on striking furriers. Freedom for Ireland with the aidof a scabby judge!

And Judge Rosalsky is hardly less notorious than Mr. Martin Conboy, another member of the reception committee who was chairman of the New York draft board during the war and who sent several young Irish republicans to jail for insisting on signing their names on the registration blanks as citizens of the Irish Republic rather than as British subjects. Mr. Conboy did not believe there was such a thing as an Irish Republic but now he will not have the honor of having his automobile accepted to lug the then president of the Irish Republic around the city. If the thinking machinery of the Irish workers in America has not stopped clicking they should apply to Mr. DeValera, the criterion of conduct which judged a man by the company he keeps.

PREMIER Baldwin deprecated the hostile greeting accorded him by a body of Welsh miners when, accompanied by his wife he visited a mine where over fifty workers were killed in an explosion. Baldwin came to contribute words of sympathy, but the miners remembered his contribution to the mine owners during the coal strike, when he placed all the powers of the government at the disposition of the operators. So the miners gave him the "bird." Since the termination of the strike is a defeat for the miners the owners have let down on safety regulations with the result that in their greed for profits, lives are being sacrificed by the hundreds.

Another New York Girl Gone.

Thirteen-year-old Gusline Reese, daughter of Augustus Reese, prominent civil engineer of New York and Atlanta, Ga., was reported to police today as missing from her home here since last Sunday night. A possible kidnaping or a search for adventure rivalling the recent episode of Kaisa Mahonev, daughter of a New York judge, was seen in Guslines disappearance.

Still Prosecuting "Sex."

Mae West, author and star of the play, "Sex," C. W. Morgenstern, producer, and 20 members of the cast pleaded not guilty today in General Sessions Court to indictments charging them with "corrupting morals" and "maintaining a public nuisance." Trial was set for next Wednesday.

Church No Longer So Useful to Rulers of Chile; Out of Army

SANTIAGO, Chile, March 4.—Religious services in the Chilean army are to be abolished, according to an unofficial statement. This is considered to indicate another victory by the commercial and middle classes of Chile over the church. The semi-Fascist outlook of the present government is not friendly to such power as the church has hitherto possessed.

BOHM, SMARTING FROM PUBLICITY ATTACKS WORKER

Raves Over Communist Press at Labor Council

Smarting under the lash of publicity, Ernest Bohm, manager of the Bookkeepers' and Stenographers' Union, rose on the floor of the Central Trades and Labor Council last night and tried to explain away the charge made by The DAILY WORKER that gangsterism was present at the expulsion of 21 militant members of his union at the meeting last Monday.

Says Daily Worker Lied.

Bohm's defense was that those present, gangsters and all, evidently, had cards in his union. He said that means The Daily was lying.

This is the second attack in the C. T. L. C. on The DAILY WORKER by reactionary labor officials. The first was two weeks ago, when Matthew Woll delivered a spread-eagle speech against it, on the occasion of the expulsion from the council of some of its best members.

Woll Was Exposed.

Woll was shortly thereafter caught, and publically castigated by James Maurer, head of the Federation of Labor of Pennsylvania for co-operating with the bosses to defeat old age pension laws.

At the beginning of the meeting John Coughlin, secretary of the body, announced that he had received two communications. One from Otto Schachtman, president of International Furriers' Union, and the other from an organization "that has no standing with this body." No direct reference was made in the resolution sent the council from the furriers' Cooper Union meeting.

A motion was passed to refer both of them to the executive board, instructing that body to co-operate with the special red-hunting committee of the A. F. of L. appointed by President Green, consisting of Matthew Woll, Edward McGrady and Hugh Frayne. Frayne and McGrady were both present at the meeting.

Delegates Help Passaic.

John Marshall, representing the United Textile Workers of Passaic, was given the floor to sell tickets for the motion picture of the Passaic strike being shown at the Waldorf Theatre this coming Sunday. The council bought $15 worth of tickets and many members who were present bought additional ones.

Joseph Ryan, Jerome Keating and J. W. Quirello were appointed as a the hearing on injunctions to be held committee to represent the council at at Albany next Tuesday.

Librarians Start Discussion.

Miss Malone, representing the Librarians' Union, asked for assistance in their struggle against the politicians of Queens who have discharged two members of the union for appearing before a hearing at Albany that was taking up the question of wage increases.

After a lengthy discussion in which many delegates participated a motion was passed to refer the entire matter to the executive council for consideration. This motion was introduced by Abraham Lefkowitz of the Teachers' Union.

MONTREAL LABOR HELPS FIGHT ON SIGMAN MACHINE

"Save the Union" Bonds Bought in Many Cities

"Buy another bond and sell one to your friend," the slogan raised by the committee of the "Save the Union" bond issue of $250,000 has resulted in a large sale of bonds within the past few days, according to Julius Portnoy, secretary of the bond issue.

Many Cities Help.

"In one day we have received an additional $175 from Cleveland, $300 from the Canadian Labor Circle, $75 from Montreal, $85 from Montreal Circle of Workmens' Circle, branch 462 from Rochester, and a large number of shares of the Russian American Industrial Corporation to be exchanged for bonds," he said.

The workers of the Vogue Shirt Shop brought in $15 to apply on bond, and the building workers on the United Workers Cooperative in the Bronx raised $75 for the purchase of bonds, which are to be turned over to The DAILY WORKER upon maturity.

Portnoy said that subscriptions were being taken in many shops, and that by the end of the week "dozens of shops" would bring in money for the bonds. "The workers are responding most enthusiastically to the call of the bond issue," he said. "We are going to reach our goal—there is no doubt of that. The objective now must be to reach it as soon as possible. The Joint Board must have money at once to carry on its fight against Sigmanism and union-wrecking."

Bonds Bear Interest.

The bonds are purchasable in denominations of $25, $50, $100 and $500, and bear a six per cent interest. They will mature in two years and are guaranteed by the Joint Board and by the four most powerful locals in the union, Locals 2, 9, 22 and 35.

Workers, buy another bond and sell one to a friend!

News from New Jersey

(Special to The DAILY WORKER)

NEWARK, N. J.—Local 103 of the Typographical Union of Newark recently conducted a meeting and luncheon at the St. Francis Hotel at which non-union waitresses served the participants. Local 109 of the Cooks and Waiters are conducting an intensive drive to organize all the hotels, restaurants and lunch wagons. They took up the matter of the Typographical luncheon at the Essex Trades Council on Friday evening, Feb. 25. The council went on record that the secretary of the council send a letter of protest to the international and to the local union. At this meeting President Howard of International Typographical Union and Vice-president Morrison of the American Federation were present.

The rank and file must always be on guard and take action against all violators of union principles whether they be officials or not. At this time when the open shop and the bosses are attempting to introduce the American plan of company unionism, all workers must conduct more intensive campaigns to unionize plants and tighten ranks for a united front against all the enemies of labor.

Conference on Poland.

NEWARK, N. J.—There will be a conference of various organizations on Sunday morning, March 6, at 10 a. m., in the Ukrainian Labor Home at 59 Beacon St., Newark, to map out ways and means of arousing the workers in mass protest against the White Terror in Poland. All organizations are urged to send delegates. The conference is called under the auspices of the Russian Workers' Club and the Polish branch of the International Labor Defense of Newark.

NEWARK, N. J.—There will be a Greek mass meeting held in Newark on Sunday afternoon at the Musicians' Hall on Plane St. under the auspices of the Greek Workers' Club. The meeting is called for the purpose of protesting against the contract turned over by the Greek government to a British capitalist firm which will enslave the workers of Greece for 99 years. All Greek workers are urged to attend; admission is free.

Injunction Fails.

NEWARK, N. J.—Local 109 of the Cooks' and Waiters' Union in Newark are conducting an active campaign. They are meeting stubborn resistance on the part of the employers. The bosses employ the courts and injunctions to prohibit the union from organizing each establishments. David Stein, the business representative of the union, states that the union is meeting with success, however. The latest to sign the union agreement are Westerman and Bahlman, 49 Lafayette St., and the firm of Eyno & Nelson, 1202 Broad St. The latter secured an injunction against the union and its representatives to prevent it from organizing his restaurant. Vice - Chancellor Church, a notorious union hater, issued the injunction. The restraining order was issued on Dec. 11. Today this place employs union labor and has signed the agreement, thus proving the uselessness of injunctions and the court to settle labor disputes.

Broadsilk Strike.

PATERSON, N. J.—The textile manufacturers in Paterson have instituted a drive to lengthen the work-day to ten hours. They started in the broadsilk plant of Aronsohn & Hirschfield, 35 Fulton St. The workers affiliated with the Associated Silk Workers went out on strike when the management made the change.

The mill owners are taking advantage of a slow season to lengthen hours and decrease wages.

The Manager's Corner

A Substantial Tribute To Comrade Ruthenberg.

From many parts of the country we are now receiving donations to The DAILY WORKER Sustaining Fund to honor the memory of Comrade Ruthenberg. The comrades generally seem to realize that something more than condolences and expressions of sympathy are appropriate. They feel that a contribution to The DAILY WORKER Sustaining Fund is the most fitting tribute they can offer.

These comrades have shown a true proletarian instinct for what is the proper policy in the situation. They realize that the finest tribute they can offer to the memory of Comrade Ruthenberg is a substantial and regular contribution to the paper, to which he so energetically devoted himself. Within a few days we will publish the names of the Sustaining Fund Members who have already been enrolled. We hope the closest friends of The DAILY WORKER will grasp this opportunity to show their devotion to the organ which Comrade Ruthenberg worked so diligently to establish and maintain.

The Farmers' Dilemma and the Way Out

In a recent statement to the Washington bureau of the Federated Press, W. A. Anderson, chairman of the Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota, gave the following reasons for the steadily decreasing living standards of the farmers:

(1) High protective tariff on manufactured goods increasing the prices farmers pay for these commodities.

(2) Excessive transportation charges.

(3) Monopolies which arbitrarily fix prices of commodities.

This is another and rather roundabout way of saying that the farmer is in the grip of a system in which he exercises but little influence.

Anderson should also have given as another and perhaps more important reason the fact that the farmers as a class are paying interest on more than $8,000,000,000 of mortgages—trying to bear a burden which is crushing them to the earth which they till for little reward. This burden grows heavier year by year.

The days of cheap land are gone as well in America, while the products of the immense rich Russian areas are now coming into the world markets in ever greater quantities.

Even a casual survey of the position of the American farmer is sufficient to disclose the utterly foolish method followed by the great majority of them to better their conditions. They support, except in rare cases as in Minnesota, either the democrat or republican party—the parties which are the class political expression of the railroad, banking and manufacturing interests, the instruments by which they manipulate the power of the government in their own behalf.

Most farming sections are strongholds of the republican party—the party of high tariff. The farmers have switched at times to the democrat party only to find that the legislation it passed favored everybody except the workers and farmers. The last democrat administration drove the masses into a war in the interest of the house of Morgan, the biggest banking concern in the world and the farmers and workers are still paying for this remarkably profitable adventure in behalf of their class enemies.

Tradition has a strong hold on the American farmer. He is very much afraid of all isms except capitalism but this is the ism responsible for his woes.

He cannot continue to support the parties of American capitalism without becoming peasantized—reduced to serfdom.

Traditions are hard to break when the whole propaganda machinery of the most powerful ruling class in the world devotes its entire time to maintaining the fiction of the non-existence of classes in America and the identity of interest of all members of that great, glorious and free family—the American "peepul."

But the iron logic of economic pressure is breaking the hold of tradition as in Minnesota and even with a trade union leadership which fights the idea of a break with the parties of capitalism and the organization of a powerful party of workers and farmers, the farmer is coming to realize that he must fight side by side with the industrial workers against a common enemy.

A militant leadership for the labor movement and the farmers will be found aligned with the workers.

There is no other way out of the mire into which both groups of producers have been shoved by false leaders and the pressure of a system organized for bankers and industrial lords.

Foreign Affairs—The New Taboo of Wall Street's Medicine Men

"Private meddling with the vital foreign relations of a country is something that cannot be tolerated," says the New York Tribune in an editorial castigating Senator Borah for daring to attempt to discover the truth concerning American relations with Mexico. It can be said in passing that the very cursory investigation made by Borah disclosed the fact that American diplomacy differs in nowise from the diplomacy of other capitalist countries, i. e., that the state department from Kellogg down is a combination of skilled, semi-skilled and unskilled liars and lickspittles of the industrial and financial lords.

Borah's investigation is hardly "private meddling" since he is chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations but if he were only a private citizen it still would be his duty to expose if possible a conspiracy against another nation and the American masses—a conspiracy which was and is leading to war with Mexico in behalf of Standard Oil and of Doheny—one of America's most outstanding crooks and grafters whose methods of accumulation are a little too raw even for his fellow robbers.

Just now the imperialist press is directing its fire at Borah. But its target is really the right of criticism of government by the governed. The restriction of this privilege to a low minimum and its final abolition is something desired most ardently by the capitalist class.

In this period of imperialist adventures, when the true motives for conquest of weaker peoples and the brutal facts of the conquest itself need concealment, we can expect a new drive on such liberties as free speech, press and assemblage.

The field of foreign affairs is to become a sort of forbidden territory as in Great Britain since her rise as a ruler of colonies, into which none may venture except those considered 100 per cent loyal. As American imperialism expands and in consequence comes oftener into conflict with colonial peoples and imperialist rivals, foreign affairs take precedence over all but the most important matters of domestic policy.

There must be no timidity in exposing the plots of Wall Street's state department and no capitulation to the desire of the ruling class for the abolition of all restrictions upon the power of its servants to lie, browbeat and finally make war.

RECORD TRIBUTE IN 1926

By LELAND OLDS (Federated Press).

DIVIDEND and interest payments by American corporations in 1926 amounted to $4,335,912,000, according to the U. S. department of commerce. The huge sum distributed to the owners of America in cash exceeds by $288,688,000, or more than 6%, the cash handed out of the previous year. It is without question the largest cash tribute ever exacted by an owning class in the history of the world.

This enormous return to the small class which lives by owning stocks and bonds would have provided a full year's wage to about 3,250,000 factory workers. If divided equally among all the farmers, factory workers, railroad workers and miners employed throughout the country it would have added more than $250 to each family budget.

The 1926 dividend and interest payments mark a gain of 27% over 1920. They represent an increase of 144% over 1913 when stock and bond holders received a cash income of $1,777,236,000.

Total dividend and interest payments in each year since 1914 were:

1913	$1,777,236,000
1914	1,785,376,000
1915	1,805,172,000
1916	2,135,028,000
1917	2,389,140,000
1918	2,724,732,000
1919	3,189,168,000
1920	3,414,876,000
1921	3,341,808,000
1922	3,399,720,000
1923	3,385,216,000
1924	3,840,588,000
1925	4,077,324,000
1926	4,335,912,000
Total	$41,862,236,000

Dividend payments in 1926, taken separately, amounted to $1,120,392,000 while interest totaled $3,215,520,000. Corresponding figures for 1913 were $815,056,000 dividends and $962,180,000 interest. Dividend payments have increased only 31% while interest payments have increased 235%. In other words the owning class in America is becoming a coupon-clipping class without direct responsibility toward the people which produce its lavish income.

The average rate of dividends on industrial stocks has been slowly but steadily increasing. In 1913 the average annual return was $5.23 a share. In 1917 it reached a wartime peak of $6.66 and was again $5.53 in 1926. Then the rate slumped to a low of $4.40 a share in 1922. In 1925, however, it passed all previous records with $7.09 a share. In 1926 it reached $7.54 a share. If account were taken of the stock dividends which have increased the return on actual investment would show much higher.

Railroad dividends at $330,336,000 surpass all previous records.

The cash income of stock and bond holders over the 14-year period covered by the table totaled $41,862,236,000. About 70% of this stream of gold flowed to less than 1% of the population, to the class which can live in luxury without giving any service in return.

Attempts to justify such huge payments to the idle rich on the ground that they furnish new capital break down because corporations are today retaining enough in undivided profits to provide for all necessary expansion of the country's industrial plant. The country today faces not a shortage but a surplus of new capital. The resulting crisis can be avoided only by diverting a large part of the profit stream into wages.

FOOTNOTES TO THE NEWS

How To Abolish Crime.—The American press—and in particular its Washington correspondents—are utterly lacking in a sense of humor. They report without a flicker of amusement one of the most farcical official documents in the history of American imperialism. The creature of the American lumber interests in Nicaragua, Diaz, has sent a formal "request" that the United States establish a protectorate over his country. He wants a treaty in which the U. S. should "guarantee the sovereignty of Nicaragua." In return for this guarantee he is willing to give up all pretense of sovereignty. For instance, the U. S. is to have the legal right to intervene at any time; it is to put its own people in charge of the financial and technical affairs of that country, etc. Diaz's logic is exquisite.

"As matters now stand," he writes, "the frequent intervention of American armed forces in our territory is directed exclusively for the protection of American and foreign lives and property. We have therefore reached the conclusion that we want to derive for ourselves some benefit and permanent advantage from American intervention, which we have thus far found inevitable, and at the same time transfer it from its present somewhat vague de facto basis to a well defined de jure status with clearly stated responsibilities and apparent benefits for the intervenor and the intervened."

That's great stuff! There lurks in it a suggestion to cities like New York and Chicago, where crime is rampant. By legalizing (giving a "well defined de jure status") robbery, murder, etc., all crime and criminals would automatically be abolished.

TWELVE

On reading in the papers about twelve London clubmen who have applied for permission to fight for Chang Tso Lin, the Manchurian dictator, against the Chinese Nationalist army.

Twelve monocled parasites
Stand in a row
Re-spatted, high-hatted
But nowhere to go.

Twelve silly young asses,
Tired, yawning and bored
Every damned one of them,
Gentleman, Lord.

Like Gilbert and Sullivan's Burlesquish fools,
They vow that they want to be
Chang Tso Lin's tools.

They've chosen their company
Better than they knew.
Chang and these gentlemen
Make a jolly fine crew.

Twelve British carcasses
"SUPERIOR", "you know"
May soon rot in China-land
Where bright poppies grow.

In Defense of New Jersey.—Organizations of humane animal lovers are protesting against the wholesale slaughter of crows in New Jersey. These critics should not be too harsh on the state. The war on the crows was undertaken only as a last resort. The heart of official New Jersey is tender enough. The critics forget such exciting demonstration of tenderness recently and we had better recall it to their minds. Over in New Brunswick a farmer was accused of not feeding his cows enough. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals obtained a warrant against him. State troopers arrived on the farm to serve the warrant. When the farmer hesitated to accept it they shot at him, whereupon, he retired to his house and barred the door. The animal lovers, however, were resolute. They laid siege to the house, crippled the farmer, murdered his sister and nearly destroyed the house. But they saved the cows! So there you are. The Society for the Prevention, etc., is defending the troopers who face a charge of murder. Let the aforementioned critics always remember these martyrs to the cause of kindness to animals.

Workers Theatre and The Frock Coats.—The advance announcements of the New Playwrights Theatre were full of courageous references to proletarian art . . . Communist interpretation . . . workers' theatre . . . Maierhold's technique," etc., etc. "We are trying hard to give radicals a theatre of their own," said one statement. ". . . We want to write and produce plays for the workers, who are the best audience. . . ." But the publicity department of this epoch-making theatre completely forgot the labor press in its official opening. It catered to the frock coats in orthodox fashion. The bourgeois press was invited, of course, and quite proper. They sneered at the whole thing, quite as expected. But the labor papers and the labor news agencies were forgotten. The Federated Press, the official Soviet news bureau, the publications of the unions were ignored. The conductors of clever columns in the capitalist press were invited. But the conductors of cleverer columns in the workers' press—this one in particular—were not. Maierhold will learn of the opening, if at all, from the bourgeois press, because his own press was forgotten and reminding them did no good. Proletarian art movements will do much better as soon as they stop kow-towing to the silk hats.

FROM A GALLERY OF FUTILITIES.

1. An Urban Poetess.

She sprang from the asphalt of city streets. She grew up among tenements and skyscrapers, thunderous traffic and shouts of humans. But these things could not crush her poetic soul. Her thoughts were fragrant as a lovely countryside. Her inner vision saw green fields spread on rolling hillsides like cloths for a picnic of the gods. It saw virgin forests buzzing with an intense animal life. It concentrated upon the exquisiteness of a single flower, the tracery of veins on a single petal . . .

But having been raised in the city she had no words for these visions. However vast it might be to her emotionally, a tree was but a tree to her verbally. Except for the domesticated roses, sweet peas, carnations one may buy at a florist's she could not call flowers familiarly by their names. On the other hand, she knew from her reading the names of trees and flowers which she had never seen . . . such exquisite, exotic names some of them too . . .

And how is one to write poetry without these things? Where, she asked herself in dismay, will you find a poem worthy of the name without birds and flowers and brooks and cows in it?

Which explains what her admiring friends for a long time failed to understand—her sudden devotion to the natural sciences. It was a practical masculine sort of interest wholly at variance with her poetic nature, they said. The fact though is that she has thrown herself ardently into the study of biology, botany, zoology . . . devours articles on agronomy and animal husbandry . . . In a word, she is acquiring the raw material of poesy, and once she feels that she knows her ground will step out boldly as a poetess.

Ruthenberg Explains the Criticism of Socialist Party by the Left Wing

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

It is inevitable that the death of our comrade and leader, C. E. Ruthenberg, should again bring to the forefront the differences between the Socialist Party of Hillquitism, typified in Morris Hillquit and Victor L. Berger, and the Socialist Party's pre-war left wing that developed into the American Communist Party.

Ruthenberg was the standard bearer of the clash with the socialist parliamentarians. He was the leader of the struggle to win the Socialist Party membership for a revolutionary position, to wage a conscious struggle against capitalism. It was this long effort, through the ten years from 1909 to 1919, that fitted him so well for the mantel of leadership that fell upon his shoulders in the young American Communist movement.

It may be said that of the millions who now read of his death, multitudes will ponder, "Why did Ruthenberg break with Hillquit and Berger and help build the Communist Party?"

Ruthenberg joined the Socialist Party in January, 1900. Within two or three months after joining the party he became one of its officials, serving it in some official capacity up to June, 1917, without pay. He became a paid employe of the party in the month that the espionage act went into effect, when war conscription was put into force—June, 1917, taking up the cudgels against war and militarism more actively in the hours when many socialist officials were anxious to drop dangerous party duties, following the adoption of the St. Louis Anti-War Proclamation.

It was during these months of the American participation in the war, the months following the Bolshevik triumph in Russia, that the differences within the Socialist party crystallized and led up to the split of 1919.

Ruthenberg set forth those differences while on the witness stand in the capitalist court, in New York City, when he was on trial charged with holding views hostile to the American capitalist government.

Under direct examination by I. E. Ferguson, also on trial, but who acted as one of counsel, Ruthenberg had explained that the socialist locals in Ohio were overwhelmingly left wing.

In answer to the question by Ferguson, "Can you tell us what was said by the left wingers with regard to the Socialist Party at that time (early part of 1919)?" Ruthenberg replied:

"The criticism was of the platforms of the Socialist Party, which included a great number of so-called immediate demands. These demands dealt with immediate changes which the party advocated, such as, for instance, the abolition of the senate or the limitation of the hours of work for children, or industrial insurance, accident insurance and similar reforms. The criticism was that the Socialist Party through the advocacy of such measures was misleading the working class into a belief that they could secure such reforms from oppression and exploitation to which they were subjected under the capitalist system, by achieving the enactment of such measures. The left wing contended, and the criticism was, that the party should assume the position of demanding merely one thing, and that is the abolition of the capitalist system, and as the first step toward that end, the transference of political power from the capitalist class to the working class."

"Q. Did this criticism state an opposition to betterment of conditions of workers now? A. No, it did not.

"Q. Was it then simply an opposition to the Socialist Party doing one sort of thing or another? A. It was opposition to the Socialist Party laying emphasis in its propaganda campaign, propagnnda and educational work upon these measures as against the ultimate aim for which the party was supposed to stand."

"Q. Go on and state other criticisms that you know that were made, if any, of the official Socialist Party by the left wing? A. Also that the Socialist Party emphasized the participation in the elections and the election of certain officials; that it had become more or less a vote getting machine to elect certain persons to public offices, rather than an organization which sought to bring about a fundamental change in the social system. That, in contradistinction to the emphasis on the election of certain candidates, the left wing believed that emphasis should be placed upon the industrial organization of the workers."

"Q. What do you mean by that? A. The organization into unions, into industrial unions, and use of the industrial power of the workers in their struggle for a change in the social system. It was the position of the left wing that, under the existing political and social conditions in the various capitalist countries, that with the control of the newspapers, the control of the educational institutions, the control of all the means of information in the hands of the dominant class, the capitalist class, that the effort to achieve political control through election campaigns was fruitless; that the working class should rely upon the point at which its power could be organized and used directly through the industrial form of organization, and through such use of that power as would develop under the change in the social system and the social developments."

"Q. What is an industrial union as you have now used the term? A. The organization of all the workers irrespective of craft into one union.

"Q. Of all of what workers? A. All the workers employed in a certain industry.

"Q. The organizations of the workers of the particular industry in the industrial union of that industry? A. Yes, sir, and the combinations of those industrial unions into one union.

"Q. And in what sense do you use the word 'industrial action'? A. In the sense of using their power to withhold their services to achieve their own ends.

"Q. By that you mean strike action? A. Yes.

"By the Court.

"Q. To achieve what end? A. Those which they were organized to achieve.

"Q. And what are those? A. The effort was to change capitalism into Socialism.

"By Ferguson.

"Q. Now, what do you mean by that? A. To change the purpose of securing profits, the machinery of production and distribution, into a society in which the ownership of the machinery of production and distribution would be in the hands of all of society."

• • •

It was thus that Ruthenberg blazed, in a capitalist courtroom, the way to a correct understanding by increasing masses of American workers of the Communist program as opposed to the betrayal of Socialism by the Socialist Party reactionaries. To achieve that program, Ruthenberg, on his bed of agony and death, appealed to his comrades the nation over, "Let us carry on to the victory!"

CURRENT EVENTS

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

NEARLY two whole pages of yesterday's New York Tribune were devoted to special correspondence from European capitals on the diplomatic maneuvering that are now going on between the capitalist powers. Every word of this correspondence spelled War. The writers agreed that in the recent exchange of notes between Great Britain and the Soviet Union, Litvinoff made Chamberlain look like a schoolboy playing politics. One gathers from the correspondence that England is actively engaged in building a bloc of hostile states on the Soviet Union's western border while pretending to be working for world peace. England denies that but continues the work.

FOR the first time in history a whole nation has been legislated into one giant war machine, in peace time. Last week the French parliament, on motion of a socialist, voted, with only the Communists in opposition, to mobilize the whole man power and industrial power of the country for service in case of war. This patriotic yellow socialists also dwelt on the necessity of building chains of fortresses around the frontiers and setting up barbed wire entanglements. This does not look as if the last war to end war would be the last. The next is more likely to be that, provided the working class of the world so decide.

THE administration is playing a hide-and-go-seek policy with Mexico. Open diplomacy is no longer openly arrived at. Kellogg dispatched a note to Calles a week ago. The press has been unable to fathom its contents. Again Kellogg has struck, again in secret. It appears that the Mexican consul general in New York has been countering the propaganda of the oil barons by publicity which gives the facts about the Mexican situation. We understand that Kellogg looks with suspicion on the Mexican consul. We are amazed that the Mexican representative is getting off so easy. Telling the truth has become such a rare indoor sport in Washington nowadays that the practice may soon be as hazardous a luxury as reciting the declaration of independence was during the war.

Important Fight Is Now Brewing For Shanghai

U. S. Marines Parade Thru Foreign Settlement

SHANGHAI, March 6. — An important struggle, constituting the Nationalists' final real test of strength, is developing in the vicinity of Soochow where the Nationalists are making a thrust from Chekiang province in an attempt to cut off Shanghai from the main Nankow-Chan army.

The Nationalists obviously intend to seize the Shanghai-Nanking railway, thus consolidating their position before proceeding further toward Shanghai.

Twelve hundred American marines marched thru the international settlement yesterday, with rifles on their shoulders and the bands playing. The object of the parade was ostensibly to exercise the troops but really to show the Chinese that the United States was ready to protect the interests of the Wall Street investors and that Britain was not the only country that had a monopoly on armed forces.

Imperialist Troops Fraternize.

To prove that the United States troops would co-operate with the British against the Nationalists, the marines fraternized with the British while silent Chinese looked on.

Responsible foreigners regard the probability of disturbances inside the foreign settlement as exceedingly remote. The Nationalists are well disciplined and their progress is not characterized by the looting, rape, and pillage that follows in the wake of the militarists.

Rumored Agreement.

There are reports that the Nationalists and Chang Chung Chang have reached an agreement whereby the Nationalists will be allowed to occupy Shanghai without a struggle. On the other hand the revolutionary elements in the Koumintang whose policy has been so far successful in the northern march declare that there can be no solution of the Chinese question until the militarists are completely destroyed.

It is apparent that the imperialist powers have given up hope of defeating the Nationalist revolution by force. They are maneuvering for a split in the Koumintang party and building their hopes on victory for the right wing with a compromise agreement between the right wing and the northern militarists.

International Woman's Day Celebration To Be This Tuesday, March 8

The International Women's Day will be celebrated on Tuesday, March 8th, the birthday of Rosa Luxemburg, in all principle cities in the country. In New York the Central Opera House at 308 East 57th St. has been engaged for this day and an elaborate program has been selected to give due credit to the women's movement.

In Philadelphia the celebration will take place at the Grand Fraternity Hall, 1026 Arch street, on the same day at 8 p.m. The program which has been arranged includes many prominent woman speakers, including Rebecca Grecht of this city. Progressive and liberal organizations, including the Woman's Trade Union League and the Woman's International League for Peace and Freedom, will also be present.

The youth of the city will be represented by members of the Young Pioneers, an organization of working class children, pledged to support their mothers and fathers in their fight for strong unions and against imperialist wars.

Arrangements are being made for an overflow turn-out and the workers of New York and Philadelphia are urged to come early to these celebrations.

WORKERS PARTY OF MICHIGAN TO ENTER ELECTION

Nominates Candidates For Spring Campaign

DETROIT, Mich.—At a regularly called state convention of the Workers (Communist) Party of Michigan, held in Detroit Saturday, February 26, it was decided to participate in the coming spring election to be held Monday, April 4.

The following Communist candidates have been nominated:

For justice of Supreme Court, Cyril Lambkin of Detroit and John Kuskela of Hancock, Mich.; for Regents of University, Comrades William Reynolds of Detroit and Daniel Clinton Holder of Muskegon, Mich.; for member of Board of Education, Comrade Arnold Ziegler of Grand Rapids, Mich.; for superintendent of Public Instruction, Comrade Sarah Victor of Detroit; for members of State Board of Agriculture, Comrades William Mollenhauer and Aaron M. Metz of Detroit.

A new state central committee has been elected and instructed to draw up a platform for the election campaign and take the necessary steps to conduct a vigorous campaign this spring thruout the State of Michigan.

Proletarian Artist Making Painting of Nicholas' Abdication

MOSCOW, March 6.—The private railroad car in which Tsar Nicholas II signed his abdication from the throne of all the Russias in March, 1917, has been placed at the disposal of V. N. Pcheline, proletarian artist, to paint a picture of the abdication.

Nicholas is dead, but eye-witnesses of that proud moment when the Tsar was made to realize the might of the common people he had ruled so long will describe it to the artist. He is working on a commission from the government to prepare the picture for unveiling at the anniversary of the Bolshevist revolution.

Fraud Charged in Local 38 Election

Election Committee States Rights Cheated

Startling revelations in connection with the recent election of "right wing" officers of Custom Tailors' Local 38, of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, have been made public by members of the election objection committee, a majority of whom believe that the election was won thru fraud.

In a formal statement issued by the chairman and four other members of the committee, Vice-president Greenberg is censured for refusing to act when various irregularities were called to his attention, and it is urged that installation of all new officers be postponed until an investigation of the election has been conducted by some impartial committee.

Statement of Committee.

The announcement made by the members of the election objection committee is as follows:

"We, the majority of the election objection committee of Local 38, do hereby state that we are unable to declare the newly elected officers duly elected for the following reasons:

"It has been called to our attention, and we have verified the fact, that two votes have been cast for each of the following ledger numbers: 312, 406, 438, 1008, 1171, 1158, 1410, 1470.

Fraudulent Practice Charged.

"A cursory investigation of this fraud brings us to the conclusion that ledger numbers of members of Local 38 have been copied and duplicated books made out, which were used by persons unknown to us. It is our opinion that a thorough investigation would reveal additional votes cast fraudulently under ledger numbers of members who have not voted and for whom duplicate books were made out by the parties responsible.

"We also have in our possession a written statement, sworn to before a notary public, by an eye witness who saw Harry Gardner marking a ballot. Harry Gardner was seen at 6:00 p. m. on the down-town side of the Sixth Ave. 42nd St. "L" station.

Investigation Within Week.

The fraud thus far shown forbids us, as conscientious members of the union, to certify as to the regularity of these elections. On the contrary, we believe that the candidates who thus appear elected, should, as honest trade unionists, themselves insist upon an investigation of the facts so far brought out and should refuse to accept office under the circumstances until the matter has been cleared up, which could very easily be done within a week's time.

"We therefore demand an immediate investigation to be made by a committee composed of such members of Local 38, regularly elected at a membership meeting, who were not implicated in either side of the fight. Pending the investigation by this impartial committee, the installation to be postponed and, if in the opinion of this committee, the evidence submitted warrants an annulment of the present elections and the holding of new ones, this impartial committee is empowered to order such new elections.

Greenberg Refuses to Act.

"We have called the attention of Vice-president Greenberg to these frauds but as he is one of the interested parties, he has refused to act.

"We wish to enter our protest against the refusal of Vice-president Greenberg to act upon these charges and in the event that, despite our fair demands for an investigation, the international shall install the candidates who appear to have been elected, we will, nevertheless, insist upon an investigation to be made along the lines indicated and we hope that, for the sake of the good name

STALIN TELLS WORKERS NO DANGER IMMEDIATELY OF ENGLISH ATTACK

By JOHN PEPPER.

(Special Cable to The Daily Worker)

MOSCOW, March 6.—At a meeting of the workers of a railway work shop who were electing delegates to the Moscow Soviet, Joseph Stalin appeared and in a speech replied to numerous questions.

On War Danger.

Most of the questions referred to the possibility of the Soviet Union being at war this year. Stalin replied, "There will be no war either this spring or autumn of this year. Altho the general danger of imperialist wars exist there will be no war this year because our enemies are unprepared, also because the western workers do not wish to fight the Soviet Union and without the workers' support it is impossible for them to make war.

Another reason is because we are pursuing firmly and unswervingly a peace policy the fact of which renders war with our country difficult."

Probably No Break Soon.

Replying to questions about relations between the Soviet Union and England, Stalin declared, "Of course, the breaking off of relations by England is not to be totally excluded, but I do not believe it is very likely because a rupture would give but negative results. Not to say anything about the fact that in view of the peace policy of the Soviet Union the responsibility for the rupture would be the gravest possible responsibility which a government could assume.

Continued Industrialization.

Speaking about economic construction, Stalin emphasized that "the Soviet Union has succeeded with its own forces in causing a great advance in the industrialization of the country. This year one milliard three hundred million roubles have been assigned to the needs of industry. This has resulted," Stalin continued, "on the basis of accumulation and not as the result of enslaving loans and concessions like the czarist government made.

"The Soviet government builds new workers and repairs old ones, introducing new technique and increasing the number of the working class. A great socialist industry is being erected by our own means wherein lies the fundamental achievement of the Soviet Union.

"In achieving these successes the important role belongs to the correct policy of the Communist Party. However, this policy would be valueless unless it met the real conditions and had the support of the many millions of the nonpartisan mass of workers. It is by this support that the party is so strong."

U. S. BANKERS TO LOAN THE WORLD BILLION DOLLARS

Wall St. Will Tighten Financial Screws

Foreign loans to the total of $775,000,000 that are being arranged by American banking interests. This is the result of a study made by Max Winkler, vice president of Moody's Investment Service.

Of the $775,700,000 for which negotiations are already under way, $378,500,000 will be loaned to Europe and $377,200,000 to Latin America, together with $20,000,000 for Japan.

Wireless Stock Slumps, 50% Per Cent Slash In Par Value Advised

LONDON, March 6.—Another black eye in the disastrous financial records of the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company was disclosed today when the long awaited directors' report for the year 1925 was issued.

In accordance with the market expectation, it recommends a fifty per cent cut in the par value of the ordinary capital stock.

The directors also recommend a thorough reorganization of the company and the appointment of new directors.

In the past three years, the Marconi Company has written off capital amounting to $31,155,000.

Women's Day in Chicago.

CHICAGO, March 6.—Thousands of members of the Chicago Russian, Ukrainian and Lithuanian women's societies will celebrate International Women's Day tomorrow night at a mass meeting and concert at the Workers' House, 1902 W. Division Street.

Both and women prominent in the Chicago radical movement will speak. There will also be an elaborate program of music and songs.

Storm Kills Many On Madagascar.

LONDON, March 6.—The town of Tamatave on the island of Madagascar has been completely wrecked by a cyclone, according to a message to Lloyds today.

The dispatch coming via Mauritius states that many lives have been lost and huge property damage has been done.

Tamatave is the principal seaport of Madagascar and was formerly the capital of the island. It has a population of 7,000.

Political Committee Selects Lovestone As Acting Party Secretary

CHICAGO.—At its meeting here on Saturday the political committee of the Workers (Communist) Party elected Jay Lovestone acting general secretary of the party to take up the tasks that C. E. Ruthenberg was forced by death to relinquish. Comrade Lovestone has been the head of the party's organization department.

FIVE INQUIRIES LOOM IN ARMOUR GRAIN SWINDLE

Arbitrators Show Co-op Wrecked by Fraud

CHICAGO, March 6.—Five inquiries loomed today in the grain scandal, following an arbitrator's award of $3,000,000 to the Grain Marketing Company which charged fraud and corruption by the Armour Grain Company had brought about its collapse in 1925.

Legislature Interested.

The Illinois legislature was reported considering an investigation as were also the Chicago Board of Trade, State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe, congress and Secretary of Agriculture Jardine.

Edward E. Brown, the arbiter, ruled that "fraud and corruption" had tinctured the sale by the Armour Company of a warehouse of grain to the $20,000,000 Grain Marketing Co. He ordered the leaders of the Armour Company to pay $3,000,000 and costs to the backers of the defunct concern.

Plain Swindle.

The reasons given by the arbitrators for their award were highly sensational. They found that the Armour Grain Co., of which the great meat packers, J. Ogden Armour and Leslie Armour are chief stockholders, deliberately swindled the grain cooperative out of millions of dollars by corrupting the watchmen in the warehouse where there were stored samples of grain on which the big deal was taking place.

The samples were in some cases changed, and a higher grade of grain substituted, and in other cases they were carefully hand picked of all bad kernels, burnt grains and dirt.

Expect To Solve Gaffney Case.

Belief that the mystery surrounding the disappearance of four-year-old William Gaffney is near a solution was expressed yesterday after District Attorney Charles J. Dodd took personal action in the case.

Many Speak at Ruthenberg Memorials

Programs Grow As Comrades Prepare Meetings

While the great mass meeting in Ashland Auditorium, Chicago, was solemnly engaged Sunday afternoon in paying the last tribute to C. E. Ruthenberg, beloved leader of Communism in America, due arrangements were being made in a dozen cities for similar demonstrations of affection and regret, and to give the workers as a whole an idea of the things for which Ruthenberg stood while alive.

The first meeting after the funeral which will be held this morning in Chicago, will take place at Detroit, tonight at 8 o'clock, in the Majestic Theatre.

Besides the speakers previously announced, Wm. Z. Foster, Jay Lovestone, Max Bedacht, Nat Kaplan, James P. Cannon and Arne Swabeck, there will be present three sent by the New York District Executive Committee; Ben Gitlow, Chas. Krumbein and W. W. Weinstone.

New York Announces Plans.

Some of the speakers will come on from Chicago to New York to appear at the memorial exercises in this city. The New York District Executive Committee has decided to receive the ashes of Comrade Ruthenberg, in New York City, Tuesday night, with a guard of honor. The New York memorial meeting will be Wednesday night, at Carnegie Hall.

At Baltimore Tuesday.

The Ruthenberg memorial meeting will be held in Baltimore on Tuesday, March 8, 1927 at 7.30 p. m., at the Conservatory Hall, 1029 E Baltimore Street.

Prominent speakers will be present and appropriate program will be rendered. Admission is free.

Cleveland.

In Cleveland the memorial meeting for Comrade Ruthenberg will be held at the Slovenian Hall, 6409 St. Clair Avenue, on Tuesday, March 8, at 8 p. m.

The speakers will be Max Bedacht, member of the Central Executive Committee of the Party; Herbert Zam, member of the National Executive Committee of the Young Workers League; John Brahtin and Tom Gibbons, who worked for many years with Comrade Ruthenberg in Cleveland. I. Amter, district secretary will preside. The Freiheit and Lithuanian Singing Societies will cooperate.

New York Memorial Wednesday.

The list of speakers for the great meeting prepared in New York continually grows. To the present are Wm. Z. Foster, Jay Lovestone, Max Bedacht, William F. Dunne, Wm. W. Weinstone, M. J. Olgin, Ben Gitlow, Ben Lipshitz and Sam Don.

Only a few short weeks ago, at the Lenin memorial meeting, 20,000 workers in New York listened to a speech by Ruthenberg, and most of the speakers who now meet to commemorate Ruthenberg spoke with him from the same platform on that occasion. Carnegie Hall will be crowded by the workers gathered at this newest memorial meeting, Wednesday, March 9, in the evening.

In Boston.

Not only is a memorial meeting being arranged in Boston, but from all parts of the state, from the Finnish organizations, Lithuanian, Jewish and from a number of trade unionists an expression of sincere sympathy and sorrow has been received. Professor Harry W. L. Dana states the loss could be only made up by redoubling the efforts of the entire movement. Resolutions are being adopted in all parts of the state.

Women's organizations are sending flowers. The Workers Educational Institute of Roxbury has voted to send a bouquet of flowers to Ruthenberg's funeral. To commemorate the life and work of Comrade Ruthenberg a large memorial meeting is arranged for Thursday, March 10th at 8 o'clock at Scenic Auditorium, Boston, Mass. The speakers will be comrades in the leading positions of the Party who were closely associated with Comrade Ruthenberg in his work. The principal speakers will be Benjamin Gitlow of New York, M. J. Olgin and Herbert Zam of the Young Workers League. A suitable musical program will be

BATT AND MARTEL, OPEN SHOP G. O. P. POLITICIANS IN THE DETROIT UNIONS

DETROIT.—The election in the Detroit Federation of Labor confronts the organized workers of Detroit with an important situation involving the future healthy development of the organized labor movement.

Dennis E. Batt and Frank Martel have presented themselves as candidates to fill the office of president and business agent and to assume leadership of the Detroit labor movement. The unhealthy condition of the organized labor movement is manifested in the struggle between these two candidates, for the struggle between them reflects a struggle within the republican party, the official, open and acknowledged political tool of the open shoppers, Ford, the Manufacturers' Association and the Board of Commerce.

The Martel Machine.

Martel has perfected a machine by which he has dominated the federation on the basis of political patronage, such as court influence, and minor city, county and state appointments. Martel has directed his efforts toward the organization of such unions as the jitney drivers, fish peddlers, retail cleaners and dyers, and other petty businesses, in which the big manufacturers have no interest and which he could use to extend his political influence, without coming into conflict with the big employers. The basic industries, such as the automobile industry and the great machine shops have received no attention from him.

The Batt-Martel Rivalry.

The struggle between Batt and Martel was precipitated by a struggle within the republican party for control of the republican machine in Michigan. The great open shop manufacturing interests decided to assert their control over the state government in a more positive form and nominated the millionaire, open shopper Green as their candidate in the primary against Grosbeck. Batt saw in the struggle within the republican party an opportunity to extend his political influence and became the supporter of the open shopper Green. Martel, on the other hand, continued his support of Grosbeck, who had granted him political crumbs from time to time. The great open shop interests easily achieved their aim of nominating their candidate and Batt has been rewarded for the labor support he mobilized to aid them in this by having his candidate named as head of the Department of Labor of the state.

The struggle between Martel and

MANY WILL NOT WAIT FOR MEETING TO SPEAK REGARD FOR RUTHENBERG

Messages of Grief and Loyalty Continue to Arrive at Workers Party Offices

As the memorial meetings for Comrade Ruthenberg begin, many testimonials to his genius, and great heartedness, are heard. But still, some cannot wait for the meetings in their city. The Workers Party District Organizers all report many messages sent to them by workers who wish to express their regard for Ruthenberg, and wish to promise they will heed his last command, to "fight on."

Many messages come, likewise, from organized bodies, unions, Negro workers, labor defense bodies, and women workers. Some are cabled in from overseas. The DAILY WORKER will print such of these as it is able to give space to.

"CARRY ON," SAYS RESTAURANT WORKERS' UNION.

AMALGAMATED FOOD WORKERS OF AMERICA, Executive Board, Hotel and Restaurant Workers Branch, F. P. Cosgrove, Sec'y.—"The working class has suffered a severe loss in the death of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg. For many years he has given his every thought to the emancipation of the workers and his tireless and devoted loyalty will live long in the hearts of the workers.

"He could ill be spared, for the need of such a fighter as he has proven himself to be, is great. His intelligent leadership should inspire every class conscious worker to continue the work as he would desire and the slogan of all should be: Carry on!

"FOR THE WORLD'S OPPRESSED," SAYS WENTWORTH.

EDWARD C. WENTWORTH, well known liberal, Chicago, Ill.—"A great power for the greatest cause now existent is gone, but his memory will be inspiration for those remaining. His unassuming influence was a directing force with those in his association; his gentle and modest insistence on an undeviating prosecution of a campaign for righteousness of treatment for the millions of the world's economically oppressed will be to the everlasting credit of Charles Ruthenberg in the minds of all those who knew him well."

AMALGAMATED FOOD WORKERS PLEDGE TO CARRY ON RUTHENBERG'S WORK.

AMALGAMATED FOOD WORKERS, General Executive Board, August Burkhart, Secretary-Treasurer.—"The delegates of the General Executive Board of the Amalgamated Food Workers assembled in their regular session of March 3rd mourn the loss of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg, a devoted champion of the labor cause, and feel that the labor movement has lost one of its most active and devoted fighters for the liberation of the workers from capitalism.

"In paying respect to our dear Comrade Ruthenberg, we pledge ourselves to go on with our work in the effort to make the Amalgamated Food Workers a class-conscious organization. In doing this, we feel we are carrying on the work to which Comrade Ruthenberg devoted his life."

"Example of His Devotion Will Help Solve Tasks."

The Negro Liberator Communist Weekly, in a statement to the Central Committee of the Workers Party.—"Grief stricken by the dreadful news of the untimely death of our beloved leader, Comrade Charles E. Ruthenberg, we feel, however, confident that this heavy blow of the blind forces of nature, while depriving us of our most prized fighter, who led the Communist movement in the U. S. from its very inception, shall only the more consolidate the fighting ranks of the party, by imparting to the whole membership the consciousness of double responsibility, by penetrating it with the spirit of the most self-sacrificing devotion to the cause of the proletarian revolution, which distinguished the whole life and work of our unforgettable comrade and leader, C. E. Ruthenberg.

The loss of his personal valor, virility and experience must be replaced by the collective valor, virility and experience of the whole party, consolidated in one monolithic bloc. From you, comrades of the C. E. C., the party expects now exemplary leadership toward this goal, the final and unconditional liquidation of every factional friction. It expects a decisive, unvacillating militant leadership.

We are confident that penetrated to the core by the behests of Comrade Ruthenberg, led by the example of his whole-hearted devotion to one cause our party will be able to cope with the enormous historical tasks, which confront us in the recent development of world's events, and shall lead on the fight against the traitors of the labor movement—the yellow bureaucracy of the trade unions, which betrays the working class to the capitalist imperialism with the very energy we were led before by our unforgettable leader."

Will Have Important Page in Labor History.

DANIEL F. O'BRIEN, New York City.—"Charles E. Ruthenberg was a most consistent heralder of the cause of working class emancipation. His life, his material interests and other important phenomena that determines what we say or do cut no figure with the mass. His whole soul was absorbed in his constant battling for the robbed toilers of the world.

"He had the moral courage to fight exploitation of man by man, remaining true to the last. He chose to battle for the under-dog always, come what may, he could always be found in the front ranks.

"About the only way American labor can honor him is to carry on the noble work where he left off. It is safe to say that when the toilers of the world write their own history and build their own monuments to those who have been true to their cause Charles E. Ruthenberg will not be forgotten.

"His demise is an inspiration."

Ruthenberg —The Defiant

By JOSEPH R. BRODSKY.

"CHARLES E. Ruthenberg, what have you say why judgment should not be pronounced against you according to law?"

The place was the Extraordinary Trial Term, Criminal Part, of the Supreme Court of the State of New York; the date was October 29, 1920, and the speaker was Judge Bartow S. Weeks, a typical example of the rich, ultra-conservative supporter of the present order, bitter and vicious, who sat as the presiding judge in all of the criminal anarchy prosecutions that featured the year of 1920 in New York.

On the Stand.

The defendant who stood before him was Charles E. Ruthenberg, executive secretary of the Communist Party of America; tall, broad shouldered, blue eyed and serene. For three weeks the trial of the People of the State of New York against Charles E. Ruthenberg and I. E. Ferguson had been in progress; for several days "C. E." had sat on the witness chair fearlessly and earnestly exposing the rottenness of the capitalist system and simply, intelligently and bravely explaining the principles of Communism, that Communism which he eagerly prophesied would bring the dawn of a better and brighter day for the downtrodden and exploited workers of the world.

The Defiance.

Ruthenberg looked at the judge calmly and without fear, and then he spoke:

"I have merely this to say for myself, that I have in the past held certain ideals for a re-organization of society on a new basis. I have upheld those ideals and gone to prison for them when they were connected with the late war. I have stood by those principles in which I firmly believe, and I still stand for those principles, irrespective of the result of this particular trial.

"I expect in the future, as in the past, to uphold and fight for those principles that, when the time comes that those principles triumph, and a new society is built in place of the present social organization. I realized from the beginning of this trial, as I have in any other trial that I have taken part in as a defendant, that this court, and all the instruments of this court, are merely a part of that organization of force which we call the capitalistic state, and I expected no other results from an organization of the capitalistic class to protect the capitalist system, than the result that has been returned by this court in this particular case, and, of course, accepting this as a case of class justice, a case of the use of the organized force of the state in order to suppress the desires of those who today are suffering under the oppression of the present system, I will accept the sentence in that same spirit of defiance, realizing that I go to prison because of support of a great principle that will triumph in spite of all the machinations of the capitalist class."

As he finished he was smiling the brave, proud smile of a fearless fighter in a just cause.

In the Shadows.

The shadows were creeping through the tall, heavily curtained windows of the court room when he concluded; his comrades sat with clenched fists, tight throats and with hearts throbbing wildly and eyes shining with love and affection for their brave leader who was about to be condemned to a long cell.

The Maximum Sentence.

The judge was writhing in pale anger; he had failed in his attempt to break and crush his victim. Now with all the hatred and venom of a frustrated knife, he pronounced judgment. The court was not at all surprised at the manner and language of the defendant Ruthenberg. He had been already considered one of defiance of the laws of the country. Therefore I was not at all surprised at his remarks "The sentence of the court is that for the felony of which you have been convicted, Charles E. Ruthenberg, that you be imprisoned in the State Prison at hard labor for a term, the minimum of which shall not be less than five years and the maximum of which shall not be more than ten years. The sheriff may remove the prisoner."

Released.

He had done the most that the law allowed.

Eighteen months later I went to Sing Sing with a certificate of reasonable doubt which had just been issued out of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York and which meant that "C. E." was to be released on bail pending a decision on his appeal which was to be argued shortly before that court.

The day after his release he was back at his desk carrying on the work as secretary of the Communist Party of America.

Appeal to Rise.

Several weeks went by and one day I received a call from the District Attorney's office and when I reached there a leaflet issued over the signature of Charles E. Ruthenberg as executive secretary of the Communist Party of America was read, it had been forwarded by the Department of Justice's agents from Seattle, Washington, and consisted of a stirring appeal to the workers there to rise in their might and to throw off the yoke of the capitalists.

D. A. Threatens.

The Assistant District Attorney advised me that he deemed it unseemly and improper for a convicted defendant out on bail to engage in the same "crimes" which had caused his conviction. He urged that Ruthenberg stop his agitation and activity while he was out on bail and until the appeal was decided, after the session I presume he left that prison walls to gain out as a compelling decision.

I told him that I would place the matter before Ruthenberg and report the latter's decision to him. The next day I called on "C. E." and laid before him a copy of the leaflet and answered him to the request of the District Attorney.

Wouldn't Quit Voluntarily.

A smile crept through his care, pleasant smile and then "C. E." placed his hand on my shoulder and said, quietly and gently: "Brodsky, a long, long time ago I determined what my path in life would be. If I am compelled to make some enforced rests at various gaps along the way, well—then I will make the stops."

Kept Functioning.

But was all—except that he continued functioning as executive secretary and driving force of the party to which he had sworn his guidance.

Later when District Attorney listened to my report and tapping his heart, said, "He's all right here"—then tapping his head, concluded, "but, he's all wrong here."

Case Reversed.

The appeal was finally argued before the Court of Appeals and Attorney to ten that court set aside the conviction and ordered a new trial of Charles E. Ruthenberg and I. E. Ferguson, which new trial was never held. Incidentally it is interesting to recall that the brief upon the appeal was prepared by Ferguson while in jail and argued before the court by him in person.

The highest court in the State of New York decided that the state had made a mistake; two years later the indictments against the defendants were dismissed. The District Attorney admitted upon the motion for dismissal of the indictment that he had not sufficient ground and proof upon which to convict. They gave back "C. E." his freedom—but they could not give him back his 18 months of soul's torture in a prison cell for a crime of which the highest court in the State of New York admitted he was not guilty. Hysteria and class prejudice had scored again.

"C. E." continued on the path that he had chosen long, long ago and there he was traveling with head high, eyes clear, and heart brave when the grim reaper beckoned him to an untimely end.

Workers' Club Extends Sympathy

LOWER BRONX JEWISH WORKERS' CLUB, New York.—"The Lower Bronx Jewish Workers' Club, as well as the entire labor movement feels a great loss in the passing of the leader of the van guard of the revolutionary labor movement, C. E. Ruthenberg.

"We send our sympathy to the Communist Party for the loss of their leader and pledge our support to their cause, as a part of the labor movement."

6 Will Continue the Struggle.

SUB-SECTION 1-D.—"By the death of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg, the leader of our party, the international Communist movement has been struck a great blow. We must all put our shoulders to the wheel and by our collective efforts try and make up in a small way for the political and organizational ability that has been taken away from us. Ruthenberg is dead but the struggle for Communism will continue!"

AMERICAN NEGRO LABOR CONGRESS FEELS IT HAS LOST GREAT FRIEND

CHICAGO, March 6.—The American Negro Labor Congress, through its acting secretary, I. Dunjee, has sent the following communication to the Central Executive Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party:

"The American Negro Labor Congress is hastening to send to you and your entire organization an expression of sympathy and regret because of the sudden death of the very able leader of the American Communist Party, C. E. Ruthenberg.

"We of the congress feel it proper to so express our regret over the loss of C. E. Ruthenberg because we realize that he was not only the leader of the American Communist Party, but at the same time he was also the ablest champion of the entire American working class.

"We feel quite sure in making this statement that we speak one hundred per cent the sincere attitude of the Negro people of America over the loss of so able a figure in the struggle of American workers for real freedom as C. E. Ruthenberg has proven himself to be.

"Furthermore, the Negro workers in their struggle for a fair show in America have been championed chiefly by the Communist Party, and that, in a very clear-cut manner. We have always accepted C. E. Ruthenberg as one of the upstanding and fearless leaders of the Communist Party who always has taken a very clear position in defense of the Negro people of this country as a submerged class.

"We feel that the loss of C. E. Ruthenberg is a loss that will be severely felt, not only by the American Communist Party, but will also be a major loss to the entire working class group of America.

"Hoping that whatever we have said in this statement will be taken as an expression of a group of workers who know their foes, but who also are at all times able to recognize their friends, we are

Fraternally yours,

The American Negro Labor Congress.

CHICAGO TRADE UNION EDUCATIONAL LEAGUE MEMBERS STAND IN SILENCE FOR RUTHENBERG

CHICAGO, March 6.—The local general group of the Trade Union Educational League held one of its best-attended meetings Wednesday, March 2 where Brother J. W. Johnstone spoke on the recent convention of the United Mine Workers and the significance of the convention to the general labor movement. There was much interesting discussion from the floor and considerable literature was put out.

The new local executive reported that plans were being carried out for intensified activity.

The meeting was held the evening of the day the labor movement suffered the loss of Brother Charles E. Ruthenberg, honorary member of the Railway Clerk's Brotherhood, and in deference to his memory, the assemble stood in silence for one minute after adopting a resolution of regard for Ruthenberg.

The resolution follows

"Whereas in the death of C. E. Ruthenberg, secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party, the American labor movement has lost one of its best and most courageous fighters, and,

"Whereas, Comrade Ruthenberg's activities as one of the leaders in the left wing labor movement, extending for more than a decade, has helped greatly to make clear to the workers the irreconcilable conflict between the working class and the employing class and,

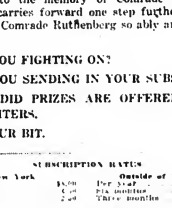
"Whereas the T. U. E. L. mourns and recognizes the great loss to the American labor movement in the death of Comrade Ruthenberg. We remember him as the leader of the left wing and the anti-war movement in the Socialist Party 1917, and from then on as one of the central figures in the building of the left wing in the American labor movement and,

"Whereas, The unflinching determination and courage shown in all of these struggles by Comrade Ruthenberg, his term of penal servitude in the jail at Canton, Ohio for his opposition to the great world war, the many months he spent in Sing Sing Prison, his conviction in the State Court of Michigan will serve us as an inspiration for the great tasks that confront us in the future.

"Therefore be it resolved, that in mourning trial in recognition of the great loss to the labor movement in the death of Comrade Ruthenberg, we pledge ourselves to carry on more vigorously than ever the work of building a powerful left wing force that will eventually turn labor movement from its path of class collaboration into one of militant class struggle for the final emancipation of the working class from wage slavery.

Follow In His Footsteps.

Workers Party Local, Washington, D. C.—"We mourn the death of the leader of the American Communist Party. The loss is too great to be expressed in words.



"We shall follow in the footsteps of our comrade and carry on the fight for our party."

"Carry On His Work."

From Sub-Section 1-D, District 2 (New York).—"We express deep sorrow at the loss of Comrade Ruthenberg. We will show our devotion to our comrade by carrying on firmly the constructive activities in the movement to which he gave his life."

REPORT ON THE MINORITIES OF U. S. S. R. GIVEN

Equal Rights for All Nationalities Policy

MOSCOW, Feb. 14 (By Mail).—Yesterday the third session of the Central Executive Committee of the Soviet Union was opened in the Kremlin in Moscow. In his opening speech one of the chairmen of the Central Executive Committee, Comrade Mussakekov, the chairman of the Council of People's Commissars of the Soviet Republic Azerbeidjan, pointed to the fact that the national economy of the Soviet Union has already reached the pre-war standard.

The workers cultural department and peasants of the Soviet Union have now placed into the foreground the problems of the industrialization of the country and of the cultural development of broad masses of the people. The heroism, the enthusiasm and the creative energy of the toiling masses of the Soviet Union guarantee the successful solution of this very important problem.

The sum of 1.100 million roubles for investment purposes in the state budget proves that the toiling masses are able to carry through themselves the industrialization of the Soviet Union.

Adamovitch Reports.

The chairman of the Council of People's Commissars of the Socialist Soviet Republic of White Russia, Comrade Adamovitch, gave a detailed report on the activity of the White Russian Soviet government, stressing that the solution of the national problem in the Soviet Union on the basis of real rights for all nations, showed still more clearly the suppression of the national minorities in the bourgeois states. In no single bourgeois state a leading speech of a representative of a non-ruling nationality in parliament was possible.

If some member states of the Soviet Union would permit such speeches, they would consist in loud protests of the oppressed and outlawed masses against their bourgeois oppressors. The situation of the White Russians in the Soviet Union and the situation of the White Russians in Poland show most clearly the correctness of the Soviet policy of national peace as opposed to national hostility, which rules in the bourgeois states.

Equal Rights.

Comrade Adamovitch further quoted a number of figures showing the cultural and economic construction of the White Russian Soviet Republic since the end of the Polish occupation, and he stressed the completely equal rights of all nationalities in the White Russian Soviet Republic, in particular the considerable improvement of the situation of the Jews and their development to agriculture.

Building Trade Workers In Solid Front Against New Open Shop Drive

PITTSBURGH, Pa., March 6.—The persistent refusal of the Building Trades Employers' Assn. to sign anything short of the 1926 scale is responsible for the continuance of the strike, began last Tuesday, of the three building trades unions—iron workers, steam fitters, and cement finishers.

Increase in pay ranging to $2 a day, and a five-day week are the principal demands of the strikers. The structural iron workers are admitted to be in a strategic position in their effort to gain victory.

Three "commissioners of conciliation" have been in the city for the past week, but they have been unable to shake the deadlock between the bosses and the workers.

Legion and former allen property custodian, even the both are patriots. But without a little financial lubrication, patriotism groans like a rheumatic septuagenarian.

ACCORING to statistics dug up by the New York World the alleged suicide epidemic among students that made the front pages recently was only alleged after all. As a matter of fact we are informed that the year in this sphere of destruction. Of course, the figures may be lying as usual, since we are more or less at the mercy of the particular liar who does the figuring. Still we are inclined to agree with the World that this epidemic was not unusual. Just something to fill space and justify headlines in the interval between a Peaches-Browning trial and another biting scandal, with Harry Thaw playing the role of villian.

THERE are thousands of perfectly logical reasons why students should commit suicide, particularly those that expect to become lawyers, editors or business managers. Those who rush in with a theory to cover every phenomena from a miscarriage to a cyclone immediately hopped to the front with an explanation of this particular fake. The students looked into a social void and jumped into it. This was the explanation. Here's hoping that the automat theorists pursue their theories and the missing students.

THERE was a time when an interview with the ex-kaiser of Germany could not be purchased with ten thousand dollar bill. But today Wilhelm peddles his views as anxiously and almost as successfully as Cornelius Vanderbilt Jr., the young fellow who started the top of the newspaper business and went to the bottom having about $3,000,000 on the way. Wilhelm should be thankful that the socialists saved the capitalist system in Germany, otherwise he might now be pushing up the lilies, instead of signing his name to interviews.

If some member states of the Soviet Knion would permit such speeches, they would consist in loud protests of the oppressed and outlawed masses against their bourgeois oppressors. The situation of the White Russians in the Soviet Union and the situation of the White Russians in Poland show most clearly the correctness of the Soviet policy of national peace as opposed to national hostility, which rules in the bourgeois states.

OFFICIAL ADMITS MARINES POSTED WITHIN SHANGHAI

New Ruling by Kellogg Disproves Neutrality

By LAURENCE TODD
(Federated Press).

WASHINGTON, (FP). — Admiral Williams, commanding the American armed forces at Shanghai, has been authorized by the Washington government to use his own discretion after consulting with Consul General Gauss on the spot, as to the use he shall make of the marines, bluejackets and fleet at his disposal.

Grew Admits New Policy.

This change in state department policy has been disclosed by Acting Secretary Grew, following Secretary Kellogg's departure on vacation. It was announced when Grew was asked to affirm or deny the statement cabled by Sokolsky, of the Japan Advertiser, to the New York Evening Post, that the regiment of American marines would be posted in the working class quarter of the native city at Shanghai, where revolutionary strikes could be anticipated.

Has Power to Kill Strike.

The department still maintains that it is seeking merely to "protect American lives and property," but it now explains that it does not pretend to know what Admiral Williams may decide to do, to give this protection. Whether, for instance, he will seek to crush a strike that is intended as a political direct in favor of the Cantonese working class revolutionary government, is un to Admiral Williams. The state department is now unofficially declares itself neutral as between factions. It is not sure that it may not learn that the marines have stopped a pro-Cantonese movement in the guise of protecting American lives and property.

Shanghai Replica of Nicaragua.

Thus the turn of events at Shanghai is beginning to follow the twist of American action in Nicaragua where military occupation and virtual corraling of the constitutional government forces was carried out without bringing proof that any American property or lives had at any time been endangered. Answering a house resolution, offered by Rep. Black of New York, Grew said that American action at Shanghai was independent of that of any other foreign power, and was directed solely to protecting American lives and property that "may be" endangered. This "may be" instead of "is," opens the way to devastation of Chinese cities where revolutionary strikes might aid the nationalist cause.

Chinese Are On Guard.

Experts on Chinese affairs, however, point out that American intervention cannot fail, in China, to provoke the Chinese to further nationalist sentiment, and in large part to ruin the reputation of the Washington government as a sympathizer with Chinese hopes of national independence. The use of American marines to oversee the sweated toilers in the factory district of Shanghai, at the moment when their militarist overlords' power is slowing, will obviously strengthen the radical element in the nationalist government, which has predicted that all the imperialist powers would act alike in the crisis.

SIGMAN AGENTS WOULD CORRUPT CLOAKMAKERS THEY SENT TO PRISON

Heroic Victims of International Expose Dirty Tricks of Gang; Stand Firm for Joint Board

Sigman agents, past masters of corruption, not content with the havoc they have played with the needle workers' unions, are trying to corrupt the very workers they sent to prison. Joseph Perlman, of the Ladies' Garment Workers', speaking for a group of cloak war prisoners now in Sing Sing due to the activities of the reactionary International leaders of the I. L. G. W., reveals in a letter the efforts of the Sigman crowd to corrupt him and fellow-prisoners.

Perlman tells how Sigman agents have approached the imprisoned cloakmakers with proposals to free them if they will turn against the Joint Board officers who have loyally carried out the wishes of the rank and file. His letter follows:

My dear Comrade Hyman and all Cloakmakers:

We have received your letters and telegrams. It certainly gave us great encouragement and satisfaction to know of your devotion and activities for our great cause. There is no need to be thankful to us, because we all are doing our duties.

Perhaps you know already of the tricks of Sigman's blackmail agents. Wanting to take advantage of our sufferings for their own devilish purpose they propose help to us through dark forces. Those who by means of shameful provocation caused our misfortune are now coming to us offering their help providing we agree to sign a letter which they have prepared for us. This letter is supposed to be written to and sent to them in our name, that we fully regret our past doings and now we ask them to help us to be freed. We are to say that we are waiting for the moment when we will be able to tell all cloakmakers what sort of thieves and robbers the leaders of the Joint Board are, and that we were misled by them, and everything else.

When these Sigmanists, those fascist heroes came to us, with their shameful propositions, we turned our back to them. We made them understand that not all who suffer for an ideal and principle of pure democracy will accept such shameful offers from these autocratic prostitutes and those who sold their souls to these autocrats for a few pennies. We ask no help or mercy from any of those kind. We only do our duty as workers, we all know that the history of the labor movement which is full of brotherly and martyrs, that for one inch of progress we pay heavy with our blood and our wives and children.

Your struggle requires their victims. We are now fighting for a great cause, and there is nothing that can scare us from fighting for our great cause. There is no need to be thankful to us, because we all are doing our duties.

We are in comradely struggle against brave soldiers on the battle field and never lay down our arms until we make a thorough cleaning out of all rotten elements which find themselves in power with the support of gangsters, provocations and all other dark forces. We must not rest until we have a union that will be led by the workers and for the workers.

With Comradely greetings and good wishes,

We remain yours,
JOSEPH PERLMAN,

WALL ST. GLOMS EASY PICKINGS IN BIG SPECULATIONS

100% Profits Quick if You Know How

Poor dumb workers. If only they'd quit their badly paid, despised labor in dingy mill and factory and listen to the advice of The Financial World, how much better off they'd be. Listen—

If you had followed that paper's advice in October last year, you'd be sitting pretty now with a profit of more than 100 per cent. And that on borrowed money.

For example—

Say you'd thrown a mere $2,400 into Wheeling-Lake Erie. Of that only $1,200 need have been in cash with the rest on margin, representing your gamble that the stock wouldn't flop. You could have cleared out on February 23 for $6,500, leaving a pretty little cleanup of $4,100 or as much as you might make by hard work in two years. Only you didn't have sense enough to follow Financial World's advice—or the money either.

Some Predicting is Easy.

The financial quacks are cleaning up right now money no-ways by this sort of "prediction." In a rising market, characteristic of Coolidge-Mellon administration of the government in behalf of Wall Street since 1925, most of the stocks are bound to go up. Thus it can be seen that the predicter's job isn't a terribly hard one. Where prediction becomes tough, is in foreseeing the crash which is bound to come. Stocks that run up the clock hickory dock, must come a-running down too, some day. And just when will "the day" arrive?

The best minds don't know, and the beatest of them admit it. Of course Garry will keep on squawking "prosperity" until he kicks aff and the National Bureau of Economic Research will continue dividing 90 billions of dollars annual national income among 44,500,000 actively employed persans and striking an "average income" which doesn't exist. Ask the coal miner, the textile worker, the steel warker just how much "prosperity" he sees at home.

Big Slump in Coal Certain as Surplus Stocks Accumulate

With stocks on the ground between 60,000,000 and 70,000,000 tons, the coal trade is slumping in anticipation of prolonged shutdowns this spring and summer. The union mines will be shut down same time in event of a strike, and very probably will shut down if there is none, because of the falling off in domestic consumption while the industries use up the huge accumulated surplus, gathered for the strike.

To the miner it looks like a choice between Scylla and Charybdis, or more plainly, between the devil and the deep sea. This is the situation with Lewis leadership, but under vital progressive leadership, the complexion af the coal strike could be changed overnight by pulling out West Virginia. Over fees are mounting on West Virginia staying at work under the Lewis regime. With a nonunion production of 7,000,000 tons weekly against needs of 10,000,000 supplied from the big surplus, anti-laborites see the strike as a farce. If West Virginia comes out, there will be a really serious drama on the boards.

One lesson emerges from the wreck engineered by Lewis and his crowd of union-wreckers. The United Mine Workers cannot exist in any effective way with the industry half-union nust conquer West Virginia, union must conquer West Virginia, or it will go out of business in Ohio, Indiana and Western Pennsylvania within a few years. Namby pamby New York liberals, forward-thinkers and boot-wishers who stayed on the fence in the recent effort of John Brophy and the rank and file to save the union from catastrophe, are beginning to see the light. As usual the liberals woke up too late.

But America's coal miners, under firm militant leadership, will work their way out of the mess Lewis has plunged them into, whether erstwhile liberals and coal programmers bestir themselves or not. A good strong trade union movement is in the cards, the tired, depressed and discouraged liberals to the contrary notwithstanding. And the workers and the intellectual elements which choose to fight with them will win the day.

SURPLUS CASH IS FLOWING FAST TO LATIN AMERICA

With Marine-Backing, Capital Is Confident

This year sees a great decline in American investments in Europe with a consequent increase in the flow of gold and capital to Latin America. The Equitable Trust, for example, in its latest security list invites you to invest in no less than five current Latin American securities.

The Argentine Nation's 6% gold bonds are recommended because that country is "considered the best credit risk in South America." Stability, law'n'order, and that sort of thing, you know.

The Caja de Credito Hypotecaria, which is merely the Mortgage Bank of Chile also wants to peddle some 6% gold notes, yielding 6.30%. Inasmuch as they bear the "unconditional guarantee as to principal, interest and sinking fund by Independent of the Republic of Chile," the blood-thirsty outfit which has been deporting Communists to lonely Pacific Islands, workers needn't trouble themselves about investing in this sort of thing.

On the other hand, you'll have to buy your Bolivian gold bonds on faith, hope and credit. They are 8% gold notes, a highly speculative return. "These bonds," declares the Equitable in a tactful way, "are suitable for an investor who has faith in the possibilities and the future of our South American neighbors."

Herbie Hoover's Department of Commerce is much more realistic about the whole Latin American affair than the State Department, according to the Wall Street Journal.

Says that paper: "Commerce Department studies of trade relations between the United States and Latin America bring to light more clearly the practical basis for American concern over affairs in Nicaragua and Mexico than have the expressions of policy emanating from the State Department."

In a report entitled "Latin American Trade" which you can get free, for the asking, by nothing from Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C., Dr. Liing Klein, director of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce, analyzes the growth of trade relations between the Americas and its relation to Europe. Follow Latin America carefully, in season and out. The intelligent worker with some spare time will even learn to read, if not to speak, Spanish. With loans more than $300,000,000 last year and trade over a billion dollars, our contacts with Latin American are going to be more and more interesting as the years go on.

John Farmer Buying Machinery Which Is Robbing Him of Work

That the machine is kicking the farmer in the pants and off the farm is no news to DAILY WORKER readers. But there is humor in the Wall Street Journal's analysis that, as a result, the "farmer is making progress." In 1925 there were 800,000 tractors on farms and today there are probably 800,000.

Not only does McNary-Haugenism look foolish to the WSJ. but also proposals for diversification of crops, more cooperation and better methods. It is not a question of the cotton grower cutting down his cotton crop to raise more meat. He can raise more meat and more cotton at the same time.

With one billion dollars in machinery purchased in the last three years, the farmers are facing much the same problem as the industrial worker with the exception that the city worker is not himself buying the machinery that puts him out of work. And what is the Journal's solution? The good old one of dog eat dog. Those who cannot survive must get out and look for a livelihood elsewhere. Just where the Journal knows not, but hopes that some way will be found eventually. A good many millions have starved to death waiting for "eventually."

CALHOUN SEVERS CONNECTION WITH PIONEER YOUTH

Refuses to Support the Red Baiting Campaign

Arthur W. Calhoun, instructor at the Brookwood Labor College and well known lecturer and author, has severed his connection with the Pioneer Youth, a semi-socialist organization.

With red baiting becoming a regular part of the procedure of the socialists and their allies in the trade unions, they have now carried it over into other organizations, the Pioneer Youth being one of them.

Calhoun not being desirous of having any connection with those who are carrying on that campaign, sent the following letter to Joshua Lieberman, Secretary of the Pioneer Youth, 3 West 16th St., New York:

Katanah, N. Y.,
March 3, 1927.

My dear Josh:

I'll have to ask you to drop me from the list of supporters of Pioneer Youth. Last night's performance was too much. You tell us that the object is to save the youth from the Chamber of Commerce and the Communists.

To Fight Volstead Act.

Curtis implies that in addition to teaching 100% Americanism, it is necessary to fight the Volstead Act and preserve our liberty to come home at 4 a. m. with a load of wet goods. The big typo conjures with the sacred memory of the American Alliance for Labor and Democracy (ghosting thus in being an immaculated tool of predatory capitalism) and requires evidence that the Pioneer Youth is 99 44-100% pure.

Refers to Utas Calhoun.

The car man, damna the railroad brotherhoods as no better than company unions and in the next breath expresses the hope that in the labor negotiations of the future the boss and the business agent may embrace over memories of the time when they were boys in the Pioneer Youth camp. Then you gat off some arrogant and sneering stuff about the Communists.

Thus it appears that the Pioneer Youth is to be the vehicle of a narrow and nasty partisanship combined with a broad and sprawling sentimentalism. That's enough.

Yours truly,
ARTHUR W. CALHOUN

New Orleans Citizens Ask That Police Stop Doing Special Work

NEW ORLEANS, March 6 (FP). —Taxpayers of New Orleans are asking the city to meet the $60,000 shortage in the 1927 police budget by stopping the detailing of police officers on special duty for financial institutions, other corporations and individuals, except for charitable or school purposes.

MEXICAN ENVOY QUITS POSITION IN WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 6.—Fear that Coolidge intends to increase the tension between the United States and Mexico during the congressional recess was strengthened when it was learned that Manuel M. C. Tellez, the Mexican ambassador to the United States was recalled and was already on his way to report to President Calles.

Ambassador Tellez refused to reveal the reasons for his departure but it is reported that it is due to a request for his recall by the state department for public propaganda in favor of his government. The ambassador could rightfully be accused of defending the actions of his government against the Fall attacks but hitherto this has been considered one of the functions of a Mexican representative.

Nothing to Say.

Questioned regarding the answer of the recent United States note given to Mexico, the contents of which are being kept secret, Tellez stated that he had absolutely nothing to say, nor would he comment on whether Mexico plans to answer. It is believed in diplomatic circles that Ambassador Tellez will confer with President Calles with regard to this note.

Asked as to the rumored lifting of the embargo on arms, which, were it to take place, would plunge Mexico into civil war, Tellez merely shook his head.

If refuse to answer any and all questions concerning official matters," said Tellez. "So many rumors have been set afloat by the newspapers, and so much has been made up, that I have nothing to say."

ELECTION GRAFT TO BE ELECTION ISSUE THIS YEAR

Filibuster Ruins Cal's Economy Camouflage

WASHINGTON, March 6.—The national issue of election corruption will be carried to the American people this summer and forced into the 1928 presidential campaign, it was learned today, by the activities of the Reed Campaign Fund Committee and a democratic filibuster in the senate.

The sixty-ninth congress, which died at the end of a filibusterers' house, bequeathed this issue to the two major parties. The fact that the senate refused to settle the problem itself only enhanced the importance of the issue.

Impound Ballots.

The Reed committee definitely committed itself to a campaign of activity by ordering the impounding of ballots in four additional counties in Pennsylvania, Delaware, Schuylkill, Luzerne and Lackawanna. Senator Reed (D) of Missouri, chairman, announced the step was taken at the request of William B. Wilson, democrat, who has contested the election of Senator William S. Vare (R) of Pennsylvania. The decision to seize the ballots, he added, was unanimous, being approved by three republican members of the committee.

There are rumors that the committee may investigate the wholesale barring of the Negroes from the polls in the southern states.

Financial Confusion.

The fact that congress spent its last days in a series of filibusters resulted in a failure to pass the $60,000,000 deficiency bill. The cabinet of "Economical Cal" has as a matter of policy budgeted on a deficiency basis. This gives opportunity for the administration to claim great savings of the taxpayers' money, and than later, quietly slip through a "deficiency bill" to make up the amounts desired. This time the trick failed, and chaos is the result.

The Innocent Suffer.

Five hundred thousand veterans of early wars, widows and children, will be denied about $37,000,000 in pension payments during May and June. These suspended payments will be made in July from the next fiscal year's appropriation.

Thousands of world war veterans will be granted loans by the veterans' bureau on their adjustad compensation certificates, although the loans must be deferred until April 1. Insurance funds will be diverted to this use up to the amount available.

Army Preserved.

Threatened discharge of 32,144 officers and men from the army will be averted by readjusting other war department funds and incurring deficits. Army housing projects and certain other plans will be deferred.

Development work on four western reclamation projects will be delayed until appropriations can be obtained from the next congress.

Free seed distribution in drought stricken regions of the middle northwest, hit by the failure of an $8,600,000 appropriation, will be carried out with other moneys of the department of agriculture.

CHINESE SPEAKER TELLS IRISH OF COUNTRY'S AIMS

Nationalists Would Free All Oppressed

Samuel Sha, member of the editorial staff of the Chinese Nationalist Daily tald an audience of Irish workers last Friday evening in Bryant Hall, that the Chinese revolutionary forces would sound the death knell of British and all other imperialisma in China and that the freedom of all subject and appressed peaples was as dear to the hearte of the Chinese revolutionists as the freedom of China itself.

Mr. Sha, the principal speaker, was greeted with cheers by the audience. He told those present that the British government feared the opium drug on the Chinese at the point of the gun, that all imperialist powers were out to rob the people of that country and that the government of the Soviet Union alone was the true friend of the Chinese people.

Promise of Support.

The meeting was held under the auspices of the Irish Workers Republican Alliance. Joseph O'Byrne, secretary of the organization read letters from Irish radical groups in Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago and San Francisco pledging support of the objects of the alliance, which are support of the movement for freedom for the workers in Ireland and for a progressive political and industrial policy for the workers in the United States.

Other speakers were William F. Dunne, editor of The DAILY WORKER, Pat Devine and T. J. O'Flaherty.

The I. W. R. A. is planning to hold a meeting every day this week with Professor Scott Nearing as the speaker on the "Decline of the British Empire."

Comrades and Fellow Workers:

After a year's heroic struggle of the Passaic textile workers, the mill barons were forced to submit to a partial settling of their dispute in Passaic. They are however putting obstacles in the way of maintaining such an organization. Although the strike is almost over, they are taking the workers back very slowly, with the result that thousands of families are without means of existence. Their children are hungry.

There are many families whose sole supporters were sent to jail for long periods because of their activities in the strike. You must come to their rescue. Relief must go on with full speed!

The General Relief Committee, who is maintaining a few food stores in Passaic, appeals to all those who have taken milk coupons to send in their money as soon as possible, no matter how much you have collected. Send the money immediately to the General Relief Committee, 799 Broadway, Room 225, also ask for more coupons to sell.

The office is open from 9 a. m. to 7 p. m. daily.

LONDON, March 6.—Agitation for a government inquiry into the causes of rapidly increasing suicide in England has gained impetus by the suicide of Rees Davis, 20, an undergraduate at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge University.

With the suicide rate increasing so rapidly that it has now reached one out of sixty-five in the deaths of males over twenty in England and Wales, the house of commons has given some attention to the matter.

Lewis Surrenders to the Coal Barons; The "Save the Union" Bloc Must Take the Lead

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, has stated to the press, in order "to reassure the public," that there will be no strike in the bituminous fields on April 1 when the Jacksonville agreement expires.

The heartfelt concern for the feelings of the dear "public" manifested by Lewis is in direct contrast to his care for the interests of the miners.

What Lewis has done by this announcement of his policy is to issue a blank check to the coal barons. Knowing that if strikes occur they will get no support from the UMWA officialdom, the operators can and will begin their attack on wages and working conditions of the miners even before the contract ends.

The actions of the Lewis machine at the Indianapolis convention forecast some such maneuver by officialdom even though it adopted the slogan of "no backward step." The negotiations between union officials and the coal operators in Miami served only to show that the Lewis machine was following closely the operators' policy of agreement of both sides to an increase of production and lowering of wage charges—more production with less men.

Lewis has surrendered to the coal barons.

This is the inevitable result of the policy he has followed since he succeeded Hayes as president of the Union. He has initiated and carried out an expulsion campaign against all the most devoted and militant elements in the union beginning with Alex Howat. He has systematically destroyed the morale of the membership by his continual persecutions and by allowing thousands of miners to be driven from the union fields and the industry while the coal barons were "normalizing" production.

While Lewis was doing all in his power to crush the traditional militancy of the union membership the coal barons were expanding the non-union fields until today they produce from 65 to 70 per cent of the total tonnage. The union has decreased steadily in numbers even losing 19,000 members in the last six months when all coal production records were broken.

The United Mine Workers faces the same problem now but in more urgent form that it faced three years ago—organization of the unorganized fields. The Lewis machine has made the most disastrous failure possible in this direction. Not only has it failed to organize West Virginia, Kentucky and Tennessee but it has either lost entirely or seriously weakened union fields like Ohio, western Pennsylvania, eastern Pennsylvania, Canada, etc.

The program of the "Save the Union" bloc is to launch an intensive organization drive in the non-union territories, refuse to accept any wage cut and strike if wage cuts are made. The life of the union depends upon struggle against the operators in both union and non-union fields.

Lewis says nothing of an organization drive. No preparations are being made for such a campaign except by the "Save the Union" bloc, and this can be taken to mean only that Lewis has surrendered this part of the union program as well.

The UMWA will be cut to pieces if Lewis is allowed to have his way. The various operators' associations will start an assault on wages or working conditions or both. The inevitable rank and file strikes will be scattered and therefore ineffective, and the membership will continue to decrease.

The Lewis machine has wrecked the miners' union. The last statement by Lewis is an admission of this fact.

We have said day after day that Lewis would betray the miners and the miners' union, that he would fight no one except the militant membership and that his policy led straight to disruption and destruction.

Because we have told the truth about the Lewis machine and its menace to the miners' union, its officials and publicists have expelled miners who are members of the Communist Party and have accused us of being enemies of the union.

The miners are now in a position to judge who fights for their interests and it certainly is not the Lewis machine.

To save the UMWA the non-union fields must be organized. The immediate task of the "Save the Union" bloc is to force the Lewis machine to begin the campaign at once and to show by the organization of mines that are now non-union, as in western Pennsylvania, that the UMWA is weak because its leadership is reactionary, corrupt and playing the game operators want it to play.

The "Save the Union" bloc must take the lead in the struggle against the coal barons' attempt to smash the union.

Preparation for War in the Imperialist Camp

The London correspondent of the New York Herald-Tribune writes:

"The powder barrel is well stocked in Europe, and stranger things have happened than that China should apply the match."

One cannot read the news of the day from foreign offices and state departments without realising that there is occurring, hastened by the ever increasing imperialist conflicts, a whole series of incidents whose inevitable outcome is another world war unless imperialism suffers defeat at the hands of the masses before it can initiate the blood-bath.

A few outstanding events will corroborate the above statement:

(1) The French government adopts a law making compulsory the mobilization of the whole population—men, women and children above a certain age—in the event of war. This is the first measure of its kind to be placed on the statute books of a capitalist nation.

(a) Another law has just been passed authorizing the fortification of the entire eastern frontier of France, providing for a complete system of entrenchments, barbed wire entanglements, bombproof shelters, the necessary artillery, etc. The project is to cost 7,000,000,000 francs.

(2) Great Britain has taken over Poland as a base against the Soviet Union and is trying to draw Lithuania into the Balkan-Baltic alliance. Britain has superseded France as the guiltiest director of the small nations composing the "cordon sanitaire"—the line of buffer states between western Europe and the Soviet Union.

(a) Austen Chamberlain, the British foreign minister, is either in Berlin or on his way there to attempt to secure German repudiation of the Rapallo treaty with the Soviet Union providing for German neutrality in the event of war.

(b) Britain is entrenching her forces around Shanghai outside the foreign concession—is sending a known total of 40,000 troops with full equipment and has a huge fleet in the Far East. Reliable reports are to the effect that Britain is preparing for a three-year campaign in China.

Great Britain's policy in China has increased the tension at every point of contact in two spheres (a) between the imperialist nations and the Soviet Union and (b) between the imperialist nations themselves.

(3) The troop and warship movements of the United States are on a scale explainable only by the theory that the state and war departments see war as a possibility of the immediate future.

(a) The armed march of 1,200 U. S. marines through the streets of Shanghai is no routine incident but an important international demonstration for the purpose first of intimidating the Chinese masses and second of impressing other imperialist powers with the determination of America to resist being pushed into position inferior to that of Britain and Japan in China.

(4) The recent increase in the amount of foreign news carried by all capitalist papers is an infallible indication of the rapid upward trend of international conflicts.

The growing tension in the imperialist world is concealed somewhat by hypocritical words in favor of disarmament and other diplomatic subterfuges. But the burden of militarism is growing heavier each day and, as in the United States, where radio communication control is handed over to control of a former admiral, decisive industrial enterprises are being put on a war basis.

Imperialism is sleeping on its arms ready to awake for slaughter at the first call of the master class.

The workers and farmers of America and all other sections of the population honestly opposed to war for Wall Street must be prepared to resist any and all attempts to open hostilities.

Hands Off China and withdrawal of all armed forces from the Far East is the minimum demand that must be made at this time.

The Imperialist Menace in China.

Naval and military concentration in and around Shanghai by the imperialist powers is going forward at a rate that indicates something far more sinister than "protection of lives and property."

According to the New York Tribune correspondent Great Britain is arranging for a force of 40,000 troops, and barracks are being built for a minimum stay of three years. These preparations are proof that the British foreign office regards the Chinese situation as of major political and military importance. British imperialism in China no longer proceeds on the theory that a colonial punitive expedition is all that is required.

That these preparations are in direct contradiction with British pronouncements to the effect that the foreign office waits only for the establishment of a stable government in China to which recognition can be accorded is of little significance other than to give further proof of hypocrisy.

The People's government (Kuomingtang) does not lack stability. On the contrary it is far too well established to suit Britain's rulers.

Nor is the United States backward in a display of force. According to dispatches there are now 13 American battle craft of various kinds in Shanghai harbor and American marines and sailors have been landed. Japan is sending two additional warships.

British fortifications have been extended far outside the boundaries of the international settlement. It can be said with certainty that Britain is mobilizing not only to hold Shanghai against the Peoples' government but against other nations as well. Britain would prefer joint action against the new China but failing this is committed to a diehard militarist policy.

Just as Britain's forces are in China for conquest if possible so are the American forces in readiness to strike a blow for American imperialism against all rivals if future developments make such a policy profitable.

There is a tendency even among American revolutionists to underestimate the danger to the world's working class inherent in the Chinese situation as it becomes more and more apparent that without armed intervention on a big scale the Chinese masses will defeat imperialism and its native allies. These dangers are:

(1) Intervention itself by one or more imperialist powers with Great Britain as the most dangerous aggressor at the moment. On a big enough scale intervention could postpone the liberation of China for a considerable period and stop completely the work of education, organization and industrialization of China which is beginning under the People's government.

(2) A world war arising out of the struggle for the privilege of exploiting China.

The daily increase of imperialist forces in the Far East is evidence that both of the above possible developments are being discussed in the foreign offices of the great powers. The progress of diplomatic debate is marked by the movement of battleships and troops on the world chess-board.

World imperialism faces defeat in China. Even the biased news carried by the capitalist press indicates that the alliance of the northern war-lords against the People's government has collapsed. The militarists have found it impossible to hold their troops in the face of their known connection with the imperialists—Britain especially. The Peking government no longer makes even the pretense of speaking for China. There is no government in China but the Kuomingtang.

Recognition of these realities would be followed automatically by recognition of the People's government by the powers if they desired nothing more than a stable regime in China. Withdrawal of battleships and troops would mean that the People's government would rule all China in a brief period.

It will do so in any case no matter how long and bloody the struggle is. 400,000,000 people, organized and led by a skilled and disciplined political party like the Kuomingtang, cannot be defeated.

Like the Mediterranean area in 1912, like the Balkans in 1914, but on a far larger scale, the Far East now is a powder magazine which can be exploded by accident or design. The only protection against another imperialist war lies in the complete victory of the People's government in alliance with the Soviet Union, constant vigilance and militancy on the part of the labor and revolutionary movements of the imperialist countries and support by them of the two great bulwarks against world imperialism—the workers' and peasants' government of the Soviet Union and the Chinese revolution.

MANY SPEAK AT MEMORIALS TO C. E. RUTHENBERG

The Programs Grow As Meetings Are Arranged

provided by Lithuanian, Russian, Ukrainian and Lettish organisations.

Similar memorial meetings are being arranged all over the state. Memorial meeting in Springfield, Mass., will be held on Wednesday, March 16th with Comrade G. S. Shklar as the principal speaker.

Philadelphia.

The workers of Philadelphia will commemorate the death of our leader Comrade Ruthenberg on Friday, March 11th, at 8 p. m., at the Labor Institute, 810 Locust Street.

The speakers will be Bertram D. Wolfe of New York, J. O. Bentall, district organizer of Philadelphia district, Irvin Green for the Young Workers League and a representative of the Young Pioneers. The Freiheit Gesangs Verein will sing the memorial song—"Our Leader." A fitting musical program has been arranged.

The workers of Philadelphia knew Comrade Ruthenberg well, his self sacrificing devotion to the cause of the working class, and will not fail to pay their last tribute to him.

In Youngstown, Ohio, the memorial meeting will also take place on Friday, March 11.

Pittsburg Meeting.

Workers of Pittsburg will hold their meeting on March 12, at Labor Lyceum, at 8 p. m. In Los Angeles the meeting will be on March 13. On the same date, in the afternoon, Minneapolis will have a meeting, and, still on the thirteenth, in the evening, there will be one in St. Paul.

The Rutherford memorial meeting in Buffalo is set for Sunday, March 13, at 8 p. m., at Elmwood Music Hall.

In Duluth the memorial meeting will be on March 14, and in Superior on March 15.

Fraud Charge In Local 38 Election of Local 38, if the fraud charges are proven true, that new elections will be ordered by the investigating committee.

27 Not Allowed to Vote.

"We must also call your attention to the unfair discrimination against twenty-seven members of our local who have been allowed to vote and whose votes were not counted on the ground that these members have not yet joined the Strike Fund. These members appeared before the membership committee, were given books through the regular procedure, and were allowed to pay dues.

"They were taken in during the organization campaign, at a reduced rate, as is customary in unorganized trades, and as will be necessary, particularly in our trade, where we work with an element that has never been in a union. We believe that this discrimination against these members will be very harmful to our future progress amongst this category of workers.

Participated in Election for Committee.

"These members participated in the voting for the members of the election objection committee and in the voting on other questions in connection with the elections and if the ruling is to hold good that their votes are not legitimate, then the entire procedure previous to the elections must be considered illegal.

"We are sorry that in our local union such a situation has arisen that officers have been elected by fraud and that the election objection committee is not in a position to come to the members with a unanimous report that the officers have been elected in a regular and honest, clean way and that they cannot have the full confidence and prestige that regularly elected officials have the right to expect upon entering office.

(Signed) ELECTION OBJECTION COMMITTEE: H. Karp, chairman; M. Forman, A. Forman, S. Packer, S. Rosenfeld.

Textile Industry Is Sinking Deeper Into Competitive Morass

Like the cotton spinning industry in New England, the woolen textile business is still suffering from the acute trade depression. American Woolen Co. reports an operating loss of $2,000,000 although the figure juggling may conceal a real profit. Profits for the first quarter are being paid out of surplus accumulated from fat years.

Competition of southern mills in the cotton line, chaos in production and boom in rayon and silk are among reasons assigned by the textile operators for the depression. One "remedy" is for the prosperous mills to buy out the looms of the bankrupt concerns, tossing them on the junk pile to keep the industry from being over-equipped. This bright idea, embracing the destruction of private property, aptly illustrates the "economic" mindedness and aggressiveness of the world's leading business class.

Another keen idea, equally brilliant, is for the woolen men to spend $1,000,000 on what is now known as an "educational" campaign through advertising to make consumers woolconscious. On the other hand the Cotton Textile Institute is instituting a counter-blast in the newspapers and magazines to prove that cotton is undeniably the best cloth of garments. All of which is quietly satisfying to the rayon interests, who are booming production and boosting profits to a fare-you-well.

On the Screen

The film feature at Moss' Broadway this week is "Love's Greatest Mistake"; adapted from the story of Frederic Arnold Kummer. Evelyn Brent, William Powell and Josephine Dunn have important roles.

The Capitol Theatre is showing this week the new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, "The Taxi Dancer," picturization of Robert Terry Shannon's novel of the same name. The players include: Joan Crawford, Owen Moore, Rockliffe Fellowes, Marc MacDermott, Douglas Gilmore, Gertrude Astor, Bert Roach, Claire McDowell and William Orlamond.

"Rubber Tires" is the film attraction at the Hippodrome this week, featuring Bessie Love and Harrison Ford. The cast also includes May Robson, Erwin Connelly, Junior Coghlan, John Patrick and Clarence Burton.

Douglas McLean is being starred in "Let It Rain," at the Paramount Theatre. He is supported by Shirley Mason. As a part of the stage program which the Paramount is featuring this week, Gertrude Ederle, conqueror of the channel, assisted by Helen Wainwright and Aileen Pizzoni, swimming stars, will appear in a huge glass tank.

"Metropolis," the spectacular UFA production which has been in the hands of the Paramount organization in this country for about a year, is now at the Rialto Theatre. The picture was directed by Fritz Lang, finker of "Siegfried," and has a German cast.

Charlie Chaplin in "Pay Day," and "The New Enchantment" are the features at the Fifth Avenue Playhouse this week.

Gilda Gray has signed a contract with Samuel Goldwyn to make one picture each year for five years, Gil Boag, Miss Gray's business manager, is completing negotiations for the film rights to "Marie Odile," Edward Knoblock's play.

FURRIERS RUSH FINANCES TO HELP SAVE THE UNION

Paying Assessment in Spite of Expulsion

An example of the loyalty of the fur workers to the New York Joint Board of the union, and their utter contempt for the dissolution-suspension-expulsion orders of the reactionary International Officials, was shown by the fact that two workers came to the Joint Board office yesterday morning and paid the special tax of $25 which had been voted by the local membership meeting only the night before.

All locals affiliated with the Joint Board unanimously agreed to pay this tax and at the same time expressed their determination to disregard all orders of the International union, and to continue their financial and moral support of their chosen leaders.

Reject Compulsion.

"The unprecedented attempt to impose leadership upon the fur workers by force," was denounced not only in resolutions but by all the workers as they discussed Thursday's notice of expulsion which carried with it the slanderous charges against the Joint Board officers.

These "charges" will be formally answered after the Joint Board meets today—even tho these charges have been so illegally announced, and have never been presented to those whom they accuse.

Wolf Wakes Sleah Union.

While Matthew Woll, acting-president of the National Civic Federation and chairman of the Special Reorganization Committee of the American Federation of Labor, is boldly announcing that "The Communists are out to stay" he is endeavoring to begin building himself a new fur workers union by handing a charter to the company union, known as the Greek Brotherhood.

Organizes Fine Dodgers.

On the day the New York Joint Board was declared "dissolved", Oizer Schachtman, president of the International Fur Workers Union, obeyed instructions from the special committee and issued a charter which establishes "Greek Fur Workers' Union, Local 70". This is composed of a large number of those who scabbed during last years' strike, and who in order to avoid the payment of fines willingly formed a company union under the direction of the Greek bosses who had refused to sign an agreement with the union and maintain union conditions in their shops.

Workers Will Fight.

The reactionary officials of the International Fur Workers Union and the A. F. of L. do not like the methods they use in their efforts to break the union. They welcome the aid of scab unions if this helps them to gain power. But the fur workers are there, and they will fight fearlessly to keep the union which they have built up at such cost.

The Joint Board has utterly ignored the International's communication about dissolution and expulsion, and the work of the union is proceeding as usual.

Compensation for Man With Eyes Burned Out

PASSAIC, N. J. (FP)—Maintenance and $8000 flat award for 100% permanent disability were granted John Koverateky, a dye worker, by the Workmen's Compensation Bureau. The worker was formerly employed at Heyden Chemical Co., Garfield, N. J., as a laborer. He had to shovel chloride of lime—bleaching powder—into drums.

The chemical splashed into Koverateky's eyes while he worked, gradually making him blind, although he was treated for six months. The state law requires that the company supply goggles for workers in chemical factories but lack of sufficient inspection brings lax enforcement. The chemical industry of northern Jersey is one of the largest and most important of the section, including dyeing of the majority of the country's silk goods.

Owners and Lawmakers Both Responsible for Rents, Shortage

Methods By Which Housing Problem Has Been Maintained, and Solution of Situation, Given Next Week.

Today's article begins the summary of the housing survey undertaken by Will de Kalb, DAILY WORKER investigator. The summary will be continued next week, and also special articles exposing the landlords' lobby at Albany, and the responsibility for the housing shortage.

By WILL DE KALB.

After a short summary of the evidence procured in the housing survey, and a further presentation of documents of record and evidence found in public files, the prosecution, which is yours truly, will rest its case.

One thing is certain at this time, however. The facts so far presented prove the existence of a housing shortage. Rooms everywhere cost more money than the average worker can comfortably pay. And they are hard to find. And if found, they are in such a condition, they are not fit quarters for a human being to live in.

Whose Fault?

Someone is responsible. It can't be the tenant. It is either the rent-gouging landlord, or the crooked legislator who is at fault. But according to the facts so far obtained, and further evidence that will be revealed in next week's articles, both the landlord and the legislator are at fault.

According to a certain assemblyman, undoubtedly (and maybe later I will be able to procure documentary evidence of this fact) in the pay of the real estate lobby at Albany, the housing shortage, which necessitated the passage of an emergency rent law in 1922, no longer exists.

How much truth is there in this statement? The DAILY WORKER housing survey proves conclusively that there isn't a particle. The survey showed that rents nowhere have gone down, and in most cases they have continued on the increase even after the passage and operation of the law. And, showing the progress of the rents, will be part of the evidence presented next week.

If there were no housing shortage, would these rents continue at a rate in most cases 100 per cent higher than what they were in 1918? And would people be willing to live in the slums, amidst dirt and filth undescribable, without any of the conveniences of the modern home, if other rooms were procurable?

How was this housing shortage maintained? The activities of the real estate lobby in Albany will be adequately exposed. The methods by which rents were kept sky-high, in hovels not even worthy of the name of tenement, will also be held under the publicity spotlight.

Discuss Methods.

And finally, the methods by which the housing problem can be solved will be listed and discussed.

Someone is going to be indicted by the court of public opinion for responsibility for the existence of a housing shortage. It is expected that as a result, the rent-gouging activities of the landlords will be curbed, and the back-scratching crookedness of some politicians will lose for them a good many votes. Next week we'll have several busy days in court.

SIGMAN AND GANG PUT INJUNCTION ON GARMENT WORKERS JOINT BOARD

A meeting of the New York Joint Board of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union was enlivened last night by the arrival of copies of an injunction which has been taken out against all members of the Joint Board by I. Antonini, manager of Local 89, the Italian dressmakers' union.

Romantic Document.

This injunction, which was granted by Judge Bijur, would restrain the Joint Board members, and members of the clerical force from issuing dues books, or accepting dues or fines from any one employed in the work.

The copies of the injunction are embellished by copies of union books, and various Joint Board leaflets attacking Sigman. The injunction also mentions in the course of its wanderings the "Class Struggle," "Italian Progressive Center" and then launches into an impassioned and emotional dissertation on the radicals and revolutionists who have so sorely disturbed the good members of the union (like Sigman, Brenner, Antonini, et al.) for the past two years.

Sign of Failure.

Those who are concerned only with the economic betterment of the union," says the injunction, have watched with growing horror the activities of the handful of revolutionists "with a capacity for noise and trouble-making far out of proportion to their numbers."

For further amusing extracts from this unusual literary document we refer you to our Monday edition which will contain further particulars worth reading.

Joint Board members were still enjoying themselves over the document at a late hour last night. Their only comment was,

"Well if you can't get union members to recognize you and pay dues any other way, always try to get a judge to do it for you, with an injunction."

Frisco Moulders' War Still On

By HOWARD HARLAN.

Four members of the moulders' union were arrested last night and charged with murder. They are: Robert Burton, William Allen, Earl J. Parenti and Tony Mello. All occupy prominent positions in the union. The quartette are charged with the murder of Eli Tanner, a clerk at the Enterprise Foundry of San Francisco, who was shot and seriously wounded on Feb. 12 while on his way home from work.

For the last five years the moulders' war has been on in San Francisco. Almost a dozen men, some union members and some scabs, have been killed, and a great many more have been wounded since the conflict began. Scarcely a month has passed in all those years without its quota of victims in the moulders' war.

The struggle commenced when the moulders' union declared its intention of making San Francisco a closed shop town. The officials and men realized the fact that the open shop meant the employment of scab labor, and that consequently wages would soon be small and conditions bad. They were determined to get the most they could for the energy they sold.

The employers, backed by the Industrial Association, bitterly fought every attempt of the men to better their conditions by maintaining a closed shop. It was their desire to reduce all labor to a common low level where they must accept the dictation of the employing class. When the latest fatality occurred the Industrial Association offered a reward of $10,000 for the arrest and conviction of those who did the shooting. The arrest of the four officials mentioned has been the result of this action.

Philadelphia Pioneers Arrange Summer Camp

PHILADELPHIA, March 6.—Definite steps for the organization of a workers' children's camp, to be known as Camp Pioneer, were taken by the Philadelphia Pioneers at their third anniversary celebration staged the other day.

Workers, who flocked to the anniversary celebration despite the heavy downpour of rain, gave $100 toward the fund started for the purpose of organizing a childrens' camp in the Philadelphia district.

The district committee of the Young Workers League presented the Pioneers with a large banner during the graduation exercises held in connection with the celebration.

Stop Tunnel.

WASHINGTON, March 6.—Suspension of work on the Harlem River channel in New York City, was recommended in a report made to congress today by Maj. Gen. Jadwin, chief of army engineers.

An adverse report upon further improvement on the Tarrytown, N. Y., harbor, was made by Jadwin.

FORWARD RAGES AS TOILERS BUY DEFENSE BONDS

Reactionary Sheet Not Able to Fool Workers

While the Forward raves, the money pours in for the cloakmakers' bonds. Every day this "right wing" organ very seriously announces that there is no money coming in on the bond issue; and every day the checks and cash pile in to the Bond Committee Headquarters at 16 West 21st Street.

Pulling Hair.

Secretly the Forward must be gnashing its teeth and pulling its own, or somebody's hair; and there is more sorrow in store for the poor old sheet. Next week the bond committee will publish lists of the organizations and individuals who have participated so far in the purchase of bonds, and it will be a staggering blow to all enemies of the union.

This week two thousand dollars worth of RAIC shares were cashed, and the response of these bond holders has been a splendid expression of workers' solidarity.

Shops Pledge.

From Elizabeth, N. J., $217.50 came in yesterday. The Hungarian Workers' Benevolent Society sent in $200 this week, and additional contributions came from Philadelphia, Brockton and Denver.

Several shops have pledge themselves to bring in good-sized contributions today, and so step by step the goal is being reached and the union traitors are being forced to realize that a devoted army is supporting the progressive leaders, and is determined to drive the reactionary officials out of the union forever.

Next Trial On Oil Scandal Will Take Place On April 25

WASHINGTON, March 6.—An announcement was made yesterday by U. S. Attorney F. Gordon that the government will proceed with the bribery cases against Fall, Doheny, senior and junior, at the conclusion of the Fall, Doheny conspiracy trial which is to take place on April 25.

The elder Doheny and Fall were tried last year on an indictment charging "conspiracy to defraud". The jury, composed of youngsters of the "wait-baby" type returned a verdict of not guilty, because it was stated by one of the jurymen, they said that "a loan between two old pals was a token of good friendship, and nobody views business".

As the result of the recent decision of the U. S. Supreme Court, voiding the Elk Hill Oil leases, the Doheny and Fall cases pending appeal, as well as reimbursement of $10,000,000, claimed to have been expended by the company on the development of Pearl Harbor, and the California oil lands.

Workers of Chicago to Celebrate Commune by Mass Meeting March 13

CHICAGO, March 6.—This year just as in other years the workers of Chicago will celebrate the anniversary of the Paris Commune. The International Labor Defense local will hold a mass meeting on March 13 at Temple Hall, Van Buren and Marshfield.

A special program has been arranged and such nationally known speakers as Wm. Z. Foster, Ralph Chaplin and Max Shachtman will address the meeting, pointing out the lessons of the Paris Commune.

The program will consist of a specially prepared play by the Lettish Workers' Dramatic Society and musical feature by Kissen's famous Russian Concert Orchestra.

Labor's Pension Bill Before Committee in Illinois Legislature

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (FP).—In addition to the modified 8-hour bill for women that has reached the stage of committee hearings at Springfield, the Illinois legislature has before it the following bills urged by organized labor:

For a state old age pension system; for prohibiting yellow dog contracts under which an employe must pledge himself to have nothing to do with trade unions; for use of none but Illinois coal by departments of the state government; for safeguarding wages due workers from corporations; and for modifying the conspiracy laws so that acts that are not punishable when done by one person, in an industrial dispute will not be a conspiracy when done by more than one.

Bishop Brown Arouses Babbits of Denver

(By Worker Correspondent.)

DENVER, March 6.—The Heretic Bishop, Wm. Montgomery Brown gave a series of lectures in Denver on Saturday and Sunday, Feb. 26 and 27th, under the auspices of the local organization of the I. L. D.

The first of the series entitled: "Evolution and Revolution" was delivered on Saturday evening in Grace Church Auditorium. His lecture on this occasion was a great delight to many people who heard him give a very radical and outspoken view on the above subject.

On Sunday evening he spoke to a large crowd at the New Denver Lyceum on the West Side. The audience was mostly composed of Jewish speaking people who thereby enjoyed the way he pronounced his heretic ideas. The subject was: "The Power of the Workers."

The audience was so pleased with his talk that when a collection was taken for class war prisoners for which the Bishop made an appeal it contributed liberally even tho it had paid an admission to the lecture.

FOREIGN COUNCIL TO WAR AGAINST ANTI-ALIEN LAWS

Congressman Mooney to Speak in Cleveland

CLEVELAND, March 6.—Foreigners in this country are to enjoy a breathing spell. No further anti-alien legislation can be introduced in congress until next December. But during the long recess of congress, "ambitious legislators" will be preparing renewed activity for voluntary and compulsory registration of aliens, and universal registration for everybody.

The Cleveland Council for the Protection of Foreign-born Workers is, therefore, calling a conference to prepare plans to check the reactionary forces and preserve the elementary rights of the American people in the United States.

All labor, and progressive organizations are called upon to elect or appoint two delegates to the conference, for Sunday evening, March 6, 1927, Insurance Center Bldg. Congressman Charles A. Mooney is expected to address the gathering.

Anti-Imperialist Meetings Held In Los Angeles, Cal.

LOS ANGELES, March 6.—Three well attended meetings have been held here under the auspices of the Anti-Imperialist United Front propaganda Committee of Los Angeles.

The meeting held in Spanish proved to be very successful being attended by a great many of the Mexican and other Latin American workers of whom there are many in this city.

The Propaganda Committee announces that a call is now being prepared that will be sent out this week to all organizations to send delegates to the conference to be held Sunday, March 13th, at 2 p. m. at 224 South Spring St. Room 218.

Meetings both in English and in Spanish will be held at the Plaza next Sunday, March 6th in the early afternoon with several well-known speakers.

Reappointment Of House to Be Delayed Till 1930

WASHINGTON, (FPI).—No reapportionment of House seats among the 48 states will be made until after Congress shall have further debated the issue, the House determined when it defeated, by 183 to 198 votes, a bill prescribing for a new allotment of the 435 seats after the 1920 census shall have been tabulated.

This bill provided that "the ration of apportionment shall be as nearly as possible the same in all states."

Administration leaders prefer to wait until 1932 for legislation to adjust the House membership allotment to changes in population. The present allotment is based on the 1910 census. Under estimates for 1930, several of the agricultural states in the south would lose one or two members each, while such states as California, Michigan and Oklahoma would gain members.

Membership Meeting to Be Held in Pittsburg; CEC Members to Attend

PITTSBURG, March 6.—An important membership meeting of the Workers Party of this city and vicinity will be held at the Labor Lyceum 35 Miller St., Sunday March 13, 2 p. m. A representative of the CEC is expected to attend this meeting and all members are requested to attend.

The meeting is called especially for the purpose of discussing organizational problems and a report of the organizational conference of the CI will be made by the representative of the CEC.

Several other important matters will be taken up especially the coming strike of the coal miners which is expected to begin April 1st. Admission is by membership cards only.

Party units are requested not to hold any other affairs on that day so that all the members can attend.

Two New York Police Arrested for Graft

Two policemen attached to the Richmond Hill Queens precinct, were placed under arrest at the station house yesterday on charges of extortion. They are patrolmen Francis J. G. Graef and Arthur G. Rhodes.

The two were arrested, charged with having extorted $150 from Mrs. Anna Biscotia, of Richmond Hill, mother of Alberta Biscotia, 20 years old, who was recently sentenced to serve from five to ten years in Sing Sing prison for holding up a Richmond Hill lunchroom owner. The two policemen are alleged to have extorted the $150 from Mrs. Biscotia before her son's trial on the promise that they would not testify against him.

Batt to deliver labor's support to Groesbeck and Green, respectively, which lead to a bitter fight, has now been shifted to the Detroit Federation of Labor. Thus the fight between Batt and Martel is not a fight over policies in developing the organized labor movement in this city, but for influence and control in the organized labor movement which will enable those two men to better serve the factions which they support in the republican party, with their activities the organized labor movement, in place of being a weapon to fight for higher wages and better working conditions for the workers, has become merely a pawn in the game of republican politics in the state.

Abandon Progressivism.

The Detroit Federation of Labor has in the past taken a progressive stand on the issues before the organized labor movement. It has endorsed such progressive proposals as amalgamation of the trade unions, world trade union unity, support of the Soviet Union and the movement for a labor party. Martel and Batt who were ones leaders of the progressive movement have gradually abandoned their support of these progressive measures. Their backsliding reflects the effect of their playing the game of republican politics for how could they win favor with the rulers of the republican machine while standing for such measures in the organized labor movement?

No Interest in Organization.

This abandonment of the interests of the workers is further reflected in their attitude toward the organization of the workers in the great factories of Detroit. They have lost all interest in the organization of the workers in the automobile industry, through which the labor movement would be tremendously strengthened. There is an obvious connection between their lack of interest in the organization of the workers in the basic industries of Detroit and their part in the fight in the republican party, for a vigorous, honest campaign to organize the automobile industry would immediately bring them in conflict with the great employing interests which control both factions of the republican machine. The labor movement and the republican machine represent two classes which are enemies, and thass two classes cannot be part of the same political party without the surrender of one to the other. Obviously Batt and Martel have not captured the open shop employers, but the open shop employers have captured the organized labor movement, so far as it is represented by Batt and Martel.

Batt Is Bosses' Best Bet.

The recent editorial in the "Detroit Saturday Night," endorsing the candidacy of Batt and praising his policies, is not faked nor was it accidental. The open shoppers in control of the republican machine consider Batt as most subservient to their interests, even though the policies followed by Martel have not been a serious menace to them, and he is equally tied up with republican politics and the enemies of the organized labor movement.

Repudiate Batt and Martel.

The Trade Union Educational League of Detroit calls upon the organized workers to repudiate both Batt and Martel and to cut the organized labor movement free from republican politics. The honest supporters of the cause of organized labor must unite to build a movement which will fight against the open shop employers and for a systematic building of the organized labor movement in Detroit, particularly in the great manufacturing plants of the city.

In the election now taking place in the Detroit Federation of Labor those workers who stand for development of a strong labor movement in Detroit should support those candidates who decline themselves for the following policies:

1. Cutting loose of the organized labor movement from either faction in the republican machine.

2. An aggressive campaign to organize the unorganized industries, particularly the great automobile industry of the city.

3. Democratization of the Detroit Federation of Labor and the end of boss control in the interest of republican politics.

The formation of a labor party to fight for the interests of labor on the political field.

The organized workers of Detroit should demand that every candidate in the election declare himself on these issues and should unite to support those candidates who stand for this program of building the strength of the organized workers in this city.

TRADE UNION EDUCATIONAL LEAGUE, Detroit Section.

The Manager's Corner

THE PARTY AND THE DAILY.

A study of the work done in the last few months does not show that the party is taking seriously enough the work of building up The DAILY WORKER. Must we emphasize at this time that The DAILY WORKER is the Party's chief organ and weapon in all its campaigns and activities? Must we call attention to the elementary fact that without a strong DAILY WORKER, the Party cannot succeed? Must we point out that the Party is the backbone and the driving force behind The DAILY WORKER, without which it cannot grow? In the drive for 25,000 readers the Party members must be the shock troops that will put the paper over the top.

This can only be accomplished by organized and systematic work done by every unit and every Party member. The size of The DAILY WORKER circulation figures is a first rate barometer of the extent to which the Party has succeeded, in building its mass influence.

Every Party unit, every city and town, every neighborhood, every large factory must have a dependable comrade or group of comrades in charge of promoting The DAILY WORKER. Carefully and systematically each problem must be studied, patiently and persistently, each problem must be tackled, according to the peculiar difficulties which exist.

In the cities which are open to newsstand circulation, every unit must concentrate upon newsstand inspection and newspaper promotion. In the cities and towns which are not within the zone of our newsstand circulation there should be a steady drive to secure subscriptions. The Party is the mainstay of The DAILY WORKER. It must fulfill its responsibilities as such.—BERT MILLER.

Ruthenberg, in 1920, Told Why U. S. Marines Would March in Shanghai in 1927

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

THERE were two processions on Saturday of the greatest interest and significance to the American working class.

On the other side of the earth, at Shanghai, China, 1,200 American marines from the ships of war, Chaumont and Pecos, rang hed brazenly and blatantly, with blast of bugle corps and jingo music of brass bands, thru the streets of the great Chinese seaport, one of the largest in the whole world.

In Chicago, there was another march, the quiet treed of thousands of workers past the bier of C. E. Ruthenberg, paying their tribute to one who had not only struggled, but led in the struggle for their release from oppression. They had come to do him honor.

There is some connection between the two processions. The march of the workers in Chicago is the counter-march to "The Parade" in Shanghai, staged as an American imperialist threatening gesture against the workers of the orient. The strength of the line of march of workers who locked to Ruthenberg for guidance spells the weakness of Wall Street's militarist display against the peoples that American imperialism would subject to its exploitation.

The kept press argues for China, as in Mexico, Nicaragua and other lands that many battleships and thousands of marines are ordered to their posts to "protect American lives" and "defend American interests." It is demanded that the heart-beat of frantic pay-triotism be perfectly attuned to the rolling drumbeat of roaring war. All else is treason. Boldly and bravely, Ruthenberg committed that treason to America imperialism. Concretely it was for trying to halt the march of the American dollar's marines in Shanghai in 1927, that Ruthenberg was ordered to prison in New York City, in 1920.

In the spirit of ~~Marxism~~, Ruthenberg had analyzed before an astonished jury, a vicious prosecutor and a harlot, red-bathing judge, the development of imperialism, where it was leading to, why. It was the clearest explanation of the Communist position that had been made up to that time under similar conditions in this country.

The capitalist ~~class~~ must needs hide the truth from the people, so that it could be persuaded to send marines into every ~~corner~~ of the globe to support the oggressions of the dollar. That was why they sent Ruthenberg to prison. But ~~they~~ still his voice. Nor will death silence it. For his ~~voice~~ takes an added volume as new masses of workers rally to the cause which he championed.

"What is imperialism or imperialist capitalism?" asked ~~Attorney~~ Ferguson, at trial with Ruthenberg before the notorious Judge Bartow S. Weeks. Ferguson is a lawyer and ~~author~~ on the subject of Communism and Ruthenberg before capitalist judge and prosecutor and in face of a ~~hostile~~ jury gave clear answer:

"Imperialism ~~is~~ that stage of the development of capitalism ~~when~~ it becomes the agent of the capitalist ~~class~~ in the export of investment, avenues of ~~investment~~ are found and in any other term of ~~expansion~~ by that period of capitalism when, ~~because~~ of the development of the capitalist system, the percentage of production, the surplus in a ~~country~~ reaches a certain character, that of the ex~~port~~ of capital, and making the requirement ~~necessary~~ for the use of this material, for the ~~development~~ of capital.

"In ~~order~~ to secure markets for the sale of these ~~materials~~ and investments territories are sought and the government ~~is~~ used as an instrumentality in securing ~~concessions~~ and opportunities for investment, which, in turn, ~~are~~ used for the sale of these products."

Ruthenberg ~~then~~ explains the following, Ferguson ~~questioning~~ Ruthenberg:

"Q. ~~Will~~ you explain your statement, at what stage such ~~a development~~ takes place? A. The development of capital~~ism~~ is the perfection of the machinery ~~of~~ the world, from agricultural put into industry, the turning toward the production ~~of~~ machinery, and that is ~~true~~ iron and steel.

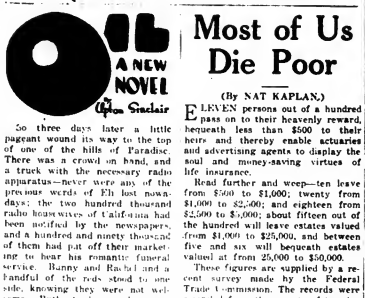
"Q. ~~And~~ A. Machinery, yes.

"Q. Raw ~~materials~~ for railroads.

"Q. In ~~the~~ which the surplus cannot be invested in ~~this~~ country? A. As the tendency of capitalism ~~is~~ to the creation of greater and greater ~~amounts~~ of capital invested in the home ~~market~~ necessarily the capitalists ~~seek~~ investment where the returns will ~~be~~ exploited among various ~~countries~~ which have not been developed, such ~~as~~ China, or part of South America, and ~~they~~ go to those countries and invest their capital in ~~the~~ industry, railroads, and other developments ~~that~~ take the ~~form~~ of the development of that territory thru the ~~building~~ of railroads, which excite the interest for the ~~exploitation~~ of the home country.

"Q. What ~~is~~ the final element that makes this process ~~complete~~? A. The investment of the state as an agency of the ~~government~~ in those investments and to protect ~~them~~.

"Q. Can ~~you~~ explain that a little further? A. Well, we have ~~had~~ a ~~number~~ of instances in our relations with Mexico, where ~~property~~ rights of capitalists are involved, and where we ~~have~~ had to intervene to protect those Mexican ~~governments~~ in the interests of those investments.



"We ~~have~~ had a ~~recent~~ case in point in 1914, that there had ~~been~~ a ~~long~~ developed and ~~extensive~~ imperialistic ~~relations~~ with capitalistic nations; notably ~~in~~ [illegible]

"The ~~struggle~~ for what we ~~now~~ call colonies, had been going ~~on~~ [illegible] found repeatedly, that the ~~nations~~ came in conflict with each other, as for ~~instance~~ in Morocco. The question ~~arose~~ as to which country should be ~~developed~~, exploited, undeveloped ~~which~~ the governments ~~of~~ the capitalistic ~~countries~~, the development ~~of~~ those countries for their ~~benefit~~.

"IT IS OUT OF THIS CONFLICT THAT THE WAR DEVELOPS, ~~IS~~ OUT OF THIS PROCESS THAT OTHER WARS WILL ~~DEVELOP~~ IN THE FUTURE, FROM THE STANDPOINT OF SOCIALIST ANALYSIS."

Let American labor take note of this warning now. Those who accept the principles that Ruthenberg sought to bring to the attention of the American working class will increase. Support of American marines marching thru the streets of Shanghai will thus be withdrawn. Aid thrown on the side of the Chinese workers and peasants will increase and support their struggle, like American labor's, for liberation from the same enslaving imperialist system that seeks to shackle the whole world in its profit-making service. Ruthenberg gave his life to help free the world's workers of those shackles.

So three days later a little pageant wound its way to the top of one of the hills of Paradise. There was a crowd on hand, and a truck with the necessary radio apparatus—never were any of the precious words of Eli lost nowadays; the two hundred thousand radio housewives of California had been notified by the newspapers, and a hundred and ninety thousand of them had put off their marketing to hear his romantic funeral service. Bunny and Rachel and a handful of the rods stood to one side, knowing they were not welcome. Ruth stood near the grave with the weeping family, having on each side of her a sturdy workerher two brothers-in-law, Andy Eugner and Jerry Black.

Of course he had been violent on occasions, and no one knew what he might do. She was wrote and fearful in looks, but seemed not to realize the meaning of the big hole dug in the ground, or of the long black box covered with flowers. While Eli was preaching his fervid sermon about the prodigal son who returned, and about the strayed lamb which was found, Ruth stood gazing at the white clouds moving slowly behind the distant hill tops.

She would make them no more trouble. All she wanted was to wander over those hills, and call now and then for the sheep which were no longer there. Sometimes it called Paul, and sometimes she called Bunny, and so they let her wander; until one day she went calling Joe Gundra. The oil workers who were putting up the new derricks and cleaning out the burned wells to get them back on production were now men to the Ross Junior trust—it is the Ferree Tuner tract now, by the way, one of Vernon Rosser's first commands in charge of the job. The crew men had never heard about the "roughneck" who has fallen into the discovery well, so they paid no attention to the unhappy girl who wandered here and there calling his name.

It was not till late that night, when Ruth was missing, and the family making a search, that some one told of hearing her call Joe Gundra. Meeks remained to keep away, and they put down a hook in the discovery well, which was having to be drilled again, and they brought up a pair of Ruth's dress; so they put down a three-pronged grab, and brought up the rest of her, and Eli came again, and they buried her alongside Paul, and with Joe Gundra not far away.

You can see these graves, with a picket fence about them, and no attempt for a hundred feet or more all thick fine undively derricks will be gone, and so will the picket fence and the graves. There will be other girls with bare brown legs running over those hills, and they may grow up to be happier women, if men can find some way to chain the black and cruel demon which killed Ruth Watkins and her brother—yes, and Dad also: an evil Power which roams the earth, stripping other girls of men and women, and luring the nations to destruction by visions of unearned wealth, and the opportunity to enslave and exploit labor. The End

To Fight Divorce.

PARIS, March 6.—Prince Galitzine, fifth husband of Aimee Crocker Gourand, formerly of Sacramento, California, has employed a lawyer and informed his wife he plans to fight her divorce action, according to Le Journal.

Most of Us Die Poor

(By NAT KAPLAN.)

ELEVEN persons out of a hundred pass on to their heavenly reward, bequeath less than $5,000 to their heirs and thereby enable actuaries and advertising agents to display the soul and money-saving virtues of life insurance.

Read further and weep—ten leave from $500 to $1,000; twenty from $1,000 to $2,500; and eighteen from $2,500 to $5,000; about fifteen out of the hundred will leave estates valued from $1,000 to $25,000, and between five and six will bequeath estates valued at from 25,000 to $50,000.

These figures are supplied by a recent survey made by the Federal Trade Commission. The records were compiled from the reports of twenty-four "sample" counties throughout the United States, covering a period of twelve years.

Exploiters Come High.

Watch the mass of insurance advertising that will be released shortly, conveying the above dread information. How does the value of your life compare with that of the following noted Americans?

Rodman Wanamaker is insured for $7,500,000. He was the first man to apply for more than a $1,000,000 policy. That was twenty years ago. Now there are scores 200 and 300 policies in force for one million dollars and over. William Fox carries a round six million dollars worth. S. S. Kresge, J. L. Lasky, Adolph Zukor and Marcus Loew carry $5,000,000. John Bowman and Ralph Jonas are in the $4,000,000 class.

Movie Star's Hides Precious.

John Barrymore and Gloria Swanson are insured for $2,000,000 each, Norma Talmadge for $1,250,000, and Constance Talmadge, Buster Keaton, Charlie Chaplin, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Erie von Stroheim, Jack Mathis, Richard Thomas and Cecil DeMille are insured for $1,000,000 each. Red Grange was insured for a half million while making a picture, and Marion Talley recently took out a similar amount. So if one could pass a screen test the best bet is either banking, singing or pro-fessional football.

Three policies exceeding one million dollars were paid out in 1925, according to the National Underwriters of February 21. Figures for 1925 are the latest available. The largest claim paid was for $1,767,000 to the estate of Solomon Rosenbloom, deceased Pittsburgh banker. Horace Suks was insured for $1,201,000 and Julius Fleischmann was the third policy-holder to die in 1925 with more than one million dollars in insurance. His policies were for $1,049,240. These three men were under sixty and all died suddenly.

Lots of Prosperity.

The insurance companies of America had one of their best years in 1925, the year under review. They paid out $1,541,016,000, exclusive of the $43,618,490 paid by the United States Veterans' Bureau.

The dread lesson conveyed in the findings of the Federal Trade Commission will doubtless increase the saleability of insurance, and sons of Eli, John Harvard, Princeton, et al, will find an answer to their quest for a life work embracing Profit and Service and rally under the standards of the anxiously waiting insurance companies. The few who are sadly left behind may find consolation in other typically American professions—advertising, bond-selling or chiropractic.

Barnard—An Invitation!

THREE women politicians addressed a gathering of women. Thirteenth Assembly, N. Y., District women voters and Barnard graduates. A sonnet.

They came to give the women and girls advice—and they "delivered the goods."

When men politicians talk to men voters—especially to aspiring young college students, they try to show them that by starting at the bottom, they can "work their "way up" until they land in the White House.

But girls? Women? They cannot become presidents; therefore, the only stimulating advice one can give them is: do the little chores and, bye and bye, you will become big politicians with big salaries—even as the Tammany bosses or the leaders of the G. O. P.

The Barnard girls, therefore, were told to "start at the bottom, lick stamps and mail letters" if they would ever hope to become successful careerists in politics.

Miss Sarah Schuyler Butler, daughter of Columbia's ultra-reactionary president—whose future is secure, so long as the men and women of the working class remain the slaves of capitalism, was one of the speakers. She urged the ladies present to "study politics" by "reading the daily newspapers." Needless to say, she did not include the latest daily to appear on the newsstands, The DAILY WORKER.

She urged each of her hearers to "join some political party" and "learn its machinery." She made no mention of the Workers Party, of course. Neither did Mrs. Henry Moscowitz, who got her training from the workers of the lower East Side and has used it to climb nimbly up the Tammany Circus ladder; nor Mrs. Charles L. Tiffany, who is "regional director of the First Region of the Non-Partisan League of Women Voters," and who, no doubt, cares very little as to whether one or another of the bourgeois parties keeps capitalism in power.

None of the three speakers made mention of the class-struggle and no fourth speaker was invited to present the program of the Workers Party. This is the reason why I have taken the liberty of writing the chairman of that meeting, inviting some of the Barnard students through him to come to the March 8th meeting at Central Opera House, where they will learn something about the work of non-careerist Communist men and women whose ideal is not a big fat job but the privilege of organizing the housewives and factory women together with the men of the working class.

My letter follows:

Mr. Raymond C. Moley,
Barnard College,
New York, N. Y.
March 2, 1927.

My dear Mr. Moley:

I note with interest the report of a meeting on March first over which you presided, held before Barnard students and addressed by several women representing the two main political parties and a "non-partisan" political organization.

I write you in the hope you will agree that no meeting truly represents all sides politically which does not include a speaker from the Workers (Communist) Party. There must be, without a doubt, a fair percentage of students at Barnard who would find the Communist message of vital interest. Had a Workers Party speaker been invited, I am sure that these students would have come away with the impression that Barnard is a live institution, after all.

However, the moment is past. But may I not, nevertheless, bring to the attention of the Barnard students (1) convening the above dread information. How does the value of your life compare with that of the following noted Americans? the big meeting on March 8th, unforgettable experience. There, the speeches will inspire them to make sacrifices in turn for the millions of working women for whom the "higher education" is impossible under capitalism. There, they will feel not the bourgeois lure of a personal political career, but the call to take part in the political organization and enlightenment of these millions. There, they may be invited to join the Workers' School—to vitalize their "dead" knowledge gained in the higher institutions of bourgeois education.

They may be asked at the March 8th meeting to "lick stamps and send out letters." But these letters would not help them ultimately to become advisers "to the Governor" at fat salaries. The chances are these letters would be a call to workers to fight Capitalism, fight Imperialism—and, so far from leading them to fat pay envelopes might ultimately lead them to long terms in jail. Yet I think some of them would answer the call "to lick stamps and address envelopes" under even these risky conditions—because they are proletarian at heart and need but to hear and understand our message to respond.

If you yourself are of proletarian origin—if you yourself secretly chafe at your intellectual enslavement, I feel confident that you will do what you can to help correct the meeting of March first by sending a strong proletarian contingent of Barnard students to the meeting of March 8th—the women's day celebration—a day celebrated throughout the world by the Communist Parties, sections of the Communist International.

Thanking you for any service you may render the worker students of Barnard, believe me, prouder of indictments than of diplomas.

SLAYING THE BEAST

The Literary Guild: Guardian Angels of Literature

By SENDER GARLIN

It may be that the Literary Guild which was recently formed is a genuine venture in cooperation; it may be, on the other hand, just a bright business idea. In any event its benefits to the workers of this country are quite dubious.

There is no doubt that this organization will cut down the prices of certain books. One must remember that the entrenched publishers are making a vigorous fight against the Guild. But that does not mean that the average workers of the United States can hope to discover any vital literature through the guardianship of this organization.

The United Cigar Idea.

The Literary Guild is distributing a persuasive little booklet entitled "Wings," which explains the hopes, origins and frustrations of the organization to date. The Theatre Guild of New York and the book guilds of Europe are cited by the present group to illustrate the sources of their inspiration. "It is a modern way of getting books—based on modern ideas of selection, manufacture and distribution."

Specifically, each member of the Guild (818 yearly) will be entitled to 12 books carefully selected by a board of distinguished editors at one-half the bookstore prices." These will be mailed directly to the subscriber, one volume being published each month.

There are two things that are of fundamental interest to us: (1) Is the editorial committee of the Guild likely to choose books of exceptional value or even of merit? (2) Assuming that their judgment is honest, sound and discerning, will the books which they select be of interest and value to the members of the working class of America?

Carl Van Doren, former literary editor of The Nation, and at one time with the Century Magazine is the Editor-in-Chief of the committee who will select both books already published (which will be purchased in consignments of 20,000) and also original manuscripts. The other members are Glenn Frank, Zona Gale, Joseph Wood Krutch, Hendrik Willem Van Loon, and Elinor Wylie.

Colorless Candidates.

Those who are slightly familiar with the technique of nominating a candidate for President of the United States or of selecting a book and an author upon whom to bestow the distinction of the Pulitzer Prize will understand that the Literary Guild will probably be faced with similar difficulties. It is obvious that the books selected will be not those which show unusual merit but rather those about which the majority of wholesome, clean-minded and patriotic Americans can become enthusastic.

"Down with the wall between writer and reader" is the slogan of the Literary Guild. This is rather cold consolation, we fear.

"The Best People."

In an effort to impress the public with the authority of the members of the board of editors, the professional interests and activities of the individual members are cited. "What they are" and "Associations" are the two items under which this is accomplished. Elinor Wylie, for example, is described as a novelist, essayest, and poet. Her "associations" are listed as The New Republic, The New Yorker, and the New York Herald Tribune. And Hendrik William Van Loon, after being described professionally as a historian, cartoonist, and journalist, his associations are cited as Cornell University, Antioch College, the Associated Press and the Woman's Home Companion.

Middle-class Culture".

We are not here concerned primarily with the question as to whether the sponsors of the organization are trying to make money or not,—or even if the books which they discover will be good and interesting reading. This much, however, is undisputed: the bit of superstitious worship called "Wings", clearly labels the Literary Guild at best as a nice, amiable, middle-class movement to "bring culture to the people." And the kind of "culture" that will be brought forth will unquestionably be the kind that Glenn Frank, one of the honored members of the Editorial Board, is palming off each day in his syndicated capsules of professional optimism entitled "Life's Worth Living" in the New York Evening World.

No, Thanks!

The working class of America must develop its own literature. It must develop its own teachers. The "hand-me-down" culture of the leisure class is something that we must look upon as a positive menace. The clear-seeing members of the working class have repudiated the spurious economic theory of John B. Commons, of the University of Wisconsin, because it is clearly an apology for the capitalist system. In the same way must be repudiated the spurious guardianship of Glenn Frank, of the University of Wisconsin and Elinor Wylie (Washington society lady) in the field of literature.

It is not sufficient to remove the wall between the writer and reader, even if the Literary Guild succeeds in that. What is more vital is to destroy the wall between literature and industry,—to make of writers not members of a patronizing, parasitic class, but to increase the articulateness of the workers of the world. This cannot be done by aiding this scheme of a group of benevolent members of the upper middle class in their efforts to artificially foist them in their choice of cultured books.

Sure Thing Sportsmen

By SPECTATOR.

THOSE who pull the strings in and about the professional prize ring are the only money men among the country's professional gamblers. They are not gamblers in the literal sense of the word, for they take no chances. The term, fixers, might be more aptly used.

The transition, carrying boxing from its more or less romantic past to present eminence as a business, is in keeping with the development of other great American industries. Corruption, greed, duplicity and what have you mark it with the stamp of business. The professional game is as edifying, as wholesome as a black-jacking.

Suggestion of Rottenness.

A glance at a few fairly recent bouts will indicate that there is more than a faint suggestion of rottenness, that, in fact, the "sport" stinks. It will be observed that despite the prediction of sports writers, shipping clerks and other sporting experts, the real wise guys are the gamblers or fixers.

On June 5, 1925, Tunney knocked out Tom Gibbons in the twelfth round of their bout at the Polo Grounds. Gibbons had stayed the limit with the champion, Dempsey, and had never been knocked out. He was generally conceded to be a harder hitter and cleverer than Tunney, but wise money was placed on Tunney and Gene won. A somewhat similar situation obtained in the present champion's knockout of the iron-man, Bartley Madden, who had stayed the limit with Harry Wills although badly beaten in every one of the fifteen rounds. Tunney was being systematically built up into a position as the leading contender.

Made a Killing.

The present champion's set-to with Jack Dempsey involved an upset so unexpected that it left a great audiance cold. But the wise money men made a killing. Similarly, on February 18, 1927, the Delaney-Maloney fight at Madison Square Garden ended with Maloney, on the short end of 13 to 5 odds, the victor.

The above examples present a certain finesse, leaving a little room for an "honest" difference of opinion. Consider a few instances in which there was out and out double cross-ing.

On July 2nd, 1925, Charley Rosenberg kayoed Eddie Shea at the Yankee Velodrome in the fourth round. Although Shea was considered a better scratcher in the previous division, most of the ramblers went so far as to pick the fourth round as the one in which Rosenberg would win.

Rosenberg Won.

Later, on February 4, 1927, Rosenberg was slated to meet a Parisian in the person of Bushy Graham. The "experts" figured that Rosenberg would be greatly weakened by his hectic efforts to make the weight but Rosenberg came in overweight, forfeited a neat sum of money and his title and battered Graham. The suckers, who had expected him to come in as a fantam, bet on Graham. Rosenberg was suspended for one year by the boxing commission.

On September 21, 1927, Dave Shade met Mickey Walker for the welter-weight title, at the Yankee Stadium. So Shade's superb record and Walker that some betters in Las Vegas hedge in the late rounds by offering odds on Shade. Walker was given the decision. His "victory" over Tex Flowers was later the subject of a municipal investigation in Chicago. The usual whitewashing was applied.

Going back to December 17, 1923, when Johnny Dundee received the decision against Jack Bernstein, after the latter had entered almost every round, it should be noted that the two judges who shared in that verdict have not offenated in this state since then.

Officials Suspended.

On September 11, 1924, Paul Kaplin was a 3 to 1 favorite over Wilbur Harmon. They were apparently evenly matched. Harmon had a wide margin, but the decision was a draw. The two officials who voted that way were suspended.

On November 3, 1924, Charley Rosen was given the decision in his bout with Lucien Vinez. The latter was clearly the victor, and two officials who contribute to this looting of suckers were suspended.

It's a great game, as typically American as the Harding administration, Chicago government and New York dramatic art.

CURRENT EVENTS

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

THIS day is set aside by the Communist International to stress the importance of women in the class struggle. We do not waste our time discussing whether monogamy is desirable, whether a husband should padlock his pockets on pay day, or whether a young woman vacillating between the choice of a professional career and a happy home with children should keep a bulldog with a taste for male blood so that she may decide the momentous question in peace. We are now concerned with the working class woman, with the slaves of the factory and the kitchen. The great majority of women would not recognize an inferiority complex if they met him on the street; nevertheless they are treated as inferiors for the same reason that the Chinese were subjected to insane and humiliation until they exchanged their pigtails for bayonets and turned their pruning hooks into swords.

Women workers must organize. Millions of them participate in industry. With the development of machinery they left the home and entered the factory. Today there are few industries that women do not participate in. Of the millions of women employed in industry comparatively few are organized. They are at the mercy of the employers who babble of the glories of womanhood and the dangers of radicalism. Women workers should have their fill of mush by now, the workers, male and female, are gluttons for punishment.

Today, in every country where there is a section of the Communist International, speeches will be delivered, leaflets will be distributed and the importance of organizing the better half of the army of labor will be stressed. Women are the chief sufferers in strikes and lock-outs. They have to face the hard-boiled butcher and the proverbially greedy landlord. The thought of children crying for food is not pleasant. The husband is in the thick of the struggle and understands the why and the wherefore of the strike. The women do not.

They read in the capitalist press that the strike is due to the machinations of "reds" or to "walking delegates." The latter, however, do not do much walking nowadays. They park themselves in the old arm-chair and move only to their meals, to the cashier's window or to bed. The old fossilized trade union leaders are no longer interested in organizing anybody. Because the wives of strikers do not always understand the meaning of a strike, they are oftentimes used by the employers to weaken the morale of the strikers.

Women have played an important role in past revolutionary struggles. In the Russian revolution thousands of them gave their lives on the battlefields fighting side by side with the men. The same is true of every other struggle great and small where labor was pitted against the ruling classes. During the British general strike and the long drawn out miners' strike their services were invaluable. The same can be said of Passaic. It is, therefore, the duty of the revolutionery workers to organize the women workers politically and industrially side by side with the men in trade unions and in working class political parties. The task is a big one. It must be accomplished. In its accomplishment the members of

INTERNATIONAL COMMUNIST BODIES SEND SYMPATHY TO WORKERS PARTY

Ruthenberg's Death Brings Grief to Many Labor Organizations Here and Abroad

Cablegrams and telegrams from the Communist International, the Red International of Labor Unions, the Communist Party of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, the Young Communist International, and many other labor bodies, both in America and abroad, have been received at the headquarters of the Workers (Communist) Party. Ruthenberg was one of the chief founders of the party and was its general secretary at the time of his death.

Political Committee Sends Ashes.

Among the cablegrams is a request from the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union that the ashes of Comrade Ruthenberg be sent to Moscow, to be buried in the Red Square, beneath the wall of the Kremlin, where lie those of other heroes of the Communist revolution. The Political Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party has acceded to this request, and after suitable processions and mass meetings Ruthenberg's ashes will be sent to the free soil of the first Workers' Republic.

Some of the messages received at party headquarters have already been published in the Party press, others follow below:

Comintern Feels Loss.

"The Executive Committee of the Communist International expresses its profound sorrow in the death of Comrade Ruthenberg, member of its presidium. We express our deepest sympathy to the Workers (Communist) Party of America in the loss of its general secretary and leader. Our mutual bereavement is a great loss especially to the working class of America. At no time since Comrade Ruthenberg raised the Red Flag against the imperialist war and led the way to the formation of the Workers (Communist) Party has his leadership been more needed than today."

R. I. L. U. Calls Him Staunch.

"The Executive Bureau of the R. I. L. U. expresses deep sympathy with all members of the Workers Party and revolutionary workers of the United States in the loss of Comrade Ruthenberg, one of the staunchest fighters against imperialism and the capitalist system of wage slavery."

Y. C. I. Cables Regrets.

"We express deepest regret over the death of Comrade Ruthenberg, one of the founders and outstanding leaders of the party, and sympathy to whole party. We call upon all Communists to close their ranks for struggle against capitalism. Authorizing league to provide wreath.—PRESIDIUM, YOUNG COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL."

Regrets From All.

Messages of consolation and promises to support the Party more energetically than ever during the present period when it is deprived of its great leader come to Party Headquarters also from the following:

Workers Party, Young Workers, Finnish Workers Club, and the staffs of the Tower and the Novyetar, all of Astoria; The South Slavic Bureau of the Workers Party, through its secretary, Chas. Novy; The Workers Party Polish Bureau, through its secretary B. K. Gebert; a mass meeting of the Minneapolis membership, and another from the Minneapolis Central Nucleus, Workers Party, also the Labor Lyceum Nucleus, Minneapolis; Sub-section 1-A-6, and the Ukrainian Bureau, all of New York City; the District Executive Committee of Dis-

European Steel Trust Does Not Solve Problem

Germany Demands Higher Production Allowance

BERLIN, March 7.—The struggle for market places, and the competition between the producing powers of Europe grew wordly on. The European Power steel cartel between France, Germany, Belgium and Luxemburg, formed last year and heralded at that time as the one great step toward unification of continental Europe, is now seriously attacked by Germany, one of the progenitors.

The directors of the trust are now in session at Dusseldorf with the aim to promulgate necessary changes in the international situation. Germany claims that the trust is curtailing her production and that, with the stabilization of the franc, the agreement drawn up at the time of the trust formation is now working against her interest. The German directors claim that the fine for over-production 184 per ton) makes Germany finance the other countries.

Germany also demands, and threatens to bring pressure, to force the entry of Poland into the cartel, as the latter is now seriously underselling her in her foreign trade.

Miners Strike for Union Recognition; Determined to Win

PEORIA, Ill., March 7. Seventy-five miners of the Hilltop mine located two miles west here went on strike yesterday because the stockholders refused the miners recognition of the union.

The Hilltop miners organized a week ago and were told by the owners they could not work unless they withdrew from the union. The miners are determined not to go back to work until a contract, similar to the one in the other mines of the district, is signed.

Workers Arrested for Distributing Leaflet On China Situation

(By a Worker Correspondent).

MILWAUKEE, March 7. — The bosses of this town are becoming extremely nervous and their obedient flunkeys, the city administration, included, passed an ordinance making it a misdemeanor to distribute leaflets to workers on the streets.

Comrades G. Nikonenko and O'Zim were arrested, kept in a filthy jail overnight, strictly incommunicado, and fined $10 and cost each, for distributing the leaflets about the dangers of a new war with China and in Nicaragua.

Call Anti-Imperialist Meeting in Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES, Cal., March 7.—An anti-Imperialist conference will be held at 224 S. Spring St. on Sunday March 13 to mobilize all forces opposed to American marines in China and Nicaragua and any intervention in Mexico.

All organizations are urged to send delegates to the conference so a united struggle can be carried on against those who favor war.

Huge Crowds at Funeral for Ruthenberg

New York Guard of Honor to Include Union Leaders

CHICAGO, March 7. — Great crowds of mourning workers assembled this morning to follow the body of their Comrade, C. E. Ruthenberg, to the crematorium. They met in Ashland Auditorium, where for the last two days the body of Ruthenberg lay under its canopy of black and red, where yesterday thousands surged into the hall, and other thousands were denied the right to enter merely because it was filled to overflowing, and the police had closed the doors.

They followed sadly the still form of their great leader thru Chicago streets, from the auditorium to the Chapel of Graceland Cemetery.

That hall too was unable to hold the crowds, tho they were smaller today, because it was Monday, and the Workers Party is made up of workers, with duties to their wives and children—work has to go on whoever dies.

Filled With Flowers.

Graceland Chapel was half filled with floral offerings sent by those who tried, with flowers and wreaths, to convey a part of their admiration for the life of this man they were burying today.

As the coffin was lowered into the crematorium, the comrades present sang "The International."

Many of the speakers at yesterday's meeting will go on to New York, for the huge mass meeting planned there.

New York Guards Ashes.

The members of the Central Executive Committee, including W. W. Weinstone and C. E. Krumbein of New York, are conveying the ashes of Comrade Ruthenberg.

A special guard of honor will meet the train. This guard of honor will include prominent trade unionists such as Ben Gold, Sam Liebowitz, Aaron Gross, Chas. Zimmerman, Julius Boruchovitz, Rose Wortis, Philip Aronberg and others, members of the District Executive Committee, Bureau members of the Young Workers League, editors of party papers and committees of the Language Bureaus.

Constant Guard.

The guard of honor will take charge of the remains of our dead leader until they go on to Moscow to be placed beneath the Kremlin Wall.

Unable to obtain Madison Square Garden for that day, memorial meetings are being arranged for tonight, now night at 8:00 o'clock at Carnegie Hall and Central Opera House, 67th St. and Third Ave. Twenty thousand workers left heard Ruthenberg in New York at a Lenin Memorial meeting in Madison Square Garden on January 22nd. It is expected that many thousands will be unable to gain admittance to the meetings already scheduled for Wednesday night to honor his memory. Several additional halls are therefore being held in reserve.

Send Flowers Early.

Many labor and fraternal organizations are sending floral tributes to Carnegie Hall. Sections desiring to send wreaths should see that they reach the hall before 6:00 o'clock.

Speakers at these meetings include William Z. Foster, Jay Lovestone,

Political Schools For Chinese Women

An Interview With Madame Sun Yat-Sen

HANKOW, January 26 (by mail): "During the first fortnight I was in Hankow, delegation after delegation of women came to me asking how they could assist the work of the Kuomintang and also help their sisters in the task of developing a New Womanhood in China that should be cognizant of the new temper of the times, politically conscious and free.

"They were eager but unprepared as women, to teach them Kuomintang principles and help them to be useful in the field of women's participation in the revolution."

Training Women Organizers.

Such, it is explained by Mme. Sun Political School for Women which she has organized. It is scheduled to open in Hankow next month for its first semester.

"For our first term," she says, "it is probable most of our students will be young women from Hupeh and neighboring provinces. But the eventual purpose is to have girls from every part of the country. We wish to develop individuals who can be sent back into their home provinces as evangelists of the new political faith.

To Get Political Education.

"In brief, we propose to give women political training, to provide them with a clear understanding of the revolution and a knowledge of the general

Lunacharsky Defends Charlie Chaplin From Hypocritical Attacks

MOSCOW, March 7.—Declaring Charlie Chaplin to be a great artist who should not be bound "by hypocritical bourgeois moral bonds," A. V. Lunacharsky, commisar of education, today made a vehement protest against criticism of Chaplin for his marital difficulties.

Lunacharsky, declares the present treatment of Chaplin is similar to the treatment Maxim Gorky received when he visited New York with an unregistered wife and was boycotted. He declares Chaplin should have the right to manage his home affairs with out interference from the public, which he says should be grateful to him.

Rush to Courts To Stop Reed Graft Probe

Pennsylvania Republicans Would Hide Ballots

WASHINGTON, March 7.—A court clash between the Reed campaign fund committee and the republican organization of Pennsylvania loomed today over the pending effort of the committee to seize 250,000 additional ballots in connection with the contest initiated by William B. Wilson, democrat, to unseat Senator William S. Vare.

The committee unanimously voted to impound the ballots in Luzerne, Lackawanna, Delaware and Schuylkill counties following a request from Wilson. All these counties were Vare strongholds and were the only upstate counties carried by the republican in the general election. The move, it was said, will be fought by the republican organization, which challenges the power of the committee to function during the recess of congress. The courts will be asked to decide the issue.

Texas Democrats Fight For a 'Lily White' Party

AUSTIN, Texas, March 7. — The Texas legislature should enact laws to meet the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in striking down that portion of the Texas primary election law which forbids negroes from voting, Governor Dan Moody, recommended to the house today.

Now They Say Slaying Of Marine Was Due To "Accident In Barracks"

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, March 7. —American army officers here admit the death of one marine, killed in barracks, but decline to state how the "accident" happened.

An official denial has been issued to the story published in the United States that several marines were slain in a battle following their attack on the liberal forces in the interior. It is admitted that a fight took place, and that news was suppressed for several days.

Report Nationalists Take Soochow, China

Imperialists Continue to Land Troops; British Naval Guns Trained On City

SHANGHAI, March 7.—The city of Soochow has fallen to the Nationalist armies according to reports, and Chang Chung Chang, the northern general who has supplanted Sun Chuan Fang, the defeated "defender" of Shanghai, is said to be contemplating flight to his native haunts in the north.

Chang Chung Chang full of hop and optimism boasted that he was going to vanquish the Nationalists and drive "Bolshevism" out of China. He declared that with his allies he could throw a million soldiers into the field. But his allies are either deserting to the Nationalists, weary ing out their feet in a mad dash to protect their rear from southern bayonets or else writing poetry. The latter is said to be the occupation of Wu Pei Fu, who has been purchased by foreign imperialist governors often than Madame Goddam entertained British diplomats in the "Shanghai Gesture."

Shanghai Is Willing.

Soochow is only 54 miles west of Shanghai by rail. If the report of the capture of this city by the Nationalists is authentic Shanghai will fall into the arms of the revolutionary troops without a struggle. The Shanghai Central Labor Union is arranging for a general strike as soon as the Nationalist armies enter the city. The plans are said to include the arming of the workers. The recent general strike was a tremendous success in the opinion of Shanghai labor leaders who declare that it was a dress rehearsal for the next one. Fully 300,000 workers quit and showed perfect discipline in the face of the reign of terror that was inaugurated by the reactionary defense commissioner under the direction of the foreign imperialist powers.

Japanese Land Troops.

Five hundred Japanese blue jackets have landed here and the Mikado government sent five hundred more men to Shanghai harbor. The blue jackets are billeted in the Japanese cotton mills. Japan has nine warships at anchor in the Yangtze River with 3,0000 men available for duty.

The Kuomintang of Ningpo has arranged for a gigantic anti-imperialist demonstration here. A British warship was dispatched to Ningpo. Posters denouncing foreign imperialism were tacked up all over the city and handbills branding the British, Americans, Japanese, French and Italian governments as the enemies of the Chinese were distributed.

Split Rumors Spread.

Rumors of an impending split in the Kuomintang ranks are being spread by the imperialist powers. While there are differences of opinion it is pointed out there is no reason to believe that the situation will reach a crisis in the near future in view of the fact that the Koumintang armies are victorious and that the northern drive was initiated by the left wing of the party. The success of this policy has immensely strengthened the left and enhanced its prestige.

More than 70,000 Chinese laborers, mostly women, are employed in the Shanghai cotton mills owned by the Japanese. The Japanese own the most important cotton factories, silk mills and jute plants.

Arrest Trade Unionists.

Last night the police arrested twenty-four union members at the headquarters of the Piece Goods Employes Union and confiscated the membership list of the organization. Nationalist leaflets calling on the people to expel all the imperialists, the British first, are widely distributed in the urban and rural areas.

There is a deep distrust of the loyalty of the Sikh police among British circles in view of the alacrity with which they went over to the Nationalists in Hankow. Evidently the British are determined to hold Shanghai and there is reason to believe that the other imperialist powers are willing to co-operate. British warships in the harbor have their guns trained on the city.

World Congress Urges Unity of All Oppressed

Asks Freedom of World's Enslaved Peoples

BRUSSELS, Belgium.—The International Congress against Colonial Oppression, held here was of a tremendous significance in the fight against world imperialism. A compact body of 174 delegates, representing 21 of the foremost countries in the world, gathered together to voice their protest against subjugation of their peoples by military invasion and political intrigues of the capitalistic nations. A general urge to free themselves from oppression was common to all; the colonials to shake off the yoke of oppression, the delegates from capitalistic nations to be free from wage slavery. Men, known the world over for their fight against oppression, mads vigorous appeals, stated cold fact of slaughter and punishment, condemned the activity of imperiel-military robbery and colonization of their countries and demanded that active steps be taken to stop the march of plunder and enslavement.

Tell of Struggles.

Delegates representing strong and determined organizations from Mexico and China, told of their struggle to organize the masses and to build up a strong force by means of which to wield an effective weapon against foreign exploitation and commerce. Chan Kuen, a member of the Hong Kong and Canton strike committee declared that the main force to overthrow the imperialists in China was the working class and the peasantry, and that with a strong alliance between the two forces and independence of China would be an assured fact. Liau Han Sui speaking for the Kuomingtang said that the present struggle for emancipation was uniting all China, and that with the help of organized labor from other countries, imperialism would be forced to retreat.

Many Prominent Delegates.

Among the speakers who took the floor were: Huang Kwang Suen, representative of the Chinese national government; Jawahar Lal Nehru, All Indian National Congress; Katayma, Japan; Colraine, South African Trade Union Congress; Richard Moore, American Negro Workers Congress; Antonio Mella, Anti-Imperialist League of Mexico; Roger Baldwin, American Civil Liberties Union; Manuel Gomez, Workers Party of America; Harry Pollitt, Minority Movement of Great Britain; Finmen, International Transport Workers; Henri Barbusse, George Ledebour and George Lansbury.

An attack was made by the European speech against the officials of the second international, and the reactionaries of the British Labor Party for the laxity in fighting for the protection of oppressed colonials and for giving direct aid to the imperialist.

The congress adjourned by singing the International and by pledging to work together with the program of the Soviet Union for the emancipation of the working class the world over.

Soviet Commission On Way to Paris to Resume Adjourned Debt Confab

In addition to the Franco-Soviet debt other financial matters will be discussed.

Mrs. I. Tasaka Has 23 Kids in 25 Years and Is Not Finished Yet

GANGES, B. C., March 7.—Mrs. I. Tasaka, wife of a Japanese fisherman has given birth to 23 children in 25 years. It is believed that she has established a record for British Columbia if not the whole dominion.

Seventeen of the children are living. She is her husband's fifth wife.

"CHAMPION OF UNORGANIZED," SAYS T. U. E. L. OF CHARLES E. RUTHENBERG

Pointing out Ruthenberg's twenty-year struggle in the cause of the working class, the Trade Union Educational League, of which William Z. Foster is secretary-treasurer, expresses its grief on the death of America's revolutionary leader. The resolution adopted by the T. U. E. L. on Ruthenberg's death is reprinted in full:

On March 2 Comrade Charles E. Ruthenberg, general secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party, died from peritonitis, developing out of an operation for appendicitis. This sad news comes as a profound shock to all who knew Comrade Ruthenberg. His death brings a great loss to the entire left wing in the American labor movement.

Comrade Ruthenberg has been a fighter in the workers' cause for a full twenty years. For ten years he was one of the leaders in the Socialist Party. He fought against the opportunists and sought to make that organization the expression of the revolutionary workers of this country. For several years he was secretary of the Cleveland organization of the Socialist Party. Several times he was a candidate for Mayor of Cleveland. He was also a candidate for Governor of Ohio. He became a nationally known figure in the Socialist Party.

When the war broke out Comrade Ruthenberg expressed his opposition in unequivocal terms. For this he was convicted and sent to jail in Canton, Ohio, where he served a year. He took an active part in the formation of the Communist Party,

INTERNATIONAL LABOR DEFENSE SENDS TRIBUTE TO RUTHENBERG

CHICAGO, March 7.—The National Committee of the International Labor Defense, James P. Cannon, executive secretary, has published the following tribute to Comrade Ruthenberg:

"We are profoundly grieved at the untimely death of our comrade and co-worker C. E. Ruthenberg, which is a loss not only to the Communist movement which he led, and to the labor movement in which he spent years of his active life, but to the International Labor Defense, upon the national executive committee of which he served actively since its inception.

"Comrade Ruthenberg was one of the leading defendants in the Michigan Communist trials, arising out of the arrests in 1922. During his trial, Comrade Ruthenberg conducted himself with an honorable firmness which did credit to the movement with which he was associated. He had no fear or regard for the threat of a long term of imprisonment under the Michigan criminal syndicalism law, and remained unevasively true to his principles and the cause of the working class, maintaining the best traditions of revolutionary fighters who are seized and tried by the class enemy.

"The trial in Michigan was not the first trial of Comrade Ruthenberg. His long years of activity in the labor and revolutionary movements had frequently brought him before the capitalist courts. In the period of war hysteria and persecution, his countless opposition to the imperialist slaughter brought upon him a term at hard work in Ohio. In the period after the war, in the course of his work in the formation of the Communist Party, he was again tried and imprisoned in a New York penitentiary. But this continuous persecution only steeled his determination to fight in the class struggle.

"Our tribute to the work of Comrade Ruthenberg, who was one of the pioneers in the creation of a broad non-partisan movement for labor defense, is our determination to prevent the imprisonment of those comrades who are still under charges in the Michigan cases and the many others who are on trial or in prison.

"All honor to this revolutionary fighter who has died in the struggle for working class freedom!

"Our deep sympathy to the comrades and co-workers, and to the family of the departed leader!"

and later, of the Workers (Communist) Party. For his participation in the foundation of the Communist movement, he was sentenced to from five to ten years in Sing Sing prison. At the end of two years he was pardoned by Governor Smith. In 1922 Comrade Ruthenberg was arrested for attending the Michigan convention of the Communist Party and convicted and sentenced to an indeterminate sentence of from five to ten years. At the time of his death his case was pending before the U. S. Supreme Court. Comrade Ruthenberg has been secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party continuously since his release from Sing Sing. He has been editor of several left wing papers, and has written many pamphlets and articles to help guide the workers in their struggle against capitalism.

Comrade Ruthenberg has taken an active part in mobilising the left wing in the trade unions against the employers and the reactionary officialdom. He was an outstanding champion of the organization of the unorganized, amalgamation, and the formation of a labor party. His work in support of a labor party was especially unceasing and of inestimable value. His influence was always used to mobilize the membership of the Workers (Communist) Party and its following in every strike and struggle of the workers, organized and unorganized.

Comrade Ruthenberg must be counted in the very first ranks of the leaders of the American proletariat. His loss can ill be borne by the workers in these days when the leadership of the trade unions and other workers' organisations, forgetting the real purpose of the labor movement, is trying to degenerate them into a means, not for the emancipation of the workers, but for their further enslavement to the capitalists. All his life Comrade Ruthenberg was an inveterate and feared enemy of this clique of misleaders of labor. His best years were spent in combatting them and in teaching the workers the right road to follow for freedom.

The Trade Union Educational League adds its voice to the general mourning over the death of Comrade Ruthenberg. It hails him as a true leader who made a good fight for the working class. It pledges itself to honor his memory by striving harder than ever for the accomplishment of the great goal for which Comrade Ruthenberg spent his life, the abolition of capitalism and the emancipation of the workers.

300,000 Workers Laid Down Their Tools

SHANGHAI, March 7.—The following are details concerning the declaration of the recent general strike in Shanghai:

On the evening of the 18th of February a delegates' meeting of 500 representatives of workers' organizations decided to declare a general strike with the following watchwords: "Continuation of the struggle against imperialism; abolition of the militarist regime; the evacuation of Shanghai by all reactionary troops; the formation of a government representing the interests of the people; free speech, free press, the right to meet and the right to strike; recognition of the trade unions as the representatives of the working class; and, further, a number of economic demands including the 8-hour day, wage increases and a fight against the increase of prices."

On the 19th of February the general strike began according to the arrangement of the Shanghai trades council. The number of participants gradually rose and by the evening it rose above 100,000. The textile and metal workers, the tramway-men, the commercial employes, the printers and the post office workers and a section of the seamen were then striking. The post offices in the foreign quarters were guarded by strike pickets armed with bamboo sticks

Movement Is Growing.

An appeal of the Shanghai trades council declares: "The national revolutionary movement is steadily growing and its influence is increasing. The troops which are advancing northward are winning. The power of the militarist Sun Tchuan Fang is waning. The people must take part in the struggle against the militarists. Therefore the trades council has decided to call a general strike. Order must be preserved, nevertheless, the strike must be maintained until the order to resume work is given. By striking you are supporting the troops which are advancing against the north. You will be supporting the struggle for the destruction of the militarist Sun Tchuan Fang. Long live the national power! Long live the freedom of the people! Long live the power of the workers!"

Revolutionary Slogans.

The committee of Shanghai citizens has issued an appeal to the population with the following watchwords: "Greetings to the expedition against the North. Support the national government! Convening of a national assembly! Establishment of a revolutionary democratic power!"

On the 20th of February the strike spread with great rapidity until in the evening over 300,000 workers were striking. Commercial and industrial life is at a complete standstill. A number of incidents have occurred. On the 19th of February three workers were arrested by the officials of Sun Tchuan Fang for distributing leaflets. They were immediately executed. On the 20th of February mass meetings in the open took place in all parts of the town. Incidents are reported from Chapen and Putung (working class quarters of Shanghai).

The authorities in the foreign quarters are preparing themselves for the coming events and are concentrating armored cars. The police have been supplied with machine guns. Voluntary patrols are being organized. Agitators are being mercilessly pursued and executed immediately after arrest. The heads of the beheaded are exposed in public places as a warning to the populace. In national revolutionary circles it is said that 90 people have been beheaded. The newspapers no longer appear as the workers demanded the publication of details concerning the course of the strike. The editor were not prepared to do this out of fear of Sun Tchuan Fang. The foreigners are erecting barbed wire entanglements several miles away from the foreign settlements. The strike leaders declare that the foreigners have penetrated into Chinese territory and threaten reprisals.

Demands Inquiry Int Church Council Wor'

women of China and teach them the fundamentals of class consciousness. Nothing is more needed in the interior, as I have had occasion to find out recently in my overland trip with the Nationalist government officials across Kiangsi.

"Some people wonder why I should have lectures on sanitation in a political training school. Never mind. I tell them, there is need for this and I propose preparing some women for the task of bringing such lessons to our people, too."

The school which opens here next month will be a mere nucleus for what, it is hoped, will be a very large institution in coming years. The women's movement, Mme. Sun considers, is just beginning in China. If it is started off right, with a sound and scientific background, it should do a great deal to emancipate the women of China from customs and modes of thinking which, to the people of the west, must seem thoroughly archaic.

The women of China, she believes, must get into step with the modern march of the modern-minded men who are leading the Kuomintang.

DRAG GARMENT WORKER OUT OF BED; FRAME-UP

Katz, Tool of Sigman, Arrested Rosenberg

Another frame-up of an innocent worker, by the traitorous officials of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union was revealed when at midnight Friday, Morris Rosenberg of 2700 Bronx Park East, was dragged from his bed and pinned under arrest on the complaint of Louis Katz, who caused the arrest of Aaron Wortuns on Thursday.

Katz charged that Rosenberg was one of the auto full of men who attacked him on February 28th. When he made the complaint against Wortuns on Thursday, just the day before Wortuns was to appear against members of Frenchy's gang who had severely beaten him, Katz declared that altho he was certain that five or six men were in the party that attacked him, Wortuns was the only one he could identify.

Changed His Mind.

By Friday, he declared he could identify another one. Probably his memory will very soon improve so that he can select any other whom the International officials have reason to want to place under arrest.

Morris Rosenberg, who was arrested Friday is one of three workers of the Reisman, Rothmann & Beaver shop who refused to register with the International and were therefore discharged. The shop was called on strike, and has been the scene of many attacks of gangsters upon the pickets.

Katz is also a member of this shop, so of course he could easily identify his fellow-worker Rosenberg.

Rosenberg was arraigned in the Sixth District Court before Judge Flood. He was placed under $2,000 bail and his case comes up for hearing this morning.

THOUSANDS MOURN RUTHENBERG AT THE MEMORIAL MEETING IN CHICAGO

The Ashland Auditorium Cannot Hold Crowds; Workers Pledge Themselves to "Fight On"

By ISRAEL AMTER.
(Special to The DAILY WORKER)

CHICAGO, Ill., March 7.—To the strains of Chopin's Funeral March the body of C. E. Ruthenberg, borne by members of the Political Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party, was carried into Ashland Auditorium yesterday afternoon while over 4,500 stood and wept.

There were more than 2,500 others who were unable to gain admittance to the hall because the police closed the doors.

Max Bedacht, the chairman, spoke of the great loss to the American and the American workers, and the international movement in the death of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg.

He read telegrams from the Communist International, the Red Trade Union International, the Russian Communist Party, the Eleventh Convention of the German Communist Party, the Canadian Communist Party, the Komintang, the Young Communist League of Russia, and the Young Communist International.

Ruthenberg's last words, "Fight on. We will win," sounded the key note of the meeting. Benjamin Gitlow, a member of the Central Committee of the party, characterized Ruthenberg as one of the leaders of the party who had turned the Workers (Communist) Party to the workshops where it is steadily growing in numbers and in power.

"Ruthenberg was a great leader not only of our party," said Gitlow, "but of the whole working class. His determination and the example of his life will serve to consolidate the ranks of the workers, and help them to march forward to victory."

"Party Man," Says Cannon.

James P. Cannon, secretary of the International Labor Defense, described Ruthenberg as a pioneer of the revolutionary movement here, and one of the few Americans who could not be bought by the capitalist class.

"Ruthenberg was a party man," said Cannon. "He gave everything to the party, and showed an example to all around him of what a revolutionary soldier should be."

This idea was also expressed by William Z. Foster, secretary of the Trade Union Educational League, who said, "Ruthenberg was the flesh of the flesh, blood of the blood, and bone of the bone of the Communist Party, and could not be corrupted by the capitalist class.

He Was True Bolshevik.

"He was a true Bolshevik, and we cannot do better than dedicate ourselves to carry out the work to which Ruthenberg devoted his life."

"Ruthenberg was also the leader of the young Communists," said Nat Kaplan, editor of the Young Worker. "During the war, Ruthenberg was the Karl Liebknecht of the American labor movement."

In behalf of tens of thousands of New York's workers, who knew of Ruthenberg's deeds, William W. Weinstone, secretary of District 2, expressed the deepest sorrow at the sudden death of the great leader.

"Ruthenberg was the foremost leader in the left wing of the Socialist Party," said Weinstone; "and it was he who helped to create and form the Communist Party."

The Pioneers Join With Music.

Other speakers at the memorial meeting were Arne Swabeck, Chicago organizer of the party, who spoke of the severity of the loss of Comrade Ruthenberg, and Comrade Fod, who represented the Komintang.

The Pioneer Freiheit Singing Society and the Wankegan Communist Band provided revolutionary music.

The true spirit of the whole memorial was expressed in the closing words of Max Bedacht when he said,

"The only monument to our Comrade Ruthenberg will be the creation of a mass Communist Party in the United States that will lead on to victory."

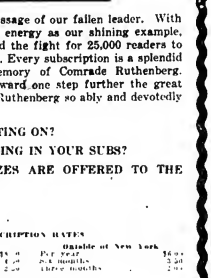
"The Symbol of Our Party."

Jay Lovestone, who was on Saturday chosen acting general secretary of the party following Ruthenberg's death, said of the dead leader

"He was to me the symbol of our party, fighting unceasingly an uphill battle against tremendous odds, against the most brutal, the most powerful imperialism the world has know. * * *

"At the left wing national conference, I vividly recall how it was Comrade Ruthenberg who stood out as the towering revolutionist. He gave out a certain correctness, positiveness and Bolshevist grace and confidence in our deliberations. * * *

"Yes, Comrade Ruthenberg died fighting and working for the victory of the American proletariat and the international working class. * * *



"Come the great steel strike. General Wood is leading the cohorts of richly armed, uniformed strike breakers, American soldiers to crush the ranks of the workers. Comrade Ruthenberg's mighty revolutionary appeal, and the spirit inspired by Foster's government strike breakers," aroused and inspired the thousands of steel workers of Gary to the most valiant resistance displayed in the whole strike. * * *

"Let us close our ranks in this moment of our unfathomable grief. Let us go forward to battle in unbounded confidence to win. Yes, farewell, Comrade Ruthenberg. Farewell our leader."

Lovestone will leave Chicago on Monday with the ashes of C. E. Ruthenberg, and will reach New York on Tuesday.

Resolution on the Death of Comrade Bessie Reisman

With deep sorrow and great pain has the District Executive Committee of the Young Workers (Communist) League of this district received the news that our most devoted, most sincere Comrade Bessie Reisman, passed away on the 22nd of February of this year, after five months of confinement in bed sick with tuberculosis which she has contracted from strenuous work and rotten conditions in the shops.

Comrade Bessie Reisman was one of the first builders of the Young Workers League of this district, and one of its leaders. She was a member of the District Executive Committee, of District Agitprop, of the International press correspondents, of the Pioneer department, of the Jewish sub-committee and held many other positions, including that of Nucleus organizer-secy. She was also very active in the pioneer movement on whose most important committees she served.

The workers of Boston in and outside the Communist movement mourn the death of Comrade Bessie Reisman who will always be remembered as a true fighter, who gave up her life to the cause of the working class, the building of Communism in the United States of America.

NEEDLE WORKERS IN N. Y. DENOUNCE THE INJUNCTION

Joint Board Speakers Hit Sigman's Program

The "capitulist employer" methods now being adopted by the reactionary officials of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union in their attack on the workers, were denounced at two big membership meetings of Locals 2 and 35, which were held in Webster Hall and Manhattan Lyceum.

"Selling in all their attempts to gain the support of the members of our union," said Joseph Bortchowitz speaking at the Local 2 meeting, "the traitors have become desperate and they are resorting to the most despised weapon of the bosses—the injunction.

Secure Injunction.

"In the name of Local 89, the Italian Dressmakers' Local, they have taken out an injunction against all members of the Joint Board and the clerical force. They think in this way they can prevent the Italian workers from paying dues to the Joint Board, and force them to recognize the International. But they will fail. Just as they have failed in every other use of force."

The chairman of Local 2 meeting, I. Steinzor, showed how the "left wing" fight is steadily growing in power.

"In the beginning there were many pessimists," said Steinzor, "but now after 12 weeks, the workers realize that victory for the progressive forces is inevitable.

Fight Among Themselves.

"The reactionary International officials are beginning to fight among themselves for power. The shops which were forced to register with the International are coming to the Joint Board to pay their dues, and the International treasury is emptying fast. They show plainly how weak they are when they must turn for help to the capitalist courts and judges."

A speaker at both Local 2 and Local 35 meetings was Elias Marks, recently deported by the Federal authorities, having "escaped" to Russia. Marks was greeted with enthusiasm, and he told of how he had just returned from "the Crimea," in Russia, U. S. S. R., and from "Siberia" of Denver, Colo. Marks announced that the workers of Denver were ready to respond in a moment to a Joint Board call for pickets, and he urged the cloakmakers of both locals to respond just as promptly, because only with mass picketing can the International gangsters be driven from the shops.

Fight the Injunction Menace!

By I. JESSOME.

ANTI-LABOR injunctions, in one form or another, rose into being with the dawn of labor's class-consciousness. The law of the propertied few sought to stem the tide of revolt of the propertyless mass. In the beginning the ban fell on the right of the workers to organize. But when in the face of all repressive statutes, in the face of persecutions, imprisonments, beheadings, and massacres the trade unions proved by their power that they had come to stay, their legal status became definitely established. Then property, defeated in the first engagement, fell back on another, an astuter line of defense. The strike, labor's principal mode of warfare, must be outlawed! Labor's mighty weapon must be rendered useless! Thus came about the injunction us we know it today.

What an "Injunction" Is.

An injunction, in legal terminology, is a civil writ issued by a judge, restraining a person or group of persons from doing or not doing a particular thing, the doing or not doing of which would cause irreparable damage to another. With one stroke of the pen a judge can annul all the so-called guarentees of liberty and equality by which the civilized nations are prased to distinguish themselves from barbarians. In labor disputes, especially, the injunction is turned into a sword, with the hilt in the hand of capital and the edge drawn against the workers. By their power to issue restraining orders in times of strikes the courts hold sway over the destiny of the workers. An insignificant judge, guided by his personal discretion, and by his class and personal interests, can set himself up as the captain of the workers' fate. By his fiat, the private property rights of a single individual are upheld against the elementary right to live of thousands, hundreds of thousands, of workers.

What "Judges" Are.

When we consider who the gentlemen are that sit in judgment over us, we do not wonder at the brand of justice they dispense. The judges are the hirelings of entrenched capital. They are chosen, not by the people, but by the Law Association. And the Bar Association is but an abbreviated term for the association for the protection of high finance. Who then, but the judges, should be interested in breaking strikes?

In America injunctions have fallen upon fertile soil. Not daring to antagonize the workers by open legislation against trade unions, the bosses have resorted to an insidious back-door law-making against labor's rights. They have depended for support upon the usurped power of the supreme court, a power that is maintained by virtue of an unconstitutional seizure of the right of judicial review. They have brought to their aid the judicial tyranny grown out of the unchecked, venture-long encroachments of judgecraft upon the rights of the American working class. With the courts as arbiters, the bosses are assured of an unfailing ally in their attacks upon the workers. For they write the laws: the anti-labor the judges, claiming to be merely administrators of the law, administer against labor; and where, as a result of the workers' struggles, a statute reads to favor labor, the judges, being reviewers of the law, review against labor.

The Strike Weapon.

The strike is the worker's formidable weapon. All his gains have come to him through strikes or through the capitalists' fear of his power to strike. Not a single progressive statute, not a single alleviation, not a single concession was ever granted to the workers through the generosity of the bosses or their law-givers. In every gain of labor, all through history, final analysis proves this. The driving power behind labor's every gain has always been the power o fthe workers to wrest that gain from their exploiters. The strike is the indispensable tactic of organized labor. It is the life-force of workers in union. To limit strikes is to castrate labor!

What Has Been Done?

What have the American workers done to combat injunctions? Specifically, what has the American Federation of Labor done to combat injunctions? The answer is to be found in the philosophy underlying the general policy of the American Federation of Labor. For decades the A. F. of L. leadership has instilled into the workers a fatalistic acceptance of the present social order. It has taught that the course of the American working class is set into an eternal rotation within the inescapable orbit of capitalism. There is no change, no to-morrow, and hence, no struggle. For the class-war the leaders of the A. F. of L. have substituted worker-employer cooperation. Labor's generals have spiked the guns of labor's army!

No Open Struggle.

This anti-working class, suicidal doctrine is reflected as a matter of course in the attitude of the A. F. of L. to injunctions. Where the class struggle is denied the strike loses its potency, and the resistance to anti-strike injunctions is shorn of strength and zeal. Despite the high-sounding resolutions adopted at its conventions the A. F. of L. has shown, and shows today more than ever, a weak and ineffective front in its policy against injunctions. Being anti-proletarian to the core and governed by capitalist ideas the A. F. of L. leaders do not stir the workers to open resentment against their enemies. They do not call upon them to resist with their united strength the encroachments of the judicial octopus. No, that would be unrespectable, revolutionary. Instead, the leaders indulge in sentimental appeals to the capitalist lawmakers and judges in the name of equality. They stress the claim of "our rights as American citizens", and say not a word about our rights as producers of America's wealth. A cringing, knee-bending policy has taken the place of militant proletarian resistance.

Recent Surrenders.

In recent years, especially, the A. F. of L. leadership has affirmed by a series of very definite actions its class-collaborationist and anti-strike platform. By endorsing the Baltimore and Ohio plan it has openly put its sanction on "Company Unions". By acclaiming the enactment of the Watson-Parker law, which outlaws strikes on the railroads, it has accepted the principle of compulsory arbitration. In promoting labor banking, labor insurance, and similar enterprises it has sought to set up a trade-union capitalism with the vain hope to deproletarianize. And in recommending at its recent convention the re-election of Governor Smith, the man who only a few weeks before, in the strike of the New York Cloakmakers, had earned for himself the title, "Injunction Al", the A. F. of L., in effect, put its seal of approval on injunctions.

What Must Be Done.

Workers must grasp the strike as their indispensable, their most effective weapon. Their immediate program must be to fight for the repeal of existing anti-strike legislation, especially, the Watson-Parker railway law whose continued existence threatens to spread compulsory arbitration to other industries. They must fight for the curbing of the equity powers of the courts. They must fight for legislation eliminating injunctions, police, and soldiery from strike situations.

But reliance on legislation is not enough. Experience has taught the workers that they must rely first and foremost, upon their organizational strength. Two sections of the Clayton Act definitely exempt labor from the restriction of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law. Yet in many instances labor has been subjected to repressive court decisions in flagrant violation of this exemption. Trab by jury granted by the Clayton Act has repeatedly been denied to labor. In direct contraction to the letter and spirit of the Clayton Act state and federal judges have declared labor to be property, have prohibited picketing, have outlawed sympathy strikes and, in the case of the Arizona model law have vetoed legislation which is identical with the pro-labor sections in the Clayton act.

Smash Injunctions.

The lawe favoring labor can be upheld only by the organizational strength of labor. The legal status of the strike will be achieved by the same means that gave the trade-unionists their legal status—the indomitable will of labor. Mass-solidarity of industries will break injunctions. Howatt's miners, Passaic, the New York furriers, the New York cloakmakers, have proved it. The workers broke the legal ban on trade unions by ignoring the legal ban. The workers will bronk the injunctions against strikes by striking against the injunctions.

NEW YORK LABOR RALLIES TO FIGHT INJUNCTION EVIL

Assemble In Albany On March the 8th

A public joint hearing will be given before the Senate General Laws Committee and Assembly Judiciary Committee on Tuesday, March 8, at 2 p. m., on the Lipwiez-Haetenburg bill (S. print 528, A print 303) to regulate the issuing of injunctions in industrial disputes. Union representatives coming here for the hearing will assemble at the Albany Labor Temple at 12:30 noon on March 8 for a conference before going to the hearing at 2 p. m., which will be held in either the senate or assembly chamber.

President John Sullivan of this State Federation and William Collins of the American Federation of Labor have addressed largely attended mass meetings of wage earners in behalf of the bill to regulate issuing of injunctions in three of the largest counties of this state. Officers of the local central labor body presided at each of these meetings, which attracted audiences from all sections of the counties, and the local speakers included Vice-Presidents A. W. Sherman of Syracuse, E. Koveleski of Rochester, and C. F. Conroy of Buffalo. At each of the meetings resolutions were adopted as follows:

"Resolved, that this mass meeting of wage earners under call of the New York State Federation of Labor and the Central Trades and Labor Council, hereby urges the senators and members of assembly from this county to support and vote for the enactment of the Lipwiez-Hackenburg bill herein described; and that copies of this resolution be forwarded to those mentioned members of our state legislature, signed by the officers of this mass meeting, as the unanimous request of the wage-working citizens of this county and vicinity."

The Bill.

The Lipwiez-Haekenburg bill goes into effect at once if passed and provides as follows:

No contract, agreement or combination between two or more persons or groups of persons or between employers and employees concerning the terms or conditions of employment or the assumption, creation, suspension, or termination of any relation between employer and employee or concerning any act or thing with reference to or involved in or growing out of a trade or labor between employer, contemplation or furtherance of a trade or labor dispute between employer and employee whether or not any of the parties stand in the proximate relation to the original relation of employer and employee, or concerning any effort to recommend, advise, induce or persuade any person to work or abstain from work or to become members of a labor union whether such other is under contract with relation thereto or not concerning any effort to induce any person to withhold his patronage from any person, firm or corporation against whom they have a claim or grievance, and nothing done or not done by any such person or groups of persons in pursuance of such contract, agreement or combination shall constitute or be deemed to constitute a conspiracy of any criminal offense or be punished or prosecuted as such unless the act or thing agreed to be done or not to be done constitutes acts of physical violence or threats of physical violence in order to show such contract, agreement or combination and any and all actions and things hereinbefore set forth do consider or hold unlawful; in order to show any restraining order or injunction be issued with relation thereto or for any cause arising therefrom. Nothing in this section shall exempt from punishment, otherwise than as herein accepted, any person guilty of conspiracy for which punishment is now provided by law, but any such law shall as to the agreements, contracts and combinations and acts therein mentioned referred to, be considered as if this section were therein contained.

Spying and Blackmail—The Weapons of the Right Wing

The Green-Woll-Tammany-Sigman combination in two recent efforts to smash the rank and file revolt led by the left wing has shown that it has learned well from the spies and gangster elements with which it has been consorting.

First, it applies for and receives a temporary injunction against the New York Joint Board through an application which reeds like the indictments drawn up by the department of justice experts against wartime radicals. The right wing has made a deeper unity with the government agencies and bosses.

Second, and this reaches the lowermost depths of stool-pigeonism, agents of the Sigman forces have approached imprisoned needle trades workers and offered them their liberty if they would turn state's evidence against the New York Joint Board.

We have no words to describe adequately actions of this character and in addition there is just as much sense in arguing with a jackal as there is in merely using abusive terms for recording deeds of this nature. It is enough to say that the right wing leaders have shown themselves to be politically and morally bankrupt and that nothing can be expected from them except words and deeds which outrage every point of the working class code of ethics.

We have already viewed the spectacle of the official representative of the American Federation of Labor appearing as the chief witness for the prosecution in cases of workers arrested for picketing. The attempt to blackmail and intimidate class war prisoners is of the same character.

Every day brings additional proof that the left wing in the trade unions is fighting against forces so corrupt that they are poisoning the whole labor movement, forces that are doing the dirty work for the bosses and the government formerly done by private detective agencies and department of justice agents.

To support the left wing in this struggle is the plain duty of every worker who is for trade unions free from boss control.

International Women's Day

The DAILY WORKER, on International Women's Day, greets the host of women who are carrying on the class struggle against difficulties which the development of capitalist society has made more for them than for their husbands, fathers and brothers.

The first task of the women of our party, the most conscious section of the working class women in America, is to interest, organize and bring into the trade unions, housewives' leagues, trade union auxiliaries and other working class organizations, the women of the masses who as yet take little part in the struggles of the workers.

In the United States where the women of the working class are still susceptible to the propaganda of the ruling class agencies and as a whole take but little part in the labor and revolutionary movement, careful but energetic Communist work among them is doubly necessary.

International Women's Day should mark the beginning of a new period of fruitful activity in this important field.

No better example of the concrete application of the Communist program for women can be had than the freeing of women by the Russian revolution. This and the advance of women in revolutionary China should be brought to the attention of American working women on International Women's Day to show them that freedom for women, as for men, comes only through struggle against and the overthrow of the world power of imperialism.

De Valera and Irish Freedom

Mr. Eamon De Valera, president of a faction of the once powerful Sinn Fein party of Ireland, arrived here last Saturday to testify in a suit between the Free State government and Irish republicans over the goodly sum of $2,500,000 which was contributed to the republican cause by Irish republican sympathizers, but which miraculously escaped being spent before a gang of petty bourgeois traitors signed a shameful treaty with England which brought the Free State into existence. The Free State is a puppet of the British government and is about as free from British rule as Cuba is from American domination.

Mr. De Valera was greeted at the dock by a horde of lawyers, priests and politicians. He rode up Broadway at the head of a procession and was photographed shaking hands with Mayor "Jimmy" Walker, who knows that more votes can sometimes be made with a clasp of the hand than with a thousand wags of the tongue.

As Mr. De Valera gallantly stood before the cameras and the beaming eyes of stalwart and friendly members of the Bomb Squad, he might have allowed his memory to step back a few years to the time when he arrived here during the Black and Tan war. The mayor's office was not then so friendly. The occupant left by a fire escape lest he might offend the British government by receiving De Valera and lest he might offend the Irish voters by refusing to receive him. Nothing has changed since then except the situation in Ireland and De Valera. At that time the exigencies of politics forced Mr. De Valera to be a "revolutionist." Today, he is the mildest of parliamentarians because a sufficient body of middle class opinion in Ireland favors such a course and De Valera is also obedient to the middle class will as a eunuch is to the Bey of Algiers.

Mr. De Valera refuses to enter the Irish parliament in Dublin because of the onth of allegiance requirement. Can anybody imagine James Connolly, a real revolutionist, refusing to take a seat in parliament for the same reason? Connolly would have broken an oath taken under duress with as much alacrity as he would crack King George's neck. Connolly would have entered parliament to sound the message of revolt to the four corners of Ireland. De Valera trims, evades, dodges and refuses to say what policy he has in mind that would benefit the Irish masses. He strains at the Free State gnat and swallows the capitalist camel. He promises to "free Ireland politically and restore her economically." He does not say how. The Tammany Hall politicians will ask no foolish questions. Neither will the priests who feed on the faithful. Neither will the lawyers who are fishing for publicity and fat fees.

The Irish workers are asking questions and they are demanding answers. They will not be satisfied with phrases about national freedom redolent with fascist implications. They want something concrete, something that can be interpreted in terms of food, clothing and shelter and freedom from exploitation whether native or foreign. The Irish workers will look more to the martyred James Connolly as years go by than to living careerists. The Irish workers will and must organize a revolutionary party of their own that will emancipate them. They will not court the favor of Tammany Hall or the American oil baron Doheny, but they will make common cause with the working class of the world and with the Soviet Union, the Chinese, Hindoos, Egyptians, Filipinos, Mexicans and Nicaraguans who are struggling to burst the shackles that chain them to the chariot of empire.

A leader of a genuine Irish republican movement would not be met at the dock by representatives of Tammany Hall. The name of the notorious Judge Rosalsky would not be found on his reception committee. Generous pocketbooks would not provide him with a suite in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. In all probability agents of American imperialism would scan the coast for his arrival and if he succeeded in sneaking in, the Bomb Squad would be available with clubs poised and revolvers drawn and the Rosalskys would be on hand to see that he shared a one room suite with a burglar in a jail.

Irish workers in America should realize by now that capitalist politicians, democrat and republican, are not interested in seeing the Irish workers free. They are interested in votes and De Valera is valuable to them for this reason. The DAILY WORKER is for Irish independence now as it always has been but it warns the Irish workers in the United States that independence will not be attained thru an alliance with Tammany Hall or any other political hold-up association.

THIS column has suffered many mishaps since it first saw the light of day in The DAILY WORKER, but as far as I can recollect, last Saturday was the first time it vanished into space after kidding the readers along for three paragraphs and a half "light stuff" allbied the make-up man. "Winged words," said somebody else. It appeared in all its glory in the National Edition but showed up like a battered hulk in the City Edition. As the missive was written especially for the benefit of New York here is what you missed last Saturday:

Mr. DeValera, president of a faction of Irish republicans that broke with the official body over questions of tactics, is here. DeValera would participate in the English parliament provided he was not forced to swallow the oath of allegiance to Great Britain. The opposing faction considers the parliament unclean. Both factions are busily engaged straining at a gnat, while their stomachs bulge with pontical camel. A republicanist would swallow a dozen oaths without the slightest compunction and break them before they had a chance to pass Adam's apple.

The fact is that the DeValera wing and the opposition faction of the former republican party of Ireland are not revolutionists. They are confining their activities to mouthing against the Free State government, and completely ignoring the needs of the workers and peasants as well as the anti-imperialist movement on a world scale that is sapping the foundations on which the British empire is built. A revolutionary nationalist movement in Ireland would hail the Chinese struggle, it would support Mexico and Nicaragua against American imperialism and it would make common cause with the oppressed victims of international capital the world over. The Irish nationalist movement is doing nothing of the kind. It is too busy crawthumping and sneezing whenever the pope takes snuff. In fact DeValera organs in the United States are villifying Mexico and boosting the Doheny oil interests.

No Irish revolutionary leadership that is under the influence of Rome can ever hope to lead the Irish masses to victory. There are people who doubt the wisdom of dwelling on this theme. They think it would be "wiser" to leave the religious question alone. For that matter it would be "wiser" to leave everything alone and join Tammany Hall, get a job in the health department and spend a happy lifetime making out a few burial permits a day. But progress is only made over the dead bodies of superstitious and false theories. Some people must be jolted out of their dogmatic dugouts, perhaps a few are wheedled.

Mr. DeValera comes to the United States to testify at a hearing where a few million dollars subscribed to the republican cause by Irish workers in America are in litigation between the Free State government and the republicanm movement. Mr. DeValera will also raise money to conduct election campaigns in Ireland. And among the members of the committee picked by Irish societies to welcome Mr. DeValera we find the malodorous Judge Rosalsky, who earned the hatred of labor in the United States by the way savage sentences were imposed by him on striking furriers. Freedom for Ireland with the aid of a scabby judge!

And Judge Rosalsky is hardly less notorious than Mr. Martin Conboy, another member of the reception committee who was chairman of the New York draft board during the war and who sent several young Irish republicans to jail for insisting on burning their names on the registration blanks as citizens of the Irish Republic rather than as British subjects. Mr. Conboy did not believe there was such a thing as an Irish republic then, but now he will have the honor of having his automobile accepted to lug the then president of the Irish Republic around the city. If the thinking machinery of the Irish workers in America has not stopped clicking they should apply to Mr. DeValera the criterion of conduct which judges a man by the company he keeps.

The Manager's Corner

WOMEN HERE AND OVER THERE.

From Soviet Russia comes the news that women are winning new prominence in the field of governmental affairs. Comrade Zeitlin is the prosecuting attorney of the Moscow High Court. Lily Telemann, 24 years of age, designed the Soviet's first successful airplane engine, which the Red Army is adopting for light planes. This week Gorovaja Shalton granted a diploma to the first woman marine architect.

Soviet Russia has established the following rules regarding women in industry: the prohibition of night work, and overtime, motherhood protection and care, and exemption from taxation.

In America we find on the contrary that while women are praised by Fourth of July orators as the "salt of the earth" and the "foundation of the republic," these words of flattery are simply a cup thrown to them in order to keep them from protesting against their conditions. America gives women flattery and a 54-hour week, soft words and starvation wages.

The DAILY WORKER has enlisted itself in the cause of the women workers, for the organization of the unorganized women workers, for the passage of social legislation for women in industry and the home, for the removal of all discrimination against women workers, for the establishment of the same basis of equality in society for women workers which is found in but one country today, that is Soviet Russia.

The DAILY WORKER has thus won itself the staunchest loyalty and devotion of women throughout the country. Sarah Victor, Lena Rosenberg, Elsie Pultur are but a few of the active women who have recognized the power of The DAILY WORKER in the struggle for the emancipation of women and the emancipation of the working class as a whole. An army of active and militant working class women, following in their lead will give a great impetus to this movement.

BREAKING CHAINS NOT ALLOWED IN CLEVELAND, OHIO

American Legion Steps Out as Censor

(Special To The Daily Worker).

CLEVELAND, March 7.—"Breaking Chains," which was scheduled for showing in Cleveland on Wednesday and Thursday nights, March 2 and 3, although it had a successful showing Wednesday night, was barred from further showings through actions of protest on the part of Captain Harold H. Burton, chairman of the (Cuyahoga) County Council of the American Legion, and Doctor Nathaniel Jones, chairman of the Cuyahoga County National Defense Committee.

These two gentlemen wired their objections to Vernon M. Riegel, Director of the department of education, Division of Film Censorship in Columbus, to which Riegel replied: "Breaking Chains passed by censor board. Am recalling it for personal inspection."

A Packed House

In this manner we were prohibited from showing the film on Thursday night to a packed house, many of those who came stated that their reasons for coming were because of the criticism which appeared in the Plain Dealer on Thursday morning. The criticism, however, which appeared in this sheet, and the subsequent stopping of the film, have served as the lever of release for numerous protests from prominent individuals in this city, who have wired and written letters to the governor of Ohio, condemning the action of Mr. Riegel. More than that they have caused even the local newspapers, aside from the Plain Dealer, to carry stories condemning the action of the state censors.

The local organization of the International Workers Aid is taking steps for having a reinspection of the film and another showing on Wednesday night, March 9, at the Duchess Theatre in which the original showing was held. There will be two showings, the first at 7:00 p. m. and the second beginning at 9 o'clock.

DRAMA

IT'S "SO RUSSIAN"

"The Brothers Karamazov" at the Theatre Guild is Also "So Artistic!"

Reviewed by HARBOR ALLEN.

"The Brothers Karamazov" is the sort of production the Theatre Guild thrives on. As it groans itself out on the stage it reveals the virtues and the flaws of the usual Theatre Guild production.

The prime Theatre Guild virtue is acting. The program bristles with stars. Pat Alfred Lunt, Dudley Digges, Clare Eames, Lynn Fontanne, Edward G. Robinson, Henry Travers, and Philip Loeb in any play, no matter how shoddy, and they will make it quiver with a semblance of life. They give "The Brothers Karamazov" a superficial brilliance. If you sit back in your comfortable Guild seat, drop into the reverence with which the usual Theatre Guild playgoer tiptoes into this Fifty-second Street palace of the arts, and listen with the top of your mind, you can almost imagine you are hearing something great. But little by little you begin to realize that this dramatic tiger is only a tiger's skin. It's the actors under it who make it move and roar and gnash its teeth. The skin itself has no more life than a rug. You can make even a dead frog hop if you run enough electric juice through it.

Help successfully this play by Jacques Copeau and Jean Croue shaves Dostoevsky's novel down for the stage I don't know. I never read the novel. But I do know: as a play it is a dead frog. It moans and sniffles and rants and goes insane over the Russia that is supposed to have been the Russia of Nietzschean supermen, of inscrutable Tartar souls yearning for what-not, of bad women redeeming themselves by suffering and good women suffering without redemption; of idiots and lechers and monks, all in a frenzy over whether there's a hell, a God, and immortality for the soul. Everybody goes mad or commits murder or suicide or is last seen trudging the rocky road to Siberia. Personally I didn't get what it was all about. I don't believe any of the cast did, either.

"Doesn't this bore you stiff?" I asked the lady from Chicago.

"Oh, but it's so artistic," she replied. "And an Russian."

In her answer lies much of the secret of the Guild's success. Nobody before in the theatre has sold the humbombe of "art" and "European drama" to bourgeois school teachers, clubwomen, culture hounds, and dilletantes on such a grand scale. Almost everything the Guild produces is either "so artistic," or "So Russian," or "so German," or "so French," that there is nothing you can do but praise it. Unless, of course, you want to shmw how crude you are, how poor your taste. The Guild shrewdly knows that above all its dilletante audience and its New York sophisticates shudder at the bogey of "poor taste." From its fifty foyer to its free cigarettes and the girl with the affected voice who peddles subscriptions during the intermission, the Guild is working "good and" overtime. It brings in the mazuma.

Woman As a Factor in The Trade Union Movement

By ROSE WORTIS

IT is but a comparatively short time since the general opinion prevailed that "woman's place is in the home" and if she did enter the field of industry it was but a temporary state until she secured a man to provide for her. Therefore the problem of organizing women workers was considered a hopeless task and was totally neglected by the labor movement.

The extension of industry, the improvement of machinery and the simplification of the methods of production, however, forced an ever greater number of women into industrial occupations and sooner or later the attention of the labor movement had to be turned to the question of organizing women.

The 1909 Strike.

The strike of the waist and dressmakers of ... as the first open mass revolt, ... first successful organized attempt on the part of women in New York to assert their rights as workers, and sounded the signal for the organization of women not only in the needle trades but in the general labor movement. The strike of the waist and dressmakers completely shattered the false ideas of the impossibility of organizing women. It was a brilliant manifestation of class-consciousness and marked the beginning of women as a factor in the trade union movement.

Without an organization or organizational experience, without any funds at their disposal, thousands of girls (but strangers in this country) came out in open revolt against the unbearable sweat shop conditions in the waist and dress industry. For over three months the waistmakers gave battle to their employers, the police and hired thugs. Innumerable were the sacrifices, unsurmountable were the difficulties under which the waistmakers conducted their strike.

With shoes and clothing in shreds these pioneers in the cause of labor spent night and day on the picket line in the bitter cold fighting for their rights to organize a union that would raise them from the status of slaves to that of human beings. These sacrifices were not in vain. After weeks of the most bitter and determined struggle, which aroused the admiration of the entire labor movement and will remain a testimonial to the fighting spirit of woman workers, the waist and dress makers emerged victorious.

Union Born in Struggle.

The union was born in struggle and during the eighteen years of its existence retained its militancy and, remained true to its traditions. The strike of the waistmakers was an event of great importance to the labor movement not only because it marked the beginning of the organization of the needle trade workers and broke down the prejudice against women, but mainly because it revealed what a constructive force women could be in the labor movement and the great contribution they would make to the growth and development of the movement.

Contrary to the generally accepted theory about the conservatism of women, the waist and dressmakers' union, of which the majority are women, was always in the front ranks of the progressive labor movement, the first to lend ear to new ideas and organizational reforms. The waistmakers' union was the first to extend its activities beyond the narrow limits of the struggle for immediate economic improvements, it introduced the ideal of labor education under the supervision of trade unions and was the first to begin the propaganda for the shop delegate system of rank and file control, and for that reason it has been the target for attack on the part of the reactionary forces in the American labor movement.

Women Revolt Against Corruption.

True to its militant traditions the waist and dress-makers' union was the first to raise the banner of revolt against the corrupt leadership in the needle trade unions when the latter abandoned the policy of militant struggle in favor of a policy of "hearty cooperation with the employers".

The dressmakers played a leading role in the internal struggle of the I. L. G. W. U. in 1926 when for a period of four months they kept vigil at their headquarters day and night, under most difficult circumstances, in order to prevent these headquarters from being captured by the Sigman machine, then at war with the membership.

The dressmakers distinguished themselves by offering the most stubborn resistance both against the employers as well as the reactionary officials, and are today playing a prominent role in the present struggle going on in their union. By the admission of Sigman himself the dressmakers are a hard nut to crack. The woman have braved all dangers in order to save their union from the domination of the Sigman clique which has made common cause with the bosses to destroy the union built by the struggle and sacrifice.

Women in Other Industries.

What is true of the women dressmakers is equally true of the millinery workers. For years the reactionary officials of that union maintained that the women could not be organized; but thru the patient efforts of a few energetic women a splendid local has ben organized in New York and another local is in the process of being organized in Chicago.

The role of the women in the textile strikes and particularly in the recent strike of Passaic has completely dispelled the old idea that women's role in society and has demonstrated women's ability as a fighter in the cause of labor. It was the simple, unpolished women, mothers of families, who gave battle to the textile barons of Passaic and forced some of them for the first time in the history of the textile industry to recognize the right of workers to organize themselves into trade unions. It was these horny daughters of toil that roused the attention of the entire country to the shameful conditions prevailing in the mills of Passaic. With their babes in arms, they braved the cossacks with their bare breasts on the picket line. Misery and starvation had brought these women together and taught them the lesson of class solidarity.

The heroic deeds of the women in the mining districts in support of their men strikers are a great tribute to the courage and spirit of defiance of these women, to a lesser degree than the Passaic women.

Need For Militant Women.

The activities of the women in the recent bookmaker's strike in New York and the strike of the laundry workers are additional proof that woman have become a prominent factor in industry and, as such, are beginning to assume their proper place in the trade union movement. They have demonstrated that not only are they able to fight on the picket line but they have also shown ability along the lines of administrative work. The labor movement of America today, which has been dragged into the mire of petty politics and is under the domination of a corrupt and self-seeking leadership more closely allied to and concerned about the employing class and its interests than the interests of the workers whom they are supposed to represent, is in great need of the active participation of women. It is in need of the sincerity, devotion, fearlessness and spirit of self-sacrifice which is so characteristic of working class women and women active in the trade union movement in particular.

The trade union movement offers a broad field for social activity for women which will be of great advantage to them and to the labor movement in general. Every women worker who has the opportunity to assert herself as a factor in the trade union movement should not fail to take advantage of it.

Greetings from Krupskaya and Clara Zetkin

MOSCOW, USSR, KRUPSKAYA: "Speaking at meetings of our working women, I express conviction that no matter what may be the peculiar American conditions, the Workers (Communist) Party of America will be able to rally under its banner the widest masses of toiling women of that country and together with them the proletariat of all countries achieve victory over the world." "Accept my communist greetings on International Women's Day."

Signed, KRUPSKAYA

CLARA ZETKIN: "Your March eighth meetings must mobilize wide masses of working and exploited women who together with their children are more defenseless victims of greedy capitalism in United States than in other countries despite formal sex equality. Women masses must help revive glory, old liberation struggles for national independence and equal rights for all human beings.

Demonstrate openly your sympathy with the only state in the world where under workers dictatorship, and through construction of socialism complete sex equality and liberty become a reality—Soviet Union the greatest peace and liberty state of our epoch. Demonstrate openly your sympathy with the Chinese Revolution. Onward to struggle against hypocrisy which combines liberty and fraternity propaganda with barbarous and cruel deeds against negroes. Onward to struggle against American imperialism which tries to deceive despoiled and enslaved masses, sings hymns of peace whilst they are crushing the Philippines under its iron heel, sending cruisers to China and Nicaragua, carrying on a policy of violence in Mexico and Central America and has its greedy hands wherever its domination and billionaires' profits are at stake.

Onward to the International Red United Front.

Signed,
CLARA ZETKIN

Freeing the Women

By N. LENIN.

CLARA ZETKIN

TAKE the position of women. No democratic party in the most advanced bourgeois republic in the world has done in ten years the hundredth part of what we accomplished in this matter in the first year after seizing power.

We have, literally, left not one stone standing upon another of the edifice of degrading laws which denied rights to women, which okaced formidable obstacles in the way of divorce, which penalized children born out of wedlock, etc. Such laws are still, to the shame of the bourgeoisie and of capitalism, very numerous in all civilized countries. We are entitled to feel somewhat proud of what we have accomplished in this respect.

Woman, however, remains a house slave, as she was before the oppressive laws were repealed. She is still engrossed in and stultified by the petty details, of household management; she is still chained to the household and engaged in the same unproductive and nerve-destroying labor. The real emancipation of women, real Communism, can only begin when the proletariat, at the helm of the state, leads the fight of the masses against the system of small housekeeping—can only begin with the transformation to Socialist large-scale economy.

People's restaurants, creches, kindergertens—these are the modest beginnings of a process which, when fully developed, will emancipate women and remove sex inequalities . . .

These means are not new. They are—as indeed are all the essential conceptions of Socialism—created by a highly developed capitalism. But in capitalist states they remain either commercial undertakings, with all the inevitable accompaniments of speculation, profit-snatching, fraud, and falsehood, or else the "offspring" of bourgeois philanthropy," rightly despised by the better kind of workers.

There is no doubt that we shall have more institutions of this kind, and that they are about to change their character. Woman of the working and peasant classes show a considerable amount of organizing talent. They have the ability to carry out successfully schemes of the utmost importance and that without a great display of oratory, without the quarreling and idle talk about plans, systems, etc.—those eternal weaknesses of the intellectuals and of the half-baked "Communists".

Our press does not concern itself sufficiently with questions affecting the welfare of the people. It does not discuss fully enough how best to establish 'peoples' restaurants and creches, it does not dwell with sufficient emphasis on the fact that the saving of labor which naturally results from communal effort and sanitary improvements not only conduces to the comfort of the people, but frees woman from much of her present drudgery.

MILITANT HOUSEWIVES SEND GREETINGS TO WORKING WOMEN THE WORLD OVER

On this, International Women's Day, March 8, 1927, we sent greetings to our sisters, the working women the world over, and our liberated sisters in the Soviet Union.

We pledge ourselves with determination to continue to mobilize and educate the working women for the class struggle.

UNITED COUNCIL OF WORKING CLASS HOUSEWIVES.

Women and the International Class Struggle

By MARGARET COWL.

THIS year on the 8th of March, proletarian women of all lands, are celebrating International Women's Day as a sign of the awakening consciousness of women, that it is necessary to have international unity of all workers in order to successfully combat the highly developed imperialism of all capitalist countries.

Women's Day is Historic.

Since the Socialist Congress at Copenhagen in 1910, where International Woman's Day was instituted, each year thousands of women make stronger their demands for political rights and the protection of their lives in home and factory. When the shadow of the world war was looming in 1914 countless numbers of women demonstrated against war all over Europe on March 8th of that year. In 1917 only the Russian women dared to celebrate March 8th as then they went out on the streets demanding bread and peace.

The Socialist International and Women's Day.

All revolutionary demands including the demands and methods for the politization of working women were dropped from the program of the Second (Socialist) International during the world war only. Ten years after at the International Women's Conference in Hamburg in 1923, (both Socialist) and later in Marseilles in 1925 did the Socialists re-introduce the celebration of International Women's Day. Today, the Socialists are maneuvaring to keep working women from engaging in the class struggle and especially of going over to Communism. The organization of an International Woman's Committee in the Amsterdam Trade Union Federation and the slogan of "War against war . . . regardless from which side it comes," are indicative of this policy.

Famialat Organizations.

The growing acuteness of the class struggles and the entering of the workers generally into political activity, has changed the attitude of the bourgeoisie towards women. Since it is impossible to keep women away from activity, the capitalists decided to capture and misuse the proletarian women in the interests of themselves. By this they also keep working women away from their own (working) class interests. Hence tha formation of many feminist organizations under the direction of bourgeois women.

In England, the Women's Guild of the Empire, just before the general strike, mobilized bourgeois women and miners' wives to demonstrate for "economic peace." In the United States, besides the hundreds of feminist organizations (many of which are listed in the report of the Women's Industrial Conference held in Washington), the chief women's political expression is the American Women's Party. The Woman's Party is one of the main opponents to the 48-hour bill for working women. To justify its opposition to this bill, it throws out the blind that a 48-hour law for women would place woman on an unequal footing with men.

One of the latest features in this country is the organization of railroad workers wives' clubs by the women of the middle and capitalist.

Women—Unskilled Workers.

In recent months we learned the enormous profits made for the year by the employing class. These profits were skimmed mostly from the labor of unskilled workers. The majority of the more than 8,000,000 women engaged in the American industries are unskilled workers according to the report of the Women's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor. Only about two per cent of these women are organized into the trade unions. This unorganized condition of women workers means long hours, low wages and either parasitical dependence on members of her family or prostitution. This unorganized army of women workers, is a source used by the bosses to undercut the better standard of living wrought out from the bosses by the organized workers.

The Housewife.

The wife of the worker is a housekeeper. She is an influence upon the life of the husband, and indirectly plays an important role in the class struggle. In weening complaining woman will drive her husband to accept the worst kind of conditions from the boss. But the woman who realizes that it is also her fight is a source of strength and courage to her husband.

The Communist International and Women.

Since its inception, the Communist International has recognized that without the participation of the masses of women in the revolutionary class struggle, the proletariat cannot attain victories. It has always pressed forward the importance of International Women's Day.

The Communist International declares to all women that for the working woman who is doubly enslaved, there can be no solution of her problems by means of reformist, pacifist or feminist movements. Only by participating actively in the struggles of her class can she ever achieve emancipation.

Women who represent one half of humanity, suffer trebly under the class rule of the employers. It would seem that there is every reason for them to march at the head of the liberation movement of the working class.

Only by becoming active co-workers in every struggle undertaken by the working class can the women have any hope of bettering their lives.

The complete emancipation of women can be achieved only by abolishing this capitalist society by common action of both men and women and establishing a workers' government.

The task of the Communist women is to lead in the work of conveying to working women this message of the Communist International.

Ruthenberg Told How The Socialist Parties Failed In Face of World War

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

WITH the development of the young Communist movement in the United States, following the war and the triumphant workers' revolution in Russia, the American capitalist class beheld Communism, not alone as a spectre that haunted it night and day, but as a flesh and blood foe to be bitterly fought and overcome.

This became very apparent in the numerous "red" raids that have confused sporadically up to the present time in different sections of the country. It also manifested itself in the vicious prosecutions launched against Communists who had been arrested.

But as he was one of the first to suffer in the socialist party as a result of the war attacks by the government on this organization, so C. E. Ruthenberg is also in the forefront of those to receive the first fires from the capitalist state in its attack against the Communist Party, first inaugurated as a war on the left wing in the socialist party, the left wing that organized the forces of Communism into an American section of the Communist International.

It was at the trial of Comrade Ruthenberg in New York City that capitalist justice glaringly revealed its class nature. Judge Barton S. Weeks arrogated to himself all the powers of court, jury and prosecutor. In this he had an eager ally in the prosecutor himself, Assistant District Attorney Alexander I. Rorke. When Ruthenberg was on the witness stand they both conducted a double-barrelled attack against him. This can clearly be seen through the re-reading of the court testimony by those who were not fortunate enough to have been present at the trial itself.

These judicial lackeys of the enemy capitalist class were especially anxious to bring out that Ruthenberg was in favor of invoking civil war to overthrow the present American government, not when the time would be deemed propitious, but during the late world war and the period immediately following to which the indictment applied.

The district attorney carefully led up to his point by going over the history of the development of the First and Second International. He based his main attack on the anti-war manifesto of the special anti-war congress of the Second (Socialist) International. This declaration against war and militarism was considered a socialist classic at the time. It remained a paper document, however, being grossly betrayed with the breaking out of the war, when every European socialist party, with the exception of the Italian, gave its support to the imperialist struggle.

But the capitalist prosecutor in New York City was not interested in how the European socialist parties really acted in the face of the war, but how Ruthenberg thought they should have acted.

Thus the prosecutor declared, "What we are interested in is the manner in which the socialist parties of the various countries were to act against the war. What was the act against the war that the socialists failed to carry out when war was declared?"

And the judge chimed in with, "What acts were not taken by the socialists that he (Ruthenberg) understands were required by the Second International agreement (at Basle)?"

Ruthenberg carefully explained that opposition to the war might take various forms, it might take the form of demonstrations, it might develop into the action taken by the British Council of Action, when Great Britain threatened to attack the Soviet Union."

"What action," demanded the court.

Ruthenberg answered, "The Council of Action threatened a general strike if England declared war on Russia. Such action, I believe, was required by the Basle resolution against any government that entered an imperialist war."

Court and prosecutor then began applying the general strike theory to the United States.

"Let me see if I understand you," said Judge Weeks. "You mean that compliance with the Basle resolution would require a declaration of a general strike in the United States after the declaration of war by the United States?"

Ruthenberg answered, "If there was an organization of sufficient strength and power to call a general strike, yes."

Then the prosecutor, Rorke, took up the questioning as follows:

"Q. The Basle resolution spoke about the desirability of civil war in the event that the nations went to war, didn't it? A. I do not think those are the words of the Basle resolution. It states that the imperialist war should be turned into a civil war.

"Q. Should be turned into civil war? A. Into a civil war.

"Q. You mean by that, that if the governments go to war, one with another, that the proletariat should take advantage of the situation, and change it into a civil war in the country, so that the proletariat might succeed in conquering the government? A. My view of that statement is that if it required any action on the part of the organized workers in opposition to the war, to the extent of overthrowing the existing government and establishing a working class government in its place, in order to stop the war—

"Q. And is what I stated one of the acts—

"The Court: And if necessary to accomplish that, by a civil revolution?

"The Witness (Ruthenberg): If the conditions were such that the proletarian strength and the development of the situation in any particular country made that possible, as it happened in Russia through the breakdown of the existing government, THEN THE BASLE RESOLUTION REQUIRED SUCH ACTION.

"Q. If the capitalist forces are strong enough to do it, you believe the Basle resolution requires them to do it, is that it? A. The Basle resolution requires the working class to use all its power to end the capitalist war, the imperialist war, yes.

"Q. As part of its power, if it was strong enough to bring on a civil war, to remove the government? A. If it was necessary to overthrow the existing government and set up a working class state in its place.

"Q. Did you believe it was necessary to overthrow the existing government by those means?

believe that the overthrow of any government can be brought about by anyone saging or planning that it should be done at a certain time. I believe that all capitalist governments will be overthrown by the development of the social and industrial conditions in each country, which will bring the breakdown of the existing system, and with it the government, and that at such time a working class state will replace the government."

It was to help build a Communist Party to strike at the proper time for working class victory, that Ruthenberg gave all of his strength and energy, of body and brain. His examination by the judge and prosecutor in the New York court room with his clear answers, is proof of the correctness with which he saw the struggle ahead.

Woman Fighters in Hamburg

DURING the great strike of August, 1923, which began about the downfall of the Cuno government, the women of Hamburg proved that they are not a hindrance to their men, but steady spur them on. Outside the great docks they did most of the picketing, forming a living chain, hand to hand, closing all road to the docks. They would not let their husbands, sons or others be sweated any longer for miserable wages scarcely exceeding tips.

Woman's Appeal Decisive.

Those of the dockers who had not made up their minds were decided by this. And when the strikers, gathered in great mass meetings outside the docks, it was the women who led them in one vast demonstration through the town. "Better die fighting than suffer famine for the sake of Stinnes and Co.," the women shouted to the mep.

And it was not "mere words." When the "Socials Democrat" police chief ordered the police to fire on the strikers, it was the women who, fighting bravely in the front ranks against the hired murderers of the working class, spurred on their comrades to greater efforts.

The Second Great Struggle.

Then, two months later, came the greater struggle. In the early morning of October 23, the working class districts of Hamburg became a battlefield. Thirteen police stations were taken by surprise and stormed at the same moment.

The news spread like lightning. The capitalists, all ensemble, hurriedly mobilized their mercenaries. But the attack of the militarists did not fare so well. The workers' defenses like and thrown at a rock. The machine guns and armored cars of the reactionaries failed. Unbelievable devotion and self-sacrifice was shown by the workers in the fighting and the deeds of the women were heroic.

Already in the early morning at the erection of the barricades the women had been helping busily. Pale, half starved, delicate-looking girls and women were carrying great loge of wood and large stones, tearin up the street pavements to form barricades, and digging trenches. The sight of their work was natural encouragement and gave such a feelin of strength that super-human things were done; barricades seemed positively to spring out of the ground.

Invaluable Services.

Women took an active part in all phases of the struggle; certain tasks could only be done by them. Smuggling arms and ammunition through the police outposts, line acting as couriers, "scouting" — these they alone could do.

Their great capacity for organization was shown in the way the fighting ranks of workers were supplied with food; feeding committees sprang up spontaneously, regulating according to a detailed plan the cooking and distributing of food.

The women who did all this were not all or mainly Communists; many of them had hitherto despised the "wicked agitators." They were women of the working class. . . .

Organize The Women Workers!

FROM the New Jersey Commissional Report, pp. 226.—"We never employ men when we can get women who can do their work just as well." The writer of these lines witnessed not long ago many cases in New England states where the men cannot find work and depenus economically upon his female relatives.

For the past five years the number of women in industry increased by twenty-five per rent. At present there are 11,000,000 women employed in various industries in the U. S. I do not believe that it is necessary to explain why they go into industry. It is clearly understood that a woman is not interested in a career as is the middle class feminist, but the starvation wages of the male force her into industry. The bosses love to see the weaker muscles slaving for him, not only because her wages are less than those of the male, but also she is a less fault-finding and is less likely to be the cause of strikes.

The oppressor is taking the full advantage of the backwardness of development of women, for which he is to blame. In the earliest primitive society there were no classes. The women of that time were on equal plane with the men. The birth of private property with its most unbearable system of exploitation, forced the women into a position of being exploited both in the home and in the industrial world. The woman became a double slave. Pages of literature were written, special religious laws created, which made her unprotected as a weaker sex, causing her descent to a low state of mental development.

Women Have Worst Conditions.

The industries where the women are the majority of workers have the worst conditions and are the most backward, such as the canning and textile Industries. In the canning industry more than half of the workers are women, while the textile industry employs 55% of women. The growth of the machine world has affected the conditions of the women to a very great extent. When she returns home after 9 or ten hours of manual labor in the factory, the women are confronted by domestic duties. The women is thus forced to work 9 or 6 hours extra daily.

Woman's Role.

Now the question arises. Is the woman useless to the labor movement? Not at all. With the awakening of the militant struggle of the labor movement, women are playing an important role. An illustrated example of this may be seen in the action of the women in the Passaic strike. Albert Weisbord in his booklet "Passaic" illustrates also she is less fault-finding and is less likely to be the cause of strikes.

The oppressor is taking the full advantage of the backwardness of development of women, for which he is to blame. In the earliest primitive society there were no classes. Victory Is Certain

By KRUPSKAYA (Lenin's Wife)

FROM the conception of Lenin regarding the class struggle, there arises his attitude to the women's question. The proletarian women form a section of the working class who, as a result of their conditions of life and work, are generally on a lower level of class-consciousness than the remainder. Lenin always emphasized that great attention must be devoted to this section of the working class, and that party work among the proletarian women is of the greatest importance.

I remember one occasion in 1921, when I went along with Lenin from the Trada Union House, where he had delivered a lecture, to the Kremlin. On the way we met a group delegation of Mohammedan women. Some of them still wore the "Tshadra" the veil which they wear over the face when in the presence of men. They recognized Lenin, embraced him, tore off their Tahadras, spoke to him, and wept. Lenin was visibly touched.

He addressed a few words to the Mohammedan women, and then we proceeded on our way. After Lenin had been walking on in silence for some minutes, he said: "You see, the most backward sections of the toilers have advanced, these women —they are the most enslaved, they are the rear-guard of the whole world. Now Socialism is sure of its victory."

Yes, it is true: Socialism is sure of its victory.

For a Women's Section

MARCH 8 is a very big day for the working women of the world. It should be a big day for us in America. The celebration of International Women's Day originated in the United States, yet during the past decade its celebration was very sadly neglected.

Now that we are planning and working more among the masses of women in America, we must also enlarge the celebration of International Women's Day. Today, when the American working class is faced with the probabilities of war, when American imperialism, like the mailed dragon, lifts its head and trys to damolish the little countries of Central America, such as Nicaragua, when it continues to fight the Mexican Labor Union, it is high time for the American working class to say something. Especially so for the mothers, whose sons will have to fight the battles of the imperialists.

On this year's International Women's Day, March 8, we, the working women of America, must raise our voices against imperialism and the impending war.

The Lithuanian Working Women's Alliance, with its two thousand members, heartily greets the only Communist daily in the world in the English language—The DAILY WORKER. We cannot for a moment forget the importance of The DAILY WORKER in our struggle against the oppressors. To substantiate our good wishes we herewith send ten dollars to The DAILY WORKER.

As a suggestion we would add, it would be very good to have a Women's Section in The DAILY WORKER appear regularly.

HELEN N. YESKEVICH, executive secretary, Lithuanian Working Women's Alliance.

The Negro Working Woman

THE Negro woman is a worker. There are very few leisure class women among us. Under slavery our women toiled in the field and labored in the home.

Today large numbers still slave on farms in the South and in domestic service all over the country. But thousands have gone into factories, mills and shops in the big cities. They have also developed a considerable professional class of teachers, doctors, nurses and lawyers.

The last census reported nearly 2,000,000 colored women gainfully employed. This took no account, however, of the Negro wife, who is also often wage a wage earner, as well as homemaker. She adds to the slim family income by taking in washing or going out to work by the day.

Small pay, filthy work, and long hours are the lot of the colored woman in industry. All the evils of the South, lynching, disfranchisement, poor schools, Jim Crow laws, peonage and the chain gang which bear so heavily on Negro men, are doubly hard for Negro women.

What have colored women done to soften these harsh conditions?

All that she has known how to do, up to this time. For years the Negro church has been the backbone of every race betterment movement. She has given freely of her meagre earnings for education and charity.

The National Federation of Colored Women's Clubs has aided every drive for redress and justice.

Leaders among the women have been persons who believed in impressing the owning class with one's worth or asking for justice.

But pleas have not lessened lynching and worth while work has not abolished one rotten borough in the South.

The idea is gaining ground that the heartless cruelties practised upon the Negro are terrorist methods designed to keep him a slave working class.

If this is so, this fight for better conditions is a worker's fight. The colored woman is prepared to fight. She has had training on the picket line in Passaic, in New York and in Chicago. Her answer to discrimination is organization.

Of all the working class, the Negro woman is least organized. But she at last realizes the power of organized labor. She recognizes her own power as a worker.

Now only a few factory workers belong to progressive unions in the large cities. The number will grow as the colored woman herself goes out to organize her sisters.

Have we any examples of revolutionary leadership?

Yes. Harriet Tubman, a slave, made nineteen trips back into slave territory, and brought out over three hundred slaves.

Sojourner Truth, freed, when slavery was abolished in New York, gave her time, and used her simple eloquence in the abolitionist cause.

Their example will inspire us.

Recent Outstanding Achievements Among Working Women

The first conspicuous instance in 1926 along organizational lines was the continued growth and development of Local 43, Millinery Head Workers' Union, of the Cloth Hat, Cap and Millinery Workers International Union. In less than two years around 2,600 young women have been organized. Union control has been established in hundreds of small shops, with four young members of Local 43 as able and efficient business agents and organizers. This is a remarkable and noteworthy achievement when one knows the history of Local 43 and the great handicaps and obstacles which it has had to overcome. Local 43 has an unusual record of heroic devotion and loyalty upon the part of a small minority, who have been responsible for holding the Local together since the disastrous 1919 strike, when an attempt was made to organize the 10,000 milliners in the open shop.

Local 43 has not been spectacular, it has had little publicity, its active members are perhaps the least known among the outstanding groups of young women in the labor movement, although their number in their ranks is one of the most able, most competent and most promising. Under their leadership Local 43 is building a strong organization and is educating and training its membership, especially the many young women under twenty five years of age. With the same spirit and the same steady ground gaining Local 43 can be counted upon to organize the millinery trade and to celebrate the tenth anniversary of the 1919 June strike by having a 100% organization. It will be able to rank as one of the strongest women's locals in New York.

The second interesting development was the organization campaign last fall of the Ladies Tailors and Custom Dress Makers Local 38, I. L. G. W. U. Here is another group of more than 10,000 unorganized, miserably exploited women, in a district which adjoins the millinery market, making within a radius of twenty or thirty city blocks, about 25,000 women whose conditions and wages are ruining the slight gains of the few organized women. In a brilliant whirlwind campaign, under the direction of Juliet Stuart Poyntz, there was a first attempt at a Trade Union Front between the cloakmakers, furriers and milliners made an onslaught on the powerful manufacturers on upper Fifth Avenue and 57 St. For the short time allotted to it, this campaign was more than successful in its preliminary all important actions. It created a strong trade union consciousness among the women and the excellent educational propaganda was not without its effect in many of the exclusive shops for which it was intended and strengthened, in which Local 38 has never secured a foothold. It was proved beyond a doubt that the organization of the custom dressmakers on 57th St. is not impossible in the future.

The recent strike of the Paper Box Makers, largely young girls, is a third interesting case. Although this strike was lost after nineteen weeks of heroic struggle, the women strikers' spirited fight was inspiring to all New York trade unionists. Again a record was established of women's achievements in 1926.

The fourth demonstration of the solidarity and militant action of another group of women is the most magnificent example of them all. The story of the women of Passaic can be told and retold. Passaic established a precedent for mass organization in the unorganized industries. The Paper Box Makers proved that young women can be depended upon to stay out for four months, stick to their union, and though temporarily defeated go back to work, undaunted, to rebuild their union on the inside. The Millinery Workers and the Custom Dress Makers have demonstrated that the women on the edge of the jurisdiction of International Unions are ready and eager to be organized. They are held back by the reactionary officials, indifferent to the exploitation of women workers and the demoralization of the industry.

Out of eleven million unemployed and unorganized women in industry in America, there are barely 250,000 in the trade unions. Let us realize keenly that the responsibility for improving the conditions of our sisters in these trades is upon our own shoulders. Let us face facts squarely.

Women must act for themselves. The organization of women must be accomplished by women. The question of the position of women in the trade unions was never more dominant and challenging than today. The New York trade union women have a tremendous fight ahead of them, but there seems to be great promise for the future. 1927 should be a year of solid and able achievement in the advancement of women workers.

BOOKS

CAN THE WOMAN WORKER BE ORGANIZED?

The Woman Worker and the Trade Unions, by Theresa Wolfson., International Publishers. $1.75.

Theresa Wolfson answers this question with a number of "Ifs." But the most important "if" which she points to is: "If the trade union broadens its structural boundaries to include the unskilled worker—and women are for the most part unskilled."

Miss Wolfson takes into consideration many factors which account for the small number of women organized into trade unions—tradition, prejudice, kind of work in which women are engaged, etc.

The array of facts which she presents in illustration of the attitude of the American Federation of Labor towards this problem is damning. At intervals, since 1885, the A. F. of L. has thrown sops to the unorganized women workers in the form of resolutions, statements, and the usual pious wishes. In 1918, the Executive Council even employed sight or nine women organizers, but in the very same convention refused to amend its constitution requiring that there be two women members on the Executive Council.

That women workers are highly organizable was (not for the first time) only recently demonstrated by the splendid, militant part they played in the Passaic and L. L. G. W. U. strikes, where they displayed much of the fiery spirit, the courage and the determination that characterized these strikes.

The solution to the problem of organizing women workers (as, Indeed, to the problem of building effective trade unions), is the organization of the unskilled, unorganized industries.

Mechanized production is today the prevailing mode of production. It eliminates the skilled craftsman and brings into industry ever larger numbers of unskilled men and women, and these women, just as the men, are now a permanent factor in industry. No more getting married and quitting. The unskilled male worker cannot afford the luxury of a wife who is nothing more than a housekeeper and a mother. She must add to these functions the function of a bread-earner, or continue to live in single blessedness.

The A. F. of L., with its old craft and "job trust" structure and ideology, will have to make room for this tremendous mass of unskilled men and women workers who must be organized if the trade unions are to function as a weapon of the working class. The old forms are as helpless against the surge of the production forces of modern society as was King Canute against the sea. And when the trade union movement of America realizes this (and it will be the job of the militant membership to bring this realization), the women workers will come into the trade unions and fight side by side with their brother-workers against the bosses.

Organize the unorganized! That is the answer to the question.

SOVIET GOLD AND CHINA.

China and the Powers, by H. K. Norton. John Day. $2.50

"Soviet gold" is the stock explanation for the events in China. Soviet gold has purchased Sacasa, the Civil Liberties Union and the Emir of Afghanistan. Why not the Chinese nationalist armies?

Not only do Austen Chamberlain and Frank Kellogg subscribe to that theory, but a host of so-called experts have been spewing learned theses to prove it.

The idea is something like this. China, despite occasional scraps between war lords over taxes and customs receipts was a land of celestial peace until 1840, when it was then that a few red agitators took advantage of the Shanghai massacre and started "to sow the seeds of discontent" in China. It was than that China became anti-foreign and threatened the lives of poor missionaries whom Kellogg and Chamberlain are trying to protect.

How do the experts prove that Russia is responsible for the Chinese revolution? That is quite simple. In May, 1924, just a year before Inspector Everson ordered the murder of unarmed Chinese demonstrators in Shanghai, Russia concluded treaties with China by which she relinquished her extraterritorial rights, her concessions and her Boxer indemnity.

Surely this was part of a "vast plot against America" (New York Evening Post) and an attempt to establish a Soviet government in China, which "in accordance with the principles of the Third International," would sanction "the exercise of free love." (Rev. Craighill in the New York World.)

This is excellent propaganda for Coolidge and Kellogg, but it in no way explains the Chinese nationalist movement.

* * *

It is inconceivable that a man like Henry K. Norton, who has been to China, who has followed the Chinese situation and who was chairman of the Williamstown Conference on China, should be naive enough to explain the nationalist movement in terms of Soviet gold. Surely Mr. Norton must have seen for himself the presence of the nationalist troops, for general strikes, for the organization of millions of peasants and workers.

One is tempted to believe that his motives are more sinister than that.

ARTSYBASHEFF.

The press a few days ago carried the news of the death of Mikhail Artsybasheff, the sensational author of "Sanin," "Millions" and many other works. My first reaction to the news was What, I thought that fellow died long ago! My second was astonishment that he should have been only forty-nine years old. It merely indicates how greatly in my own mind—and probably in the minds of others Artsybasheff had "dated."

I read translations of Artsybasheff's work in my early adolescence. I haven't read him since. It was the so-called pornographic elements in his writing that chiefly attracted me, and it was these elements that were largely responsible for his immense popularity before the Revolution. I remember how furtively I read "Sanin," that early crude novel of his, that made him a gaudy international figure overnight. Plays like "Jealousy," short stories like "Women" and "Raped," (the fellow had a genius for tabloid titles) seemed so daring, so deliciously improper.

Doubtless there was a cruel irony in the life and fate of Mikhail Artsybasheff. The man who wanted so much to be a rebel and a pathfinder, the writer who was in the minds of the new Russian youth that arose after the 1905 revolution, became in time merely a stale sexual aperitif, a tickler of adolescents and hysterical old maids. It is the personal tragedy of all those whose life is a maudlin gesture, the gesture of ineffectual children or clowns. In politics we have Alexander Kerensky, a would-be Lazarus, who has come to America to weep a few pretty tears in the columns of the New York Times, Herald Tribune, etc.—doubtless, at so much a tear. And in literature we have Mikhail Artsybasheff.

The Moon Calfs of Russia grew up. Many of them became the leaders of the real Revolution. But Mikhail Artsybasheff continued to fight with imaginary windmills, continued from his Warsaw retreat to send his puny tissue-paper lances against the invincible iron and steel of a new Russia, a Russia not of story books, but of flesh and blood and implacable bone.

Uria Agitates

URIA is the daughter of the most ignorant peasant, a hopeless Tartar. From her early childhood she was surrounded by Tartar customs and superstitions. Now Uria is a mother of three children. She lost her husband about ten years ago.

Last year she was a delegate in her village. She attended all delegate meetings. She listened attentively to everything that was discussed there. She was eager to understand everything. And how well she understood everything! Now everybody in our village knows her, and she is called "Our Communist."

She goes out to the women who gather outside their homes, and persuades them to agitate and educate them, urging them to attend the delegate meetings.

"EH, you women! We have many rights in our hands, but we know not how to use them!. And the menfolk sneer at us. They say: 'You women keep at your gossips and do not poke your noses into social matters.' But we ourselves by our actions show ourselves in such a light. Why not go to the reading room and listen to newspaper reading, or the reading of some clever book?"

Her elder son, Chuba, she persuaded to join the Young Communist League.

"Eh, you, no use indulging in idleness! Here is a newspaper, read and then—go to the Komsomol. Join it and make other follow you.

HER son joined with pleasure. Last year there was no nucleus in Tagulova (Shengalchinsk Volost, N. Chalmisak Canton), but at present there is a nucleus, which was organized by her son, consisting of nine members.

In the long winter evenings, Uria's little cottage is converted into a club. The youth gathers there and Uria, together with her son, starts conversation on very vital subject, reads newspapers and books. She tells them:

"All you lads and lasses join the Young Communist League!"

RUTHENBERG'S ASHES ARRIVE IN NEW YORK CITY

GUARD OF HONOR RECEIVES PARTY LEADER'S REMAINS IN METROPOLIS

Memorial Gatherings to Be Held Tonight at Carnegie Hall and the Central Opera House

The ashes of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg were met at the Grand Central Terminal last night by hundreds of New York workers, many of whom had participated in various working class struggles with our dead Communist leader on many occasions during his many years of activity in the class struggle.

When the ashes were taken from the train by the special delegation, appointed by the Central Committee of the Workers (Communist) Party, headed by Jay Lovestone, acting general secretary and including William W. Weinstone, Jack Stachel and Charles Krumbein, representing the New York organization, they were given into the custody of a guard of honor that included many prominent trade unionists and party functionaries.

The mourning throng of workers marched down Lexington avenue, passing the headquarters of the New York Joint Board of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, Lexington avenue and 25th street, also the headquarters of Locals 2 and 9 that are nearby. Continuing downtown the procession passed the office of the Joint Board of the Furriers' Union, 22 East 22nd street; the Jewish Daily Freiheit, 30 Union Square and the office of the Workers (Communist) Party, 108 East 14th street. It finally reached its destination, Manhattan Lyceum, 66 East Fourth street, where Comrade Ruthenberg's ashes will be in state until tonight's mass memorial meeting at Carnegie Hall, Central Opera House and the other halls have been secured to take care of the expected overflow.

The guard of honor that is watching the ashes until after tonight's meeting, when they will be taken to Moscow and deposited in the Kremlin wall next to the ashes of the heroes of the November, 1917, revolution in Russia, Lenin, Trotsky, Samuel Dashowitz and Nathan Gross of the Furriers' Union, is continued on Page Two)

Ruthenberg's Guard of Honor Includes Many Prominent Unionists

The ashes of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg are in the custody of the following guard of honor:

Ben Gold, Sam Liebowitz, Aaron Gross, Sascha Zimmerman, Joseph Boruchovitz, Rose Wortis, Sam Lipzin, Philip Aronberg, Leo Hoffmann, P. Pascal Cosgrove, H. M. Wicks, Ludwig Landy, Rose Baron, J. Cohen, H. Gerson, M. Salzman, L. E. Katterfeld, Joseph Brodsky, Alfred Wagenknecht, Alexander Trachtenberg, Kate Gitlow, Dr. A. Caspe, Morris Winchevsky, Anton Bimba, B. Lifschitz, Joseph Zack, J. Louis Engdahl, William F. Dunne, T. J. O'Flaherty, Meilech Epstein, Schachno Epstein, Enea Sormenti, Erich Saenger and others.

CURRENT EVENTS

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

When the German workers demanded that the eight hour day convention adopted by the international labor organization of the league of nations at its Washington conference in 1919, the employers explain their refusal with the argument that it would be impossible for them to compete in the world market with their rivals unless all the other industrial nations adopt a similar course. As all the other industrial powers put up the same excuse it looks as if the trade union leaders will be a long time waiting for a favorable answer.

Of course, it is ridiculous to expect that the German capitalists or the capitalists of any other country will reduce the working hours or increase wages without being forced to do so by the workers. This is quite well known by the reactionary trade union leaders. They are tired of the struggle and want to substitute less painful methods for the direct attack. The labor annex to the league of nations is intended to pull the guts out of the trade union movement. The right wing labor leaders are playing the role of butchers.

According to a summary of current political developments in Germany the small farmers of the republic are organizing a political party of their own to defend their interests against the big landowners and the "industrial workers." This is the bunk. The interests of the small farmers are not in conflict with those of the industrial workers. They run side by side. In the balance between the peasantry and the workers lies the correct line for the German working class movement. Evidently the German capitalist propagandists are peddling the same dope to the farmers that our own money

SANE MORALITY IN SOVIET UNION, SAYS DR. STRONG

Educator Finds Youth Not So Wild as Here

SAN ANTONIO Tex., March 8.—Although free love and common law marriages exist in the Soviet Union, it is a land with few "petting parties," and in the opinion of Dr. Anna Louise Strong, educator, writer and social worker, who spent the last five years there, is not nearly so loose in its morals as in the United States.

Fast Living Here.

This is the belief she expressed here today.

"Here, I understand, petting parties are quite common and numerous, the young people of the land living at a far faster clip than in Russia. There one doesn't hear of the wildness of youth which figures so largely in the news of the day here.

"A girl who flirts eagerly and often in Russia would be socially ostracized, notwithstanding the fact that common law marriages are accented without the usual questioning glance.

"There it is considered terrible for a young woman to flirt with numerous men, leading them on. But where two people find that they love each other, they very often start living together, the marriage ceremony not being deemed necessary."

Continuing, Dr. Strong said: "Should a child be born to this union, the parents, in practically every instance, are willing to support it. Common law marriages seem to be very successful there."

Few Divorces.

"Although it is little or no trouble to obtain a divorce, there are fewer divorces there than in this country."

In the opinion of Dr. Strong, the United States, the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics and China will be the three leading nations during the next fifty years.

Thousands Die in Japanese Earthquake

Towns Destroyed; Streets Strewn With Dead

TOKIO, March 8.—The death toll of the earthquake which rocked western Japan yesterday continued to mount today.

The Kyoto prefectural police headquarters announced late tonight that 1,699 persons had been killed in that prefecture alone.

The number of injured had not been checked, the announcement said.

A total of 4,548 houses collapsed or burned in this prefecture, the report stated.

The Kyoto prefecture was hardest hit by the temblor.

Homeless Population Freezes.

Suffering is rampant in the stricken areas.

Their homes destroyed, thousands of survivors are freezing in the frigid blasts of winter winds.

Property damage is enormous. Entire villages and towns have been destroyed. Virtually every population center in the Province of Targo has been wrecked.

Americans in Panic.

One American woman was killed when she was pushed into the bay at Kobe and drowned. This occurred when white tourists of the steamer California become panic-stricken while attempting to get on the boat at Kobe.

Five of the crew of the California were also injured.

The town of Mineyama appeared to be the largest sufferer. There, it was reported, 1,000 persons were killed when the quake struck. Several thousand were injured, also.

Streets of the town are reported strewn with the dead, while terrified refugees fled the city for Miyazu.

Tramp in Snow.

In the Sanin district, where the temblor was particularly severe, the refugees, homeless, were compelled to take advantage of makeshift shelters. Suffering was acute, as the district is snowbound. Many of the refugees were forced to tramp in the snow without any shoes. Hardly any of them had sufficient clothes to protect them from the wintry blasts.

In many of the villages, reports said, the dead and injured lay in the

First Hand Accounts Of Brussels Congress Against Imperialism

The DAILY WORKER, beginning tomorrow, will publish first hand reports of the great Brussels Congress Against Colonial Oppression and Imperialism by Manuel Gomez, delegate of the All-American Anti-Imperialist League to the Congress.

These reports have been held up in the mail but have lost none of their value by the delay. They will be accompanied by pictures of the congress.

The Brussels Congress is the first of its kind in the history of the world and the fact of its organization, its delliberations and its decisions are of tremendous importance in this period when the Far East, led by China, is revolting against imperialist domination.

We publish on Page 3, the list of delegates attending this first world congress against imperialism.

MILLER TO SERVE EIGHTEEN MONTHS IN PENITENTIARY

Judge Allows Time Till Appeal Is Taken

Thomas W. Miller, alien property custodian in the Harding administration, who, together with former Attorney General Harry A. Daugherty, was tried for having accepted a $391,000 bribe for the release of $7,000,000 worth of German property, was sentenced yesterday by Judge Knox to serve 18 months in the federal penitentiary and pay a $5000 fine.

Miller, who was convicted last Friday by a jury for having conspired to defraud the government of his honest service, has been free on a $5000 bail bond and has been permitted by the judge to remain so until his appeal is ready.

Urge Women of Mexico to War on Imperialism

Anti-Imperialist League Organizes Women's Section

MEXICO CITY, March 8.—Declaring "the triumph of liberty is in our hands," leaders of the All-American Anti-Imperialist League from their headquarters here today called upon Mexican women to join in the movement to protect the nation against "the talons of the imperialistic policy of the United States."

The purpose of the call is to form a women's section of the league which will further its program aimed at the so-called imperialism of the American government.

League Attacked by Kellogg.

The league is the organization which was singled out by Secretary of State Kellogg for attack in his statement to the senate.

The call issued by the league says: "Do you wish the happiness of our sons? Do you desire the welfare of our country? The women's section of this league invites all Mexican women to defend Mexico's independance and sovereignty which are in danger of destruction by the talons of the imperialistic policy of the United States.

Emphasize Need for Unity.

"It rests with us whether there shall be a generation of free men or whether our sons shall receive a heritage of slavery."

The circular emphasizes the need for "the union of the peoples of America against Yankee imperialism."

Monarchist March Ends in Riot; Many Workers Are Wounded

WARSAW, Poland, March 8.—Many working men were severely wounded today when police charged into their ranks and fired shots. An attempt had been made by these workers to break up a demonstration of monarchists.

Much activity has been displayed of late by the fascist and monarchist factions, and no attempt is being made by the Pilsudsky government to stop them. The Polish legation at London confirms these activities, but calls them negligible.

Heavy Vote In Moscow Elections; Workers In Great Demonstrations

MOSCOW, March 8.—Elections to the Moscow Soviet are proceeding most actively with over ninety per cent of the voters participating.

After the close of work at the various institutions, numerous demonstrations by the workers are being held. The workers march daily before the building of the Moscow Soviet, where they are greeted by representatives of the Presidium of the Moscow Soviet.

The influx of workers' demonstrating columns is so big that at evening time all traffic in the squares in front of the Soviet building stops entirely.

Resolutions approving the reply of the Soviet government to Great Britain, pledge full support to the Soviet power and the construction of socialist economy, and for the defense of the acquisitions of the October revolution.

MAZER SAYS COP MANAGED MURDER OF EDITOR CRITIC

"Could Kiss That Kid" For Killing Mellett

CANTON, Ohio, March 8. — The first complete story describing the assassination of Don R. Mellett, vice-fighting Canton Daily News editor, on July 16, last, was given by Louis Mazer to the Stark country grand jury here today, and made public for the first time.

First Plan Beating.

Mazer's story of the murder, is as follows:

Several weeks before the killing, Floyd Streitenberger, detective sergeant on the Canton police force at the time, came to Mazer and told him of plans to "beat up" Mellett. The publishers had been running a series of editorials, charging an "unholy alliance" existed between the police department and Canton bootleggers.

His Gunman Friend.

Two weeks before the murder, Ben Rudner, Massillon hardware merchant, convicted of complicity in the crime and now serving a life sentence in the penitentiary, told Mazer:

"I have some friends coming here who will do that Mellett job for us."

After the arrival of Patrick Eugene McDermott, of Nanty Glo, Pa., convicted gunman in the slaying, Rudner suggested to Mazer that Pat might need a gun. Mazer gave him a .38 callbre pistol.

"Police All Right."

July 15, the night preceding the murder, Streitenberger came to Mazer and suggested that "Louie" go with him to the Mellett home. Mazer was hesitant but the detective finally persuaded him to go, assuring him: "The police are all right. They won't bother us."

Wuhu Captured By Peoples' Armies

Chinese Nationalists Gain Province, Cut Railroad

LONDON, March 8.—Nationalist troops have captured Wuhu with valuable supplies that were stored there, according to a Central News dispatch from Shanghai this afternoon. It added that the southern forces now control all of Anhwei Province and the Peking-Shanghai Railroad.

SHANGHAI, March 8.—Continued preparations for a general strike frighten the foreign imperialist population here. Rumors every few hours that the Cantonese are at the gates of Shanghai alternate with inspired stories from the consuls that the Peoples' Army will not attack the city at all, or that the Nationalists are splitting into factions.

The situation seems to be that while actual fighting has declined, due to heavy rains and the Kuomintang's desire to conduct propaganda back of the lines, reinforcements are hurrying to both the northern military armies and the People's army.

The battle line recently established before the city of Sunkiang, has been rapidly extended to the northwestward to Soochow, on the Shanghai, Nanking and northern railway, and now is strengthening still farther to the northwestward to the city of Wuhu.

Wuhu is the point on which forces of General Chen, governor of Anhwei province, have been concentrating. Chen transferred his allegiance a few days ago from the southern military triumvirate, Chang Tsung Chang, Wu Pei-Fu and Chang Tso-lin to the Nationalist government, and its partisans are fighting in the north on Shanghai.

The fall of Wuhu cuts off communication along the single railroad running between Peking, controlled by Chang Tso-lin, and Shanghai, defended by his ally, Chang Tsung Chang. It also places in great jeopardy the communications between Shanghai and Nanking, formerly military headquarters of Sun Chuan-Fang, and now held by a large force of Shantung troops owing allegiance to the northern triumvirate. Nanking is crowded with military stores of great value. It may be cut off either through an advance southward by General Chen, or by a northward thrust through Soochow by the Nationalist army there.

Negro Soldiers Of Houston "Riot" Can Now Ask For Parole

WASHINGTON, March 8. — The sentences of 20 Negro soldiers, formerly of the 24th U. S. Infantry, who were convicted in the so-called Houston Riot of 1917, were today reduced 18 months.

All these prisoners will now become eligible for release on honor parole within the next twelve months.

The Negro soldiers were infuriated by discrimination against them practiced by the Texans, and actively repelled with rifles attacks on them.

Organize the Traction Workers!

ARTICLE I. WORKING CONDITIONS OF THE MEN

The DAILY WORKER publishes herewith the first study ever made of the traction situation in New York City from the working class standpoint. The articles, written by a worker with long experience as a traction employe and trade union organizer, deal chiefly with the conditions of the traction workers, the causes of these conditions and the measures which will remedy the manifold evils if energetically applied with the co-operation of the labor movement of New York. One article will appear each day in the organized labor section of The DAILY WORKER.

A powerful union of all traction workers would be the backbone of the New York labor movement and greatly strengthen the labor movement nationally. No better service can be rendered to the labor movement than to distribute to the traction workers a full set of The DAILY WORKER containing these articles.

By ROBERT MITCHELL.

Traction is one of the most "basic" industries in New York. In it are employed approximately 75,000 men.

The new subways now under construction will provide employment for perhaps 15,000 more. These 50,000 men will form a body of workers second in importance only perhaps to the miners and the railway employes.

A strike among the textile workers or among a dozen other industries may be weathered without completely disrupting the nation's life. A stoppage on the railroads, however, would in a few weeks result in general paralysis. In a much more immediate and definite way is this true of what may be called the nervous system of New York life, its traction lines.

Huge Task.

The colossal nature of the business of transporting the New York population daily to and from work, to shopping centers, to places of amusement, is seldom appreciated.

When it is remembered that the traction lines of the city convey yearly more passengers than the whole of the steam railroads put together; when it is recalled under what terrific pressure this task is performed by the workers; under what fenrful responsibilities for life and safety these men are continuously burdened; when it is realized that these workers labor for the most part underground, always by artificial light, half the time during night hours, in summer in the most stifling atmosphere, always under the pressure of maintaining the schedule, practically always under the strain of the most fearful kind

CHAMBERLAIN INSINUATES BREAK WITH SOVIET UNION COMES SOON

GENEVA, March 8.—Intimation that Great Britain contemplates breaking diplomatic relations with Russia was given today by Sir Austen Chamberlain, foreign minister of Great Britain, in an interview with correspondents here for the league of nations council meeting.

Questioned about the present status of Anglo-Russian relations, Sir Austen replied, "Very bad, very bad."

"We don't want to disturb other nations, that is why we haven't up to now broken diplomatic relations with Russia."

"We have no objections to discussing the Chinese question here", said Sir Austen, "but I see no possibility of useful league intervention at the present time."

COOLIDGE SAYS GENEVA IS NOW BIG PEACE HOPE

Italy Concurs in Theft Of Bessarabia

WASHINGTON, March 8. — The American Government has been conducting "informal inquiries" with Great Britain and Japan relative to the possibility of a three-power agreement on naval ships, it was announced at the White House today.

The tentative responses to these inquiries have been such, President Coolidge informed inquirers today, as to lead to some hope of success at Geneva next June.

Today's announcement from the white house was in direct contradiction to that emanating from the same source last week.

Numerous difficulties, it was admitted, confront the powers in attempting to reach such an understanding. Great Britain has been represented as unwilling to agree unless limitation of her cruisers and other naval auxiliaries as long as France and Italy, rival Mediterranean powers, were left free to build to the limit of their finances.

Italy Ratifies Theft

GENEVA, March 8.—M. Scialoja, Italian delegate on the council of the League of Nations, announced at today's sitting of the league, that the Italian council of ministers yesterday decided to ratify the Bessarabian convention of October 28, 1920, which definitely grants Bessarabia to Roumania.

Heretofore only England and France had ratified the convention, Italy and Japan holding aloof.

Just Friendly Stealing

M. Scialoja hastened to add that Italy's decision "should not be considered a hostile act against Russia."

The French foreign office declares that the Italian ratification of the Bessarabian convention does not make it operative, but that Japan's ratification is necessary before it can be put into effect.

PRESSERS WILL FIGHT CORRUPT LEADERSHIP

CLOAK, SKIRT AND DRESS PRESSERS' UNION, LOCAL 35, New York.—"We express deep condolence at the death of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg who fearlessly and most courageously fought in the front ranks of the working class.

"We recognize the great loss to the labor movement of this country at a time when workers with an unbreakable will and resistence are needed to lead the working class and also to lead unflinchingly in the fight against the boss class and also to lead unflinchingly in the fight against the corrupt leadership in trade unions, leadership that sacrifices the standards of living won by the workers through hard struggle for the sake of holding onto their jobs in the unions.

"With the death of Comrade Ruthenberg we pledge ourselves to close our ranks more energetically and to organize the unorganized masses of the workers whether inside or outside the labor movement."

Union; Charles S. Zimmerman, Rose Wortis and Johnny Borochow of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, the members of the District Committees of the Workers Party and the Young Workers League, the editors of party papers, language bureau members, and many other well known trade unionists.

All progressive and militant workers in the city of New York will assemble at Carnegie Hall and at Central Opera House tonight to honor the memory of C. E. Ruthenberg.

It was impossible to obtain Madison Square Garden because of the six-day races now going on there and therefore Carnegie Hall was gotten for the occasion. At the meeting at Central Opera House there will be the same speakers and the same program as at Carnegie Hall. Additional halls have been reserved for overflow meetings as it is expected that Carnegie Hall and Central Opera House meeting will be inadequate for the mass of workers who will come to mourn the death of the outstanding leader of the Workers (Communist) Party.

The list of Speakers.

Speakers at the various meetings include Jay Lovestone, acting secretary of the Party; William Z. Foster, Max Bedacht, William F. Dunne, William W. Weinstone, M. J. Olgin, Benjamin Gitlow, Benjamin Lifshitz, Sam Don, J. J. Ballam, J. Louis Engdahl, A. Wagenknecht, J. Stachel, Alexander Trachtenberg and B. D. Wolfe.

The Freiheit Gesangs Verein will give the funeral march, and a large painting of Ruthenberg will be exhibited. The painting was made by Maurice Bartnick, the same artist who made the Lenin painting which was displayed at the Lenin memorial meeting.

The series of mass meetings to pay tribute to the memory of Ruthenberg will appropriately emphasize the molding of the Party and the continuation of the struggle to which he gave his life.

German Workers Feel The Loss of Comrade Charles E. Ruthenberg

The hardest shock comes to the Communist movement in the United States and the Workers Party in particular, by the death of one of the most brilliant and fearless fighters in the vanguard of the working class. Great is our loss. One would question whether redoubled efforts would ever replace him. Our work will and must go on threefold.

Hardly since the death of Lenin and the murder of Liebknecht and Luxemburg has a greater blow been struck.

In behalf of the German Fraction of the Workers (Communist) Party and the class conscious German workers and sympathizers with our movement, we want to express the deepest regret at the loss of our comrade, C. E. Ruthenberg, the fighter and the man.

E. R. Saenger,
Secretary, German Bureau.

VOID TEXAS LAW THAT PROHIBITS NEGROES VOTING

Supreme Court Declares Right to Damages

WASHINGTON, March 8.—Dr. L. A. Nixon, a Negro resident and qualified voter of El Paso, Texas, has just won in the supreme court of the United States his case against the election officials of that county, who prevented him from voting at the democratic primary elections in the state. The ruling of the court, rendered unanimously on the other points, declares unconstitutional the Texas "White Primary Law", on which the election officials based their action in the case of Nixon and others.

The law upset by the supreme court reads as follows

"It is event shall a Negro be eligible to participate in a democratic party election held in the state of Texas, and should a Negro vote in the democratic primary election such a ballot shall be void and election officials are herein directed to throw out such ballot and not count the same."

Nixon sued for $5,000 damages. It was the claim for damages that finally brought the case within the jurisdiction of the supreme court, a lower federal court having sustained the demurrer of the defendants, that it was a political case, and therefore a matter for the state alone to decide in other southern states. Negroes are disfranchised also.

Public Ledger Quite Disgusted With Old Favorite, Kerensky

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., March 8.—Kerensky hasn't fooled all of the American millionaires. The Philadelphia Public Ledger gives expression, editorially, to the growing counter movement, based probably on the experience of often blasted hope.

"Kerensky, the Russian who had his chance and failed, is in America for a two-month visit. After the czar's downfall, he was hailed by some of his fellow Russians as a second Napoleon. He was neither. Somebody described him as a "theatrical and hysterical poseur." Some one else noted that he was "only a dictator by rhetoric." The whirlwind of Bolshevism blew him out of power and out of Russia. Lenin and Trotsky took the place Kerensky had but was unable to hold. He comes now preaching the downfall of Communism and change in the Soviet state. Is that his mission? If so, he might as well have saved his time, his breath and his breath. Other prophets have foretold the downfall of the Kremlin regime year by year since 1917, but the hammer and sickle, on a field a red field, remains the Russian flag. There is a kind of glacial slowness about the "downfall" so often predicted for these same Soviets."

Say Detective Sergeant Planned Murder

They left in Mazer's automobile and picked up McDermott.

The latter was posted in the woods across from the rear of the Mellett home. Mazer and Streitenberger drove around town for about two hours and picked up McDermott near the scene of the murder, later.

Upon entering the car, Pat exclaimed: "I've put that guy where he will hear the angels."

During the trip down town, Streitenberger said to Mazer: "I could kiss that kid for what he has done tonight."

The morning following the murder, Mazer met Rudner in Canton and they had breakfast together. Rudner said: "We've got to pay this fellow." Mazer drew $200 from his account in a Canton bank and gave it to McDermott that morning.

Go to Sleep, Charlie

In Memoriam Charles Emil Ruthenberg.

I

They will carry the ash of the body that was iron, they will carry it a long way.
They will carry the burnt-out coal of the heart that was flame, they will carry it a long way.
They will carry the last cinders of the rebel through cities and countrysides, over rivers and mountains.
Black leaping railroad trains will carry them, the glistening flanks of the ocean, the strong arms of men walking with bowed heads and tight lips will carry them.
Words will be said, people will creep out of holes to hear, people will creep back again.
They will carry the ash of the body that was iron, the burnt-out coal of the heart that was flame, they will carry them a long way.

II

They jailed him, they put him behind steel bars, they branded him with the felon's brand.
But there isn't a jail that's big enough to hold that which never can be chained nor yoked nor trampled down.
They howled at him, they jeered him, they pointed their fingers and laughed and spat on his name.
But there isn't a laughter that's loud enough, there isn't a derision that's twisted and craven enough to cover with the slime of their mockery the voice of scorn and contempt and defiance that shall rise up and be as the whirlwind in the seats of the mighty, the nightmare in the beds of the great.

III

And I know there will be laughing this day, I know there will be rejoicing and dancing and handclapping among the little men, the plunderers, the thieves.
I know there will be a great jubilation in the filthy hearts of those that put on the solemn commiserating face.
The judges, the cops, the confidence men, the gangsters, the renegades.
Surely they will be smiling this day and smirking and laughing up their sleeves
That the ash of the body that was iron, that the burnt-out coal of the heart that was flame will be carried a long, long way.

IV

Under the walls of the Kremlin the bed will be soft.
Lenin and Jack Reed will be waiting to welcome you, Charlie.
O they'll be getting up a dandy blowout for you, Lenin and Jack Reed and the rest of the boys.
Through the long hours they'll be sitting up waiting (O don't be long)
While the cinders of you ride light as a feather on the glistening flanks of the waves.
O it'll be a glad day, Charlie, when the ship comes in and you'll lie down at last
With Lenin and Jack Reed and the rest of the boys.
And the red flag of the dawn flying in the East!

V

"Welcome, Charlie," Lenin will say, "how are you, boy?" and his hand will be in your hand.
And "How're things in the U. S. A.?" Jack Reed will ask with his eyes shining straight into yours.
And "Whom have you left in your place?" from Lenin, and "How will they get along without you?" will come Jack Reed's deep anxious voice.
And you will look at them with a smile, Charlie. "That's all right, boys," you will say
"I left fighters behind me, I left men that are molded of iron, of love and hate.
I left comrades behind me who will stand up straight when the old world falls.
They'll do the job. They'll take my place in the jails, they'll take my place in the factories, in the lecture-halls, on the street corners.
They'll be sure to be on the spot wherever there are fearless words to be said and fearless deeds to be done.
It's alright, boys, don't worry. They'll do the job."
That's what you'll say, Charlie, when they ask.
And Lenin and Jack Reed and the rest of the boys will be happy.
They'll lie down and rest their limbs and close their eyes with a sweet peace.
And the red flag of the dawn flying in the East.

VI

Home at last.
Lie down quietly, Charlie, stretch yourself, go to sleep.
Under the walls of the Kremlin the bed is soft.
The voices of children will lullaby you, the voices of men and women, of all workers and hopeful builders will weave a softness and a benediction over your tired sleep.
Lie down gently, Charlie, stretch yourself, go to sleep.
Ah, go t osleep, Charlie, go to sleep

And I know your eyes that are blind shall see, I know your immortal lips shall greet, the dim depths of the cinders of you shall leap up and hail
The red flag of the dawn that is flying, that is dancing up the East.

Ruthenberg and MacManus Commemorated By English Speaking Workers in Moscow

MOSCOW, March 8.—The following resolution has been sent to all Communist Party Central Executive Committees:

"We, three hundred English speaking workers, in memorial assembled in Moscow share your grievous loss in the death of two outstanding leaders of the Communist movement—MacManus and Ruthenberg. Your loss—our loss—is keenly felt by the revolutionary proletariat of the whole world. We must close up our ranks and carry forward the red banner of our fallen fighters." (Signed) Kruse, Chairman.

The meeting, held in the Club of the Executive Committee of the Communist International, was very impressive. The speakers were Duncan, Kolarov, Murphy, Katayama, Hoowich, and Hardy.

KELLOGG THINKS HE HAS BOUGHT SACASA GENERAL

Diaz Not Sure At All; Fears Confined War

WASHINGTON, March 8. — The department of state has been notified that its intrigues to detach some portions of the Liberal forces of Juan Sacasa, legal president of Nicaragua, from their allegiance to him, are meeting with partial success.

The commissioners who have returned to Managua after holding a conference with General Moncada of the Liberal army, and General Chon, Sacasa's minister of war, reported that General Moncada is willing to terminate the conflict by conducting negotiations with the forces of President Diaz through Minister Eberhardt, but is desirous first of securing the approval of his chief, Dr. Sacasa.

The consensus among Americans here is that should Sacasa order a continuance of the struggle it is expected that Moncada would open negotiations independently of Sacasa through Minister Eberhardt.

The usurping President Diaz is not so optimistic. In an interview with newspaper reporters, he has stated that he fears the conflict will continue, because Mexico and other countries have recognized Sacasa as president. He is calling for more U. S. marines to beat down the popular uprising against him.

U. S. Must Wreck Constitution.

MEXICO CITY, March 8. That the Nicaraguan constitution stands in the way of the program the United States has for setting up a protectorate in the Central American Republic, was pointed out here today.

Based on Article II of the Nicaraguan constitution, which asserts that her sovereignty is "inalienable" and that "no authority exists to arrange agreements or treaties contrary to the independence and integrity of the nation, of which in any way will impair its sovereignty," it is maintained here that President Diaz hasn't the authority for the negotiation of a treaty like the one submitted to the Nicaraguan Congress without first obtaining a constitutional amendment, which requires a minimum time of two years.

Dr. Sacasa's agent, Pedro Zepeda today denied a report from Washington that the liberals are suspending operations, but declared their resolved to continue their struggle.

NATIONALISTS RUN CONCESSIONS WITH EFFICIENCY

Chinese Displace British In Hankow Settlement

Hankow, January 28 (By Mail).—The force of events on January 3rd and 4th which compelled the Nationalist authorities to take over control of the British Concession here has thrown upon the shoulders of some of the secretaries in several Nationalist ministries a task which they must handle in addition to their regular work.

It is generally known that the Nationalist Government is handling the affairs of the concession through a Provisional Council. Just how the task is being carried out is not, however, so well known.

That it has been well done is amply attested by the fact that since the assumption of control by the Chinese authorities, there have been no untoward events, nor is there any evidence that the normal work of policing, cleaning and administering the small piece of territory has been in any way less well done than it was while under strictly British control. The same has been true, of co se, of the ex-Russian and ex-German concessions which, combined, form a larger portion of the so-called "concession area" in Hankow than the British. All this territory, for years under purely Chinese control, has been and is just as clean, just as well policed, just as well administered as it was under purely foreign domination.

Departments Handle Details.

The provisional council now handling the affairs of the British concession comprises the minister of foreign affairs the minister of finance and the minister of communications of the Nationalist government. It meets once a week. The details are delegated to four departments, secretariat, headed by Mr. T. C. Woo of the foreign ministry; finance, headed by Mr. T. H. Lo of the ministry of communications; public safety, headed by Mr. H. O. Tong of the finance ministry; sanitation, headed by Mr. C. Y. Lee of the ministry of communications.

These four meet daily and hear reports from the subordinates in their respective departments, issue all necessary orders, see to it that they are carried out and generally direct the administration. Any non-routine matters are left for decision by the provisional council.

Financial Control Nationalist.

The financing of the area is not to be shouldered by the Nationalist government directly. Pending the outcome to be reached as a result of the negotiations now going forward between the Nationalist government and the British diplomatic authorities, the method of finance will continue. The entire administration and direction of the affairs of the concession area at the moment, surely provisional.

There have been no changes who so ever in the usual course of affa rs inside the British concessions since the intervention of the Nationalist government. The entire staff of the municipal office remains the same, save for the British heads, who no longer function. The police, now, are all Chinese. The Indians who formerly were used as traffic officers no longer are used. The new Chinese police have been recruited from excess men on the police roster in the two special areas which were formerly the Russian and German concessions.

Unemployed Workers Hounded by Coast "Guardians of Law"

By Wm. S. MURPHY.
(Worker (Correspondent)

SACRAMENTO, Cal., March 8.—It seems we unemployed have broken the law by being out of work. The authorities are constantly threatening us with arrest, when the band of unemployed becomes too large.

You know the charge they make against us—"Idleness". We dare not break the law further by begging.

It is also against the law for us to even beg.

Every morning we call up the business houses, asking them for work, and you should hear them curse. The police threaten to run us out of this city and there will be no place else to go. The seasonal work will not start up for some time yet and I don't know but what it will be a pretty good idea to go to jail for a while.

I asked a councilman the other day, and he said if they fed the hungry here they would come from all over the United States.

So they let the unemployed rustle their own grub on a "breadline back of Hart's restaurant", and when that draws too many out-of-job workers, the police have a round-up and drive them out to no one knows where.

Police Search For Secret Gang.

NORTH ARLINGTON, N. J., March 8.—Police today continued an investigation in the vicinity of an abandoned copper mine for clues which might lead to the identity of members of a weird, black robed cult reported to have been meeting in one of the mine pits

D. Taylor Only One Who Prompt Action by Has Been Committioned Nurses Stops Fire

LONDON, March 8.—Deems Taylor is the only American composer under commission to write an opera for the Metropolitan Opera Company," said Otto Kahn today in clearing up the ambiguous statement that "another American was writing for the famous New York Opera House."

White-clad nurses dropped their charts and clinical thermometers at the Bay Ridge Sanitarium, Brooklyn, this afternoon and, forming a bucket brigade, put out a fire which started in the linen room of the building. Several minutes later the fire department apparatus pulled into the hospital yard and found the blaze had been extinguished.

DENNIS RETURNS TO COACH WALL STREET TOOLS

Charge in Nicaragua to Plot from Washington

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, March 8.—Lawrence Dennis, who was American charge of affairs in Nicaragua early in the present revolution, left tonight for Washington to become the Central American expert for the state department.

At the station to see him off were President Diaz, Foreign Minister Cuadro Pasos, Rear Admiral Latimer, American Minister Eberhardt and a crowd of government officials and foreigners.

Dennis was the tool through whose instrumentality Diaz was illegally made president.

The battle of Jinotega was won by the liberals. An airplane, with American aviators, was brought down but succeeded in getting back to Managua last night.

Conservatives Scurrilous.

General Bartolome Viquiz has been named by the Nicaraguan congress as first designate, a position equal to the vice-presidency.

A conservative newspaper here publishes scurrilous articles against the liberals, and includes the names of several American citizens who protested to the commander of the U. S. naval forces.

It is reported that a second British warship has arrived at Corinto.

The commander of the American warship Tulsa, interviewed tonight, said:

"I have not been advised that any American marines have been killed in Nicaragua and I do not believe the rumors."

Dr Sacasa in his statement, said:

"I have not been informed, except in that form reported by the American press."

Liberals Confident.

"The town in Managua and all other towns has not been removed.

While I do not wish it, the American forces must fight to sustain President Diaz.

"I have all the men I require in the interior and could end the war in three days were it not for American intervention. The men will not backdown there personally."

Dr Sacasa said he cabled all over the here cheerfully awaiting the result and hoping for a successful termination of the strife.

Relates Tactics Used By Sigman Machine to Sign Men For Union

Morris Langer, one of the workers employed by Sigman Jacobs to take out a card and pay a fine to the reactionary machine, finds himself held up by Dubinsky's agents as a kind of an example to the rest of the workers.

Alovis has issued the following statement, exposing the coercion, and repudiating Dubinsky, Sigman & Co.

"I wish to state to all members of Local 10, that I consider Dubinsky and all his bootlickers the most unscrupulous bunch that ever had control of our local. Dubinsky, knowing the poor economic circumstances in which I happen to find myself at the present time, has through the most infamous agent who is still on the pay-roll of our local, Frailing, come to an understanding with my employer, that I either take a working card or I will be sent down from the job.

"Being in dispair, due to my economic conditions, I feel that I have committed an unpardonable error against all the workers who are fighting to drive out Sigmanism and Dubinskyism from our union. I was forced to take out a card and pay part of a fine which was imposed upon me, because I refused to do it and thus breaking our union. I wish to state that I will continue to fight side by side with the workers of the other crafts in our union until the Dubinsky, Sigmans, and Ninfos are driven out of our union."

Three Killed by Blast In Coal Mine

WAISENBURG, Colo., March 8.—Fatality investigation of the fire of a room in the Cadell mine of the Pacific Coal Mining Co. resulted in the death of three men a few days ago, when a shell in the hands of one of them struck a stick of unexploded dynamite.

The men were working alone on the 1,400-foot level when the tragedy occurred. Their bodies were not discovered until an hour later, when a crew above noticed that the compressed air tank from which they received that they were empty.

The men killed were Frank Rivera, Alex Archuleta and D. Shapard.

Shepard had been mining for 27 years. He had a wife, two children, and two step-children. His wife had begged him not to go down to work in the dangerous mine just before his shift began, but he told her they needed the money badly.

Mellon Will Endeavor To Gyp Small Investor In Liberty Loan Bonds

WASHINGTON, March 8. — The U. S. Treasury has worked out a clever scheme, if the banking and investing public bites, to wheedle it out of $23,000,000 of the liberty loan interest.

The plan is to persuade holders of second issue liberty bonds, bearing four and a half percent interest to trade them in for treasury certificates, bearing three and a half percent interest.

The bait by which liberty bond holders will be led into the trap is the offer of two months interest at the old rate after the exchange is made.

Close observers think the large holders will not be much affected by this maneuver, but that some small investors may be induced to trade.

WORKER CRAZED THRU POVERTY TAKES HIS LIFE

Kills Himself, Wife and Five Children

ITHCA, N. Y.—Want and poverty caused Guy M. Taylor to take the lives of his wife and five little children and his own life, several days ago, at his home on Columbia St.

Searching day in and day out for a job, and being turned down, wanting to work, wanting to live and to see his children, Guy M. Taylor, a young, able man only 36 years of age, became a victim of this unemployment trap.

Nothing Much to Expect.

Investigations show that the Taylor family of seven were destitute, according to the press, and there was still $15.97 coming to Taylor from his last job in the Russell Corporation.

In order to justify their position as defenses of the present defunct economic system the tabloid yellow press blames this crime to a deranged mentality, saying that the family was not at all in its worst economic position, there still being $11.97 in the family treasury and "no children to feed and clothe".

Burden Feels Guilt.

A flock of churchmen will perform a quartet will sing, at the public funeral Rev Bleakine will lead the service.

The church, feeling guilty, blames the community. Rev Bleakine says "It seems to me a social sin to allow a family to be so destitute that the husband and father should thought himself forced to take the lives of his family and himself. We are all guilty, and I feel as guilty as the rest."

Who is This Public.

Mr. Bleakney does not explain whether he means by the "community" the well living around Taylor, who may be at any time in the same position if they should lose their job, if the, should fail to provide the money pay to keep the wolf from the door. Or the big interests who live on the back of the workers, the Garys, who crush the life of the workers for profits, the Fords who speed the very soul out of the workers and send them to their graves; the John D's, who send troops into Mexico to kill the Mazi can workers for oil.

Janitors' Union Sign An Agreement in Chi.

CHICAGO, March 8. (FP).—Up to 8700 a month is the wage of apartment house janitors in Chicago under the agreement signed by the Chicago Flat Janitors union with the Chicago real estate board, running from March 1'to March 1, 1931. The average wage of flat janitors in the Chicago union is between $200 and $300 a month. About 6500 janitors are included. Their pay is based on the rental value of the buildings they take care of.

Rumors that Wm. F. Quesse, himself an oppressed janitor when he organized the new powerful union, left an estate of over $500,000 at his death last month are silenced by the probate of his will which disposes of barely a quarter of that sum. He was president of the flat janitors (Local 1) and also international president of the Building Service Employees International Union at the time of his death.

CZARIST JEWELS WORTH MILLIONS FOR SALE SOON

British Syndicate Puts Diamonds on Display

LONDON, March 8.—Serried ranks of sparkling brilliants will be laid on a table at Christie's salerooms on March 14 and 15 for the inspection of the nobile and will be sold on the day following. They are part of the historic state jewels of Uzarist Russia.

According to a brief explanation given in the catalogue, the jewels were purchased by a British syndicate. They originally formed part of a collection not belonging to any individual, but were set apart for national celebrations and court functions. They were in no sense the personal jewels of the last members of the Romanoff Dynasty.

Date Back to 18th Century.

Most of the pieces date from the Eighteenth century, and many of them were made during the reigns of the Empress Elizabeth and the Empress Catherine II by the arcted ted French and Russian jewelers of the time.

One outstanding diamond to be sold is believed to be the Polar Star, ranked third by the Russian regalia after the Orloff and Shah" stones. It is a large rosy-white oval brilliant mounted as a brooch. On the setting is engraved the weight of the stone, in 12-32 carats, and according to the old Russian inventory the value was held to be 115,000 roubles, or $125,000 in present-day values, which is one "fourth of the reputed worth of the Orlaff diamond.

Dazzling Diamonds

Another dazzling piece is the "Imperial Crown," entirely composed of double rows of fine brilliants in borders of smaller stones, and surmounted by a cross of six large brilliants. There is also a wonderful Persian panoply, silver mounted with gold borders finely chased with flowers and foliage in varicolored gold, in the style of Louis XV, the panels and borders being richly overlaid with garlands and sprays of flowers, trophies and foliage in white and fancy colored diamonds.

Keen Bidding Expected

There are likely to be keen bidding for a diamond tiara designed as bear ears and foliage and set with trefoiled and oval brilliants. A white sapphire forms the largest center stone.

Among the before of diamond buckles and pendants, buttons, chatelaine slides and one there is one beautiful little bracelet dated "Le 24 Octobre 1815" and inscribed with the imperial initial "A." It is believed to have been given by the younger brother of Czar Alexander, the future Nicholas I, to his fiancee, Louise Charlotte daughter of Frederick William II of Prussia.

Bootleggers Steal Ambassador's Wine

LONDON, March 8.—News of a big liquor seizure, somewhere between the New York piers and the French embassy in Washington, reached here tonight.

Six months' supplies of wines, liquors and spirits, destined to the embassy, have disappeared, and the United States customs officers have advised the French government that they have been unable to trace the consignment, intimating that they believe it was in the possession of bootleggers.

France—a Nation of Conscripts.

The French government has placed the whole population with the exception of children on a military basis.

Only the legislators who passed the bill are exempted from service in the army and navy.

French women have great cause for rejoicing—they have been placed on an absolute equality with men so far as the right to be slaughtered for French imperialism is concerned. The National Women's Party, now trying to defeat the women's 48-hour bill in Albany will doubtless rejoice at this new evidence of the progress of their cause.

Only the Communists in the chamber of deputies voted against the militarization of the French nation. The socialists took the lead in advocating this legislation.

Other recent legislation authorizes the fortification of the entire eastern frontier at a cost of 7,000,000,000 francs.

The principal industry of France at present is militarism. This should be a source of great comfort for those who sobbed aloud during the "war to end war" as the four-minute speakers pictured the plight of bleeding France.

The French workers and peasants, upon whom the chief burden of this huge war scheme falls, will not lose all hope. Far from it. They can be certain that the conscript armies mobilized by the imperialists, containing hundreds of thousands of their class, will some day imprison their oppressors in the fortresses and dissolve the chamber of deputies at the point of the bayonet.

Conscript armies imperialism must have—it can get the necessary forces in no other way. But conscript armies are made up largely of the masses—with arms in their hands.

French imperialism is thus creating the forces that will destroy it.

A Great Movement Asks Your Aid.

The defense of class war prisoners, the front line fighters of the labor movement, is a first charge on the services of every class conscious working man and working woman.

No higher duty falls upon our shoulders than to aid those, who because of their loyalty to their class and their devotion to the political and industrial organizations of their class risk life and liberty without thot of gain or compensation.

We have in this country an organization founded for the purpose of defending all class war victims regardless of political affiliation, regardless of what section of the working class movement they belong to or what shade of political conviction they lean to. It is the International Labor Defense.

This organization, since it was launched has hung up a worthy record, one that even the enemies of the labor movement have not been able to successfully assail.

It has come to the assistance of members of the I. W. W., members of the American Federation of Labor, Communists, anarchists and workers that did not belong to any organization, industrial or political. It has financially assisted the workers behind the prison bars and their dependents at home. It has done this without ostentation or boasting.

The I. L. D. has expended scores of thousands of dollars in legal defense and in bringing the cases of victims of class injustice before the working class public. It needs money to continue the work. And since it has no wealthy "angels" on the string, it depends for financial support on the masses. Thousands of dollar bills make up for the scarcity of thousand dollar bills. By means of bazaars, mass meetings and affairs of a similar nature the I. L. D. raises the money to fulfill its purpose.

Beginning on March 10 and continuing until the 13th, the New York section of the I. L. D. will hold a bazaar in Star Casino, 107th Street and Park Avenue. This affair should have the support and active co-operation of every progressive worker in New York City. Not only should workers attend the bazaar but they should bring their fellow workers along. Last year's bazaar held by the New York I. L. D. was the most successful of its kind ever held in this country. It was the means of enabling the organization to provide victims of capitalist courts with legal aid and the dependents of those who were sent to prison with financial assistance. We urge our readers to help make this year's bazaar even more successful.

There is no worthier task than serving the "Red Cross" of the militant labor movement. That is the I. L. D.

Cotton Manufacturers Oppose International Confab on Less Hours

American cotton manufacturers are not yet willing to meet in a world conference for the 55-hour work week, textile trade papers in New York report this reaction to inquiries based on the English cotton manufacturers' proposal that such a conference be held. The Federation of Master Spinners meeting now in Manchester, England, seriously suggested a world shorter work week conference.

"I do not believe the American Cotton Mfrs. Assn. is interested in an international labor problems," Secretary-Treasurer William McLaurine of that organization stated to the trade paper, Daily News Record. Federal government officials in Washington refused official comment but indicated that such a conference as proposed is impossible under government ownership because labor regulation involved is for state action.

TELEPHONE MAKES HUGE EARNINGS; SETS NEW RECORD

McCulloh States Profit Not Compensatory

The sum of 184 million dollars was taken in by the New York Telephone Co. during 1926, of which 27 millions were net profits, surpassing the previous year's record by 7½ millions. This amounts to an income of $8.93 per share as compared to $8.50 in 1926.

After deducting all expenses and increasing the capital stock of the company, a dividend of $7.32 per share was paid to the stockholders as compared to $4.46 in 1925.

Despite this huge increase of the year's profit the president of the company, J. S. McCulloh, is quoted as saying: "Such a return is insufficient and non-compensatory, especially when it considered that the fair present value of our property, upon which the return should be computed, is in excess of its book cost.

CURRENT EVENTS

barons are feeding to the tillers of the soil in the United States.

* * *

THERE will not be a strike in the bituminous coal industry this year by decree of John L. Lewis. This means that John has handed the operators a blank check and gave them permission to write their own figures. He has surrendered the miners' demands in advance. The man whose fat salary was increased to $12,000 at the recent convention is not ready to even make a bluff at fighting the operators. This is the type of labor leader who is always blowing off his bazoo against the Communists. Is it any wonder?

* * *

GREAT BRITAIN'S financial situation is now showing the effects of the coal strike. By clever financial juggling the strain was hidden during the struggle, but the truth could not be smothered forever. So far this year the bank of England has lost approximately $6,230,000 of gold and is unable to check the outgo. Foreign loans in the London market are being discouraged even tho the Old Lady of Threadneedle Street hates to see her Wall Street suitors go fall heir to the rejected pickings.

* * *

British coal owners hope for a strike in the bituminous fields in the United States, in the expectation that they may recoup their losses of last year. Should a strike take place despite the decrees of John L. Lewis we may witness the disgraceful spectacle of British-mined coal being shipped in the interest of profits to break a strike of American miners as American-mined coal was last year shipped to break the British strike. It is a vicious circle.

* * *

A writer in the New York Tribune commenting on international events observes that "even some members of the labor party now see the reason for sending British troops to Shanghai." This is stale news. Some of them see a good reason why troops should be sent anywhere the interests of the empire are jeopardized. Ramsey MacDonald sent warships to make a demonstration against Canton when he was premier and airplanes to rain bombs on Mesopotamia. The right wing labor leaders are imperialistic. Their interests are identical with the ruling classes. Why should they not support the empire?

* * *

A French gentleman with the rather elongated cognomen of M. Joseph Dugue de la Fauconnerie, in addition to being a chevalier of the Legion of Honor has now been caught in an affair of dishonor, he having swindled hundreds of speculative Frenchmen of their good francs in return for engraved pieces of paper which promised the investors a return of 14 per cent on an investment in a hog farm. This fellow was a hog for money. Those who gave him their dough are now grunting but it is too late. A title is nothing to sneeze at by a fellow on the make.

Two Starving Men Are Taken to a Hospital In Our "Great" City

On the verge of death from starvation, two men were admitted to Bellevue Hospital yesterday.

One of them collapsed in the Municipal Lodging House. The other was found on the sidewalk at South Ferry. The former gave his name as Harry White, twenty-five. He said that he was homeless and that he had gone without food for two days. The other described himself as Daniel Gorringe, 52, an unemployed longshoreman.

Scarcely able to whisper due to undernourishment, Daniel Collins, thirty-eight, of 124 Montgomery St., Tomkinsville, was found at the foot of Whitehall Street yesterday by a patrolman. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital. He said he was a longshoreman out of work and had eaten little for several weeks.

The Manager's Corner

208 PAGES FOR 5 CENTS

Two hundred and eight pages of matter, each page fourteen inches by ten, illustrated with beautiful pictures in many colors, weighing in all a pound and half—all for five cents. This is the glittering offer made by the Saturday Evening Post, the colossus of the capitalist magazine world. It taken no little gumption and no little brains to withstand such a tempting proposition.

But let us examine the proposition more carefully. One hundred and five full pages are devoted to advertising paid for at the rate of thousands of dollars per page. In addition to this, fully one half of the remaining space is devoted to part page advertising. All of this advertising is, of course, paid for by the biggest capitalist firms in America. The reading matter, which is deftly interwoven with the highly colored lithographs, is simply a thin sugar-coating, to disguise the magazine's real character, as a mere catalogue for the sale of commodities and incidentally as a convenient vehicle for the promulgation of capitalist ideas.

The Saturday Evening Post is typical of all capitalist periodicals. Such publications are not printed to the interests of the masses of the workers. They are published in the interests of the millionaire advertisers, and their primary aim is simply the selling of wares.

The DAILY WORKER cannot and will not dangle before the eyes of the workers the empty baubles with which the capitalist press decoys its readers. The intelligent worker will brush aside with contempt these gewgaws of capitalist journalism. Realizing their true character and the purpose, he will read and support the only paper which is dedicated to his interests.—BERT MILLER.

ORGANIZE THE TRACTION WORKERS!

of overcrowded conditions and consequent overwork, under the relentless drive of foremen, starters, dispatchers, superintendents, company stool pigeons, spies, "Breakies" and what not; when it learned, also, to what extent they are underpaid, exploited during unbelievable long hours, always under the fear of loss—no jobs for the least excuse or none at all—when the realization of these facts grow upon one, it becomes a matter of increasing wonder that human beings have been able to hold out under such conditions.

That these conditions can be maintained year in, year out, and at the same time the work can be done with as little injury and loss of life to the public as has occurred, is a fact which becomes utterly understandable.

Little Pay for Knowledge.

"They Men Know Their Jobs" is the slogan of The Interborough Rapid Transit Company. But it is not to be concluded that in this admission is contained any cash value for the men. Every sophisticated traction worker knows that this slogan is of, be sort which is Not for Publication.

If you are a guard or conductor, for instance, on the subway, and if in the last year you have hung up a clean record in avoiding the constant danger of getting off the trailing cars of your customers by a too hasty closing of the doors in the overlasting subway jams, you understand that for this commendable feat, the company slogan does not mean that you are entitled to a man's pay. You know that you will receive approximately $25 to $30 per week for your heroism, that is, if you have not been rush enough at some time during the past decades to have indulged yourself in the rare luxury of an Interborough strike.

Life Behind Wall.

If you are an agent, that is, a person whose sole mission in life is forever to pass nickels through a hole in a glass wall at people who are never to know you and with whom you are likewise fated never to become acquainted, and if through out a whole week of the most skillful manipulation, you have been unable to pass off nine of these disks for the required ten, or even nineteen for the usual twenty, you do not expect to have your Saturday afternoon and Sunday off in order to nurse your gathering gloom. You know that your work requires you to be on the job 12 hours a day, 7 days a week, each week of 84 hours, as long as the others, during the whole year of 365 days. And for this job you, too, will receive no more than the princely average of about $32 per week.

Walking Thru the Night.

If, worse luck, you are a track walker, that is, you are a "Wop," a "Pollack," a "Hunky," whose calling, as the saying goes, is to massage the subway walls, perhaps to grease the rails or help repair weak ones, to gather up papers and refuse, to walk endlessly, wearily along the tracks during the gloomy subway nights, eyes strained for the treacherous defective rail; if that is your mission in life, you have not the heart, "damn foreigner" that you are, to hold up the company for more than the $18, $22, $24 which your unskilled efforts scarcely deserve.

Hidden Fatalities.

You are only too thankful that you have thus far been able to spare the company the unpleasantness of having had to gather up your scattered remains after your much too intimate meeting with a speeding and heedless train, a fateful experiment which an indiscoverably large percentage of your fellow workers are trying out weekly; for you know, too, what so few of the public ever learn what so few responsible city officials seem to be aware of, or if they are aware of it, whnt they so successfully avoid dealing with; the fact that death is too frequent and unpleasant a visitor in your vocation in life for the company always to give undue publicity of his unwelcome visits.

Of course, your wife and children must know, and perhaps even your friends, if you have any, but what need is there for the company to upset the public with these unpleasant details? Yet this is but a small part of the story!

The next section will deal with a further elaboration of the conditions under which the traction employes work and will be followed by a section on the "Company Union" of the Interborough Rapid Transit Company.).

"Was Greeley Right?" Asks Worker Who Died On Diet of Garbage

By S. E. BRANCH
(Worker Correspondent).

SEATTLE, Wash., March 8.—"Go West, Young Man," may have been a sensible bit of advice in 1865. It certainly isn't convincing now, when the social system in the United States has grabbed most of the stuff that's worthwhile in this country.

One thing is certain. Tony Stemberger who was found unconscious on top of Profanity Hill the other morning must have lost all faith in Greeley's advice. Tony had been living on the stuff he found in the city garbage dumps—on the doctors at the hospital said. For three days he was kept alive by injection of food into his veins. Then he died.

Tony Stemberger died as a result of the lack of garbage cans in Seattle, one of the richest cities on the Pacific Coast. At one time a political party used the slogan, "A full dinner pail," (filled up with sawdust). Well, a "full garbage can" slogan has not been used yet. An appropriate slogan for the next campaign for the Wall Street "Hoys of 1928" ought to be "Bigger and Fuller Garbage Cans," in order to keep some members of the working class from starving between elections.

Boston Capitalist Sheet For Revival of Defunct Reactionary Newspaper

FRED T. DOUGLAS
(Worker Correspondent)

BOSTON, March 8.—Workers of Boston, pondering over the sudden death of C. E. Ruthenberg, were given another shock today, when the Boston Transcript, organ of reaction, came to the front in support of the defunct newspaper "Dnl" (Daya) mouthpiece of the counter-revolutionary parasites who are seeking to raise funds to carry on a futile campaign to recoup their ill-gotten former holding in the Workers' Soviet Republic.

For sheer maulacity, the Transcript outdoes itself in an editorial. The pentup vermin of nine long years is loosed on the heads of Lenin, Trotsky and the Soviet Republic leaders in an effort to place a lynx over the recently arrived Kerensky whom they refer to as "a good man, an idealist, a well-wisher of the world as well as of the Russian people".

This outburst of rabid fascism must be met by the working class of America with renewed activity in building up the circulation of the "DAILY WORKER" the only English speaking daily carrying international news of interest to the workers, clearly, truthfully and fearlessly.

INTERNATIONAL LABOR DEFENSE WILL CELEBRATE PARIS COMMUNE AT BAZAAR

The Paris Commune celebration will be held this year on Sunday, 2 p. m. the fourth day of the International Labor Defense Bazaar in the Star Casino, 107th Street and Park Ave., March 10-13.

This monumental proletarian event which for the first time in history placed a workers' government at the head of a community and has ever since been a source of revolutionary inspiration, will be a very appropriate achievement to celebrate at the bazaar.

In spite of the combined onslaught of the French and German militarists to crush the workers, the communards carried on for two months. Finally, however, on March 18, 1871, the commune was overthrown in a swelter of blood. Approximately 13,000 workers were brutally murdered. The walls of Paris were besmirched with

Railroad Telegraphers In St. Louis Demand The Six-Day Week

ST. LOUIS, (FP).—Commenting on the general agitation in labor ranks for the 5-day week, members of the Order of Railroad Telegraphers are making themselves heard in pleas for abolishing the 7-day week in their occupation. J. A. Bachman writes in the February issue of the Union's Magazine:

"I do not expect to see the day when I will be working 6 days a week as my time is nearly over, having put in 29 years of 7-day weeks and the greater portion of the days were of 10 to 12 hours duration, too. So I cannot be accused of advocating this reform from a purely personal and selfish standpoint.

A total of 479 new members enrolled with the union during the month of January.

parts of human bodies, while the Seine for weeks was a river of blood.

Every year the workers of the world honor the memory of those militant pioneers. This year, the fifty-sixth anniversary, is going to be made the biggest celebration yet held in New York. Prominent speakers including Juliet Stuart Poyntz, William F. Dunne and Joseph Brodsky will be there.

This occasion will be a renewal of our memorial pledge, to defend the interest of the workers against the common enemy. All workers are invited to attend.

Comrades and Fellow Workers:

After a year's heroic struggle of the Passaic textile workers, the mill barons were forced to submit to a union in the textile industry of Passaic. They are however putting obstacles in the way of maintaining such an organization. Although the strike is almost over, they are taking the workers back very slowly, with the result that thousands of families are without means of existence. Their children are hungry.

There are many families whose sole support were sent to jail in their money as soon as possible, no matter how much you have collected. Send the money immediately to the General Relief Committee, 799 Broadway, Room 225, also ask for more coupons to sell.

The office is open from 9 a. m. to 7 p. m. daily.

Furriers Scoff At Schachtman "Dime Store"

Joint Board Issues Rules For Building Union

"The 10 Cent Store," is the name given by the fur workers to the registration headquarters which were opened up yesterday by the Long Island officials of the International Fur Workers' Union.

In an appeal issued by the International, workers are urged to "repudiate the Communist-led Joint Board" by registering and paying ten cents a week for all dues in arrears.

Workers See Trick.

But you can't fool the workers. "Yes, pay 'em ten cents now," said one union member, "then as soon as they have you on the list, up go the dues to fifty cents or more. Let them keep their ten cent union. We know who is looking after our interests—and it's not that bunch of fakirs."

Observers passing the "ten cent headquarters" late yesterday afternoon, noticed police, detectives, members of the bomb squad and members of the industrial squad. But fur workers? Just one lone tool of the International, who was supposed to act as a puller-in, but who yelled for protection if he saw a fur worker walking on the other side of the street.

Join Board Warns.

In a leaflet being distributed to the fur workers today, the Joint Board shows that it is awake to the International's union-smashing designs, and warns the workers that President Otter Schachtman and his associates are going to try to force the fur workers to register just as Morris Sigman tried in the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union.

The International officials are relying on gangsters to carry out their plans, says the Joint Board; but every fur worker will be protected against gangsters now just as they were protected during the strike.

How to Beat Otzer.

Then follows a set of "Instructions to Fur Workers."

1. Don't carry on any discussions or quarrels in the shops.
2. Don't make any stenographs. Bring your complaints to the office of the Joint Board.
3. Don't register with the Long Island 10 cent store union.
4. Defend yourselves against the Long Island sluggers whenever they attack you.
5. Don't take any orders from the Long Island henchmen. Ignore them. Don't go to their meetings.
6. Come to Joint Board shop meetings promptly.
7. If there is a Long Island prosecutor in your shop, don't permit him to provoke you. There must be order in the shop while you work.
8. All fur workers should pay their dues to the Joint Board, and also the special tax of $25 voted at last week's local meetings.

Already a number of union members who have jobs have paid the special tax in full, and in this concrete way pledged their support to the Joint Board in this crucial fight.

Chicago Gangsters to Face Trial March 10; Killed Cop in Brawl

CHICAGO, March 8.—The trial of Agustin Morales, accused of the murder of Policeman Lyman J. Stahl, at Melrose Park, Dec. 7th, will come up before Judge Harry B. Miller of the criminal courts on the 10th.

Politics has evidently been at work in this case. The state's attorney's office has put Levy and Byrnes, the two "hanging prosecutors" on the job. Melrose Park demands its victim. The coroner's inquest did not reveal sufficient evidence even to hold Morales to the grand jury, and all impartial investigators are convinced of his absolute innocence.

Morales' attorney, Mary Belle Spencer, is confident that she will secure not only an acquittal but compensation for the accused. The case has attracted considerable attention. One professional man in Iowa, who never saw Morales, has been sending him boxes of food to the county jail.

SOVIET UKRAINE GIVES JEWS ON LAND A COUNTY

Have Their Own Local Government

MOSCOW, March 8. — The first self-governing Jewish community ever established in Russia was decreed today by the Ukrainian government.

The Presidium of the Ukrainian Central Executive Committee announced that it has created a separate Jewish county in Kherson Province where, with the help of American money administered through the Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, more than 2,000 Jewish families have been settled upon the land.

The total population of the new Jewish county is 18,000, of which eighty-seven per cent is Jewish.

Its capital will be the town of Boryslava Soobsantsa. The local self-government will be exercised through powers as all other Soviet counties.

If the county so wishes, the Jewish language will be used officially, but the Laws of the Soviet Union greet the establishment of the county enthusiastically, seeing in it the first step towards carrying out Kalanin's promise—the creation of an autonomous Jewish republic.

Bishop Brown to Speak For Portland I. L. D.

PORTLAND, Ore., March 8.—William Montgomery Brown, the "heretic" bishop who shocked the good citizens of Denver several days ago, will speak at Lincoln High School Wednesday evening March 16. Bishop Brown is touring the country under the auspices of the I. L. D.

Miners Flock to See "Breaking Chains"

PITTSBURGH, Pa., March 8.—Coal and steel workers are flocking to see "Breaking Chains," the Russian film which created such a sensation in New York.

Because of the popularity of the picture, two additional towns will be placed on the I. L. D. schedule. The film will be shown at Tishler's Hall, Coverdale, Pa., on March 21, and at the Majestic Theatre, Beffleyville, March 22.

"Sammy" Insull Busy in New England

(By SIDNEY BLUMFIELD.)

THE great fight between the Samuel Insull group of Chicago and the New England Power Association for the control of the gas, electric and hydro-electric companies of New England goes on rapidly.

One of the largest hook-ups in the history of the New England Power was completed last week when the Millbury, Mass., station of the company was connected with a new power station at Sherman, on the Deerfield river.

The Sherman station, which has recently been completed, generates 10,000 horse-power which, at 110,000 volts, pours into the high voltage lines at Davis Bridge (Mass.) and thence on to the Millbury station for distribution to the company's consumers in Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

No Worker Need Apply.

The Sherman station is wholly automatic and needs the presence of no man to perform its functions. The new hook-up will increase the company's annual output by 25,000,000 kilowat hours, bringing the total of the New England Power Company's developments on the Deerfield river to 200,000,000 kilowat hours.

A few months ago practically all the gas and electric service in Rhode Island (controlled chiefly by the Narragansett Light & Power Company) was swallowed up by the New England Power, which is an association controlling subsidiaries under the titles of New England Power Co., Connecticut River Co., and the Rhode Island Power Transmission Co., and operates its system over an area of 8,000 square miles in Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

Insull Competes.

Despite such apparent control of light and power by the New England company, the Insull interests are giving the former a merry run. Only last Autumn a sensation was created in New Hampshire when it was learned that the Insull interests bought up public utilities in Manchester, Nashua, Keene, Milford, Hillsboro and Ashland, New Hampshire, paying for the shares of the local corporation two and three times their value.

Before the local reformers had time to protest against the encroachment of the Insull interests the public utilities commission of New Hampshire, at the efforts of the Insull's lobbyists, rushed thru permission to put these local companies together in one holding company known as the Public Service Companies of New Hampshire

An Insull Raid.

This sudden move on the part of the Insull interests put them on the Merrimac River, which flows thru most of the large textile manufacturing cities and towns of New England and also gives the Insull group the better position to compete with the New England group.

No sooner had the Insull group announced its big stake on the Merrimac than the New England group announced the purchase of the Lawrence, Mass., Gas and Electric Co., which supplies light and power to the city of Lawrence, which is on the Merrimac and one of the largest textile centers in the country, and also supplies light and power to the neighboring towns of Andover, North Andover, Methuen and Boxford, Mass.

Super-Power Base.

There is now no doubt that the Insull group is laying the basis for a huge super-power system that will connect their upper New York state and St. Lawrence systems with New England. Doubt has been dispelled by the latest developments in the state of Maine, which have consolised political forces of both old parties of that state.

The state of Maine has a law upon its books prohibiting the exportation of hydro-electric power outside the boundaries of the state. Herbert Hoover, Owen D. Young, the National Chamber of Commerce and Samuel Insull are the outstanding forces who are continually assailing this state government for maintaining such a law, which, they say, hampers not only the industrial and commercial development of the state but that of all the New England states.

To Change Law.

An energetic campaign conducted by large banking and power interests as well as the super-power interests of the country, is being directed against this law. Powerful politicians as well as lesser lights are being backed by plenty of money—and the 1928 primary and election campaign in this state will be watched by Wall Street with keen interest—and not a very passive interest either.

Wall Street claims that so long as Maine will not permit its power to be "exported," no complete superpowar system can be built up in the New England states. A super-power system; say the bankers, will connect New England, New York state, and Canada, thus enabling the transmitting of cheap electrical energy which the textile industry sorely needs to enable it to survive the race with Southern competition.

Boundaries Bother.

But all boundaries must first be wiped out—international as well as state. The servants of the private interests for the control of the water power in New York state is part and parcel of the fight in the New England states.

In the vanguard of the forces of these powerful interests stands the Insull group. This group has fired the first shot that has set the politicians of the state of Maine at each other's throat. In a radio speech broadcasted recently, thruout the state, former Governor Percival P. Baxter, placed his finger upon the issue which will be paramount in Maine's 1928 campaign.

Insull(i)ating Maine.

That issue revolves about the recent purchases by Samuel Insull, Chicago public utility magnate, of most of the hydro-electric development companies of Maine, his supreme purpose to get control of all the state's water power, developed and undeveloped, and the speculation as to what he will do with all this power he is rapidly clearing up.

In voicing his opposition to Insull's purposes, former Gov. Baxter expressed his "fear" that Maine's "white coal," the energy in its lakes and streams which now races unharnessed to the sea, will not remain within the borders of the state, to maintain little factories on the rivers, electrify railroads and provide cheap power for the farmer.

Fear for Farmers.

Former Gov. Baxter voices the sentiments of the small farmer, the little manufacturer and the rest of the elements who were instrumental in passing the anti-export law and who fear that this power will be but one of the links in the chain (which is being forged and which will eventually be completed) of super-power which will eventually rob New England of its greatest natural resources and turn it to the advantage of the big bankers who will dictate the economics as well as the political conditions of life in New England. He represents a losing element in the struggle between the little business man and Wall Street monopoly.

Buying Power.

Insull came to Maine a year ago about the same time that he angled for the public utilities of New Hampshire, and bought the Central Maine Power Company, paying for the common stock of the company more than three times what it was worth. This seems to be Insull's strongest weapon for, it "brings home the bacon."

Insull paid about $140 a share. Its market value is generally believed to be $40. And for purposes of taxation, that is to say the government out of money just as did Henry Ford and the rest of the "big guys," the government agents later fixed a value of $95. He then obtained the Bellast. (Me.) and Rumford (Me.) companies, in each of men believed to represent him took over the Aroostook (Me.) properties and within a fortnight Insull went into Portland and purchased the Cumberland company.

Begging Banger.

The only sizeable company now outside the Insull interests' ken is the Bangor company and the Insull interests are feverishly at work in their attempt to bag this company.

Besides the New England Power group, there is the Stone & Webster corporation which has several public utilities in New England. The main bond, however, is between the Insull group and the N. E. Power group. The Worcester Electric Light Co. and the Worcester Gas Light company will both soon go to the N. E. Power group—this is certain. In the meantime the Worcester companies' service is, to put it mildly, "rotten" and their charges for light and power are mounting while their property and equipment are deteriorating and no attempt is made to maintain proper equipment or service pending the invasion of the N. E. Power company, which already has a large general office in this city and whose huge towers carrying the high-voltage lines stand out in the outskirts of the city like giant electrical sentinels of modern industry.

Super-Power Profits.

It is only a matter of time when all the sources of light, heat and power in New England will be completely controlled by one group of bankers who will also dictate the conditions of life to the vast population of mill and factory workers as well as to the white collar workers and small business men. A super-power trust will at the same time introduce, if one may use the word, super-exploitation and wring super-profits from the sweat and blood of the already terribly exploited and starving workers of New England.

Hucksing the Stone Wall.

Former Gov. Baxter's fight against Insull is as potent as a goat's buck against a stone wall. The natural resources and the light and power and other public utilities should and must be hooked-up as a national and even international unit that will extend into Canada and Alaska to the north and Mexico and Central America to the south and even go further into South America.

This may eventually come about—but if the workers are not to be entirely ground to dust in this process of trustification and monopoly which brings the most brutal and soul-less Super-Powers in its train, in its wake, there must be a powerful union built, the demand must be raised for nationalization of these public utilities—they must be organized and a tremendous fight carried on for a workers' and farmers' govern which alone can administer the benefits of this power in the interests of the masses.

CHILE DICTATOR CONTINUES HIS RED BAITING

SANTIAGO, Chile, March 8.—The dictatorship of the Ibanez regime in Chile continues its unconstitutional and terroristic campaign. Arrests and deportations of liberals and Communists are the order of the day. Congressional immunity is being disregarded and no attempt is made to defend this right except that through the declaration that "urgent necessity must be met by extraordinary action."

One of the most high handed acts was the deportation of Felipe Urtiza, president of the court of appeals, he being charged with "corruption and obstruction of justice."

Ibanez says that the country is seething with Communism and that an attempt was being made to "bolshevize" the country. Closer investigation will prove him to be an agent of imperialism and that he is in their pay to rivet Chile closer to the exploitation interest.

Big Philadelphia Dress Strike Is Averted By Agreement Just Signed

PHILADELPHIA, March 8. (FP.)—Five thousand Philadelphia dress and waist makers are affected by the settlement made by the Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers' Union and 50 firms which united in an employers' association. The agreement does not give the five-day 40-hour week originally sought, but a 44-hour week for 1927.

Other conditions are pay for five legal holidays; minimum wage scales for week workers, price committees for piece workers; equal division of work in dull seasons; creation of a joint board of sanitary control; and machinery for adjustment of disputes. A general strike of the city's industry is avoided by the agreement, although a score of independent manufacturers remain unsettled. About 50 other independents are already dealing with the union.

International Woman's Day to Be Observed, Cleveland, on March 9

The Women Workers' Progressive League will celebrate International Woman's Day in Cleveland with a mass meeting at the Goodrich House, 1430 E. 31st St.

The league will attempt to bring home to the workers of Cleveland, both men and women, the necessity of the organization of women in industry, and also bring together in sympathetic organization the housewives and mothers who suffer equally with wage workers, from low wages, long hours, high rent and general economic conditions.

The speakers will be Flimbeth Magee, secretary of the Cleveland Consumers' League, who will speak on "Industrial Conditions of Women and Children in Ohio;" Tom Clifford, on the labor movement as it affects women; Mr. Jalliffee, of the Playhouse Settlement, on the problems of Negro organization; Mrs. Y. Lend, secretary of the Cleveland Committee on American Imperialism, on "Women and War." Sadie Van Veen, secretary of the league, will preside.

THUGS, ATTACKING SHOE PICKET, ARE BADLY TROUNCED

Shoe Workers to Meet Thursday Evening

In an attempt to smash the struggle of the shoe workers against wage cuts and sweat shop conditions, five gangsters in the employ of the E. and W. shoe factory, 441 Blake Avenue, Brooklyn, attacked and severely injured B. Hoenblatt, a picket, Saturday afternoon.

Armed With Knives.

Hoenblatt was picketing outside of the factory when the thugs, armed with knives and blackjacks, attacked him. Enraged by the attack, sympathetic bystanders trounced one of the gangsters. Gangsters and scabs very wisely stayed away from the shop yesterday.

There are more than eighty workers on strike at the E. and W. shoe factory. They are determined to fight the savage wage cuts that they have suffered recently.

A protest meeting against sweat shop conditions and wage cuts will be held by the Shoe Workers' Protective Union Saturday at the Brooklyn Labor Lyceum, 949 Willoughby Avenue, Thursday evening at 8 o'clock. John D. Dolan, president of the union, H. W. Wicks, general organizer, District 2 and Francesco Coco will be among the speakers.

The wretched working conditions in District 2 and suggestions for the improvement will be some of the questions discussed at the meeting. All shoe workers are invited to attend. Admission is free.

Armed Gangster Slashes Dress Picket

Fourteen Workers Arrested; Four Get Jail Term

Nathan Berman, member of dressmakers' Local 22, was attacked and severely slashed with knives early Monday morning as he was picketing the Ben Gershel Shop, 498 Seventh avenue. A. Babitz, a professional gangster who is now allied with the International, was arrested and charged with the crime and held under $2,500 bail in Jefferson Market Court.

Berman was attacked as he was walking on the picket line, and had his coat literally slashed to pieces. He received two long gashes about the body and was also cut on the face and hands. He was placed under the care of a physician.

The beating up and injuries of Berman are the most serious inflicted by Sigman's gangsters since the brutal attack upon Joseph Di Mola, an Italian cloakmaker, on January 3, which nearly cost him his life.

An unusually strong picket line at the shop of Miliare and Mandell at 243 West 38th street yesterday began the second week of picketing under the Joint Picket Committee formed by the furriers and cloakmakers. Police arrested fourteen pickets after scabs had gone up to the shops. Annetta Banker, Ben Greenberg, Mae Krenich, Marie Mannelli and Marie Feygold were sentenced to $10 fine or a day in jail and elected to serve the day. They were released late on Monday. All others were dismissed in Jefferson Market Court.

Workers' Case Postponed.

The case of Aaron Wortuns, of the Charles Meisel shop, who was attacked and beaten up by gangsters in front of his shop on February 23 and was framed up and arrested on the charge of assaulting one Morris Katz in the Bronx on February 24, was postponed until March 11. At the time he is charged with having attacked Katz, Wortuns was in bed recovering from the assault made upon him by gangsters.

Local 9 Meeting.

A membership meeting of finishers' Local 9 was announced today for Thursday evening, 7:30 in Stuyvesant Casino. Louise Hyman, manager of the Joint Board, will be the principal speaker.

Rights Choose Officers.

It was announced by the right wing officials of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union yesterday that Julius Hochman, one of the vice presidents, had been elected manager of the new International Joint Board of New York.

Hochman is said to have been elected last Friday night at a meeting "of delegates to the board." These "delegates" were unnamed.

Sport Club Formed by Cleveland Workers

CLEVELAND, March 8.—The organization of workers' sports is well under way here.

The Hungarian Young Workers' Athletic Club, whose membership is rapidly expanding, has made extensive plans for participation in all sports. The development of a football team is the chief concern of the club at present.

Young workers interested in sports are invited to join the club, the headquarters of which are at 4309 Lorain Avenue.

Jersey Politician Tells Mill Workers How Accidents Occur

CAMDEN, N. J. March 8.—The inside dope on how accidents in industry are caused was told the other day to a large number of workers of the Castle Kid Leather Co., by Deputy Labor Commissioner Roach. Declaring that 15 per cent of the accidents were caused by the negligence of the bosses, and that the workers were responsible for the remaining 85 per cent, this "safety expert" forgot to go into the details of piece-work, long hours, and physical exhaustion as elements entering into accidents of which workers are the victims.

Commissioner Roach also neglected to discuss the subject of undernourishment which is known to be such an important factor in causing "carelessness" with machinery, etc.

Ruthenberg's Influence to Be Felt As the Workers Wage "The Final Conflict"

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

THE United States government has been in existence for 150 years. Last year was its sesqui-centennial —150th anniversary.

The upholders of that government, its faithful adherents, especially those who benefit most from it, try to spread the fetish that this government is not only sacred but everlasting.

One often hears the phrase, "the best government on earth," that is drilled into the minds of the tens of millions of growing children thruout the nation's whole public school system.

That this governmental tyranny superseded a previous class rule is lost sight of. The possibility of this government disappearing in turn is ridiculed as something impossible. Those who advocate a change are treated as enemies of the state, arrested, imprisoned, placed on trial, condemned.

Yat being placed on trial has afforded many a Communist an opportunity to analyze the capitalist state, point out why it must crumble and disappear, and prepare the kind of social order—Communism—that must succeed upon the downfall of capitalism.

Thus Communists on trial reverse the indictment, and in the courts of the capitalist state itself, place capitalism on trial instead, showing that the inexorable development of events spells its doom, with no judge, jury or prosecutor needed to present the evidence, listen to the testimony or return the verdict. The verdict is written and needs only time for its fulfillment.

It was thus that C. E. Ruthenberg, whose name is carved highest on the list of the revolutionaries against capitalism, placed the profit social system on trial on four different occasions, in his trials in Ohio, New York and Michigan, and also as a witness for Communism at the trial of Comrade William Z. Foster, at St. Joseph, Michigan, under an indictment also growing out of the Bridgeman, Mich., raid on the Communist Party Convention.

"Change" is a word of terror to defenders of things as they are. The development of new ideas, a new social system is incomprehensible. It is undesirable. In the words of Theodore Roosevelt, denouncing the leaders of the Western Federation of Miners on trial at Boise, Idaho, those urging a change become "undesirable citizens." Yet Ruthenberg patiently tried to explain the change to his prosecutors.

At New York, for instance, the question was hurled at him by his prosecutor, "As I understand your program and manifesto, you state that there is a transition period between what you call the present capitalistic state and the proletarian state, is that right?"

"No, that is not right," replied Ruthenberg.

The next question, "There is no transition period between the capitalistic state and the Communist state?"

And again the answer, "Certainly not. The transition is between capitalism and Communism; between the social systems; not between the organization of these states."

"Q. Is the present state here a capitalistic state? A. Yes, in my view.

"Q. What is that? A. That is my view.

"Q. And it is desirable to change the present capitalistic state into a socialistic state? A. A proletarian state, yes, that is my view.

"Q. Proletarian. Between the time of changing from the present capitalistic government to the socialist government there is a transition period? A. Certainly not. There is no period between the time of changing, one succeeds the other.

"Q. Immediately?"

The prosecutor didn't get his answer. Here the court stepped in and the discussion continued as follows:

"Q. Is there a transition period from capitalism into socialism? A. The transition period from capitalism into Communism is the following: When the proletarian state is established it cannot at once establish Communism. The transition from capitalist production to Communist production may extend over the period of a decade, a generation, over 25 years, perhaps. I am unable to say, and no one else is able to say. The transition period is the period in which the proletarian state transfers the means of production from the capitalist class to society as a whole, and until the time when Communism is established in full" . . .

"Q. How is the change made from the existing state to the proletarian? How does it propose that the change should be made from the existing state to the proletarian state? A. My view of that is the following.

"Q. I am not particularly asking your own view. I am asking you how it is expressed in this Manifesto (the Manifesto of the Left Wing of the Socialist Party that resulted in the indictment).

"A. My view is the general Communist view, which I can only state in my own words, that capitalist production in its development brings about its own decay, its own decline, its own breakdown; that capitalist production inevitably thru its own conditions of existence produces such conditions as the world war; that a world war, an imperialist war, brings about the breakdown of capitalist production.

"I believe that the workers will capture the power of the state when the process in every country . . . the development of the capitalist system in its own contradictions have brought a situation in which the machinery of production of capitalism breaks down.

"For instance, one of these contradictions is the fact that, under the capitalist system, a surplus of commodities is produced which cannot be consumed in the home market. This surplus usually takes the form of machine products, products of iron and steel. This forces the capitalists of every capitalist country to seek sources in which they can dispose of these products.

Ruthenberg then went on to cite specific instances as illustrations of the breakdown of capitalism, concluding with:

"I believe that in this process there may come a point where . . . the capitalist government is no longer able to function, and in such a crisis, in self-defense, because of the necessity of carrying on production, the working class will establish its workers' councils, which becomes the government and function as the government in order that production may be established on a new basis, carried on for the benefit of the people.

But the defenders of capitalism blindly proclaim, "It can never be," while Communists point to every hour's development, over varying sections of the globe, as proof of their claims.

Ruthenberg's life was spent in teaching workers to understand why "the change" will take place and to organize the workers in order to take advantage of the first crisis that will make that change possible. Thus, in spirit, Ruthenberg will be present in "The Final Conflict."

"Broadcasting the Socialist S. O. S."

By ALEX JACKINSON

THE failing house of Socialism announced the other day plans to raise $250,000 to establish a radio broadcasting station to be known as WDERS in memory of Eugene Debs. How this sum is to be gotten was not stated; neither was word forthcoming as to whether they will appeal to the workers for the money or get it from the liberal bourgeoisie. It will probably be the latter. Once a movement fails, as miserably as has socialism in the class struggle, it will have a hard time separating the workers from their money. Socialism is obviously bankrupt in America. It has failed, was already in the hands of a receivership (the LaFollette surrender) and will soon be hurried under the debris of its own treacherous, class collaboration policy.

The station, once erected, will be operated in the "interest of all progressive movements and ideas," and in the aid of all struggles for social justice, in the tolerant and broad-minded spirit of Gene Debs. This statement was issued by the National Committee of the S. P. A further announcement by Morris Hillquit and Norman Thomas reads, in part: "No better or fitter memorial to the memory of Eugene V. Debs could be conceived."

That a broadcasting station broadcasting the revolutionary principles Debs lived and died for, would be a fitting tribute to America's pre-war revolutionist, there is no doubt. The radio could be utilized as an important means of propaganda, but in the hands of the socialists it will be of no benefit to the working class. It can't be. What can such avowed reactionaries as Abraham Cahan, Charney Vladeck, Sidney Hillman, Victor Berger, Joseph Baskin and others of their ilk who are on the board broadcast in the name of Debs? Will it be Sigman's speeches? The Forward's editorials? Socialist attacks upon the left wing? Or will they officially announce that they traded militant resistance for class collaboration, surrender and A. F. of L. leadership?

Hillquit speaks of "progressive movements" and tries to link Debs' name with it, no Debs was the only white progressive the socialists picture him. Is Sigman's legal adviser trying to apologize for Debs' revolutionary past by coating his memory with a veneer of "progressive" white wash. Is that what Debs rotted in prison for? Even in his declining years Debs would have rebelled against the dirty tactics employed by socialist "labor leaders" in the expulsion of Communists in the needle trades." And yet they speak of "social justice."

It won't help them any. The S. P. may raise the money. Their "New Leader" may continue to hobble along. The Rand School may still keep its doors open. They can even build a dozen radio stations, but fundamentally the party is hollow. It is like a homeless old man being kept alive by donations. They have one cry: Debs! Debs! and carry it around like a church sexton holding a donation plate. They exploited the name of Debs for a memorial meeting, and now it is being used for a broadcasting station. Well it won't fool anybody. The workers know which side of the fence the socialists are hiding behind.

In these days of rapidly moving events, of growing imperialism, and silence, awakening of the masses, the struggle for emancipation will soon come to a head. It is then that the remains of the socialist party will come up to the capitalist class. They always take the road of surrender in a crisis. It is the path they must take for no other road is as soft as the one of surrender.

Here is what Debs said about decisive crises: "these are trying days for us all, testing those who are upholding the banner of the working class in the greatest struggle the world has ever known against the exploiters of the world; a time in which the weak, the cowardly, will falter and fail, and desert. They lack the fibre to endure the revolutionary test. They fall away. They disappear as if they had never been . . ."

This applies to the socialist party. Workers should study those lines of Debs and see for themselves why the socialist party's idea of building a broadcasting station remains nothing else but the socialists, broadcasting their political impotence.

The Adult and the Young Worker

By M. HARRISON.

AMONG some adult workers we can find the attitude that the conditions of the young workers are not of great importance to the adults. Whether the young workers are organized or not, is considered of no great moment. This is a wrong attitude and must be corrected.

What is the economic position of the proletarian youth? As a result of the simplification of industry and the introduction of labor saving machinery the youth has more and more begun to take the place of, and eliminate the skilled adult workers. Some years ago the capitalists could very easily get cheap labor from the influx of workers from foreign countries. Today, with the new immigration laws, this cannot be done, and the bosses therefore have to depend upon the young workers to be the greatest source of cheap labor.

The young workers are a section of the working class. They are one of the most exploited sections of the working class, receiving less wages and working longer hours than the adults. They are unorganized and therefore are taken advantage of by the bosses. It is the young workers, who, finding their interests in conflict with the adults, fight shoulder to shoulder.

In all the struggles of the young workers, the Young Workers' League can always be found in the forefront. The Young Workers' League, for the youth unorganized, is the slogan of the "Organization of the Youth." It is the Young Workers' League which carried on continuous and systematic factory activity in order to better the conditions of the young workers in their respective shops.

It is also the Young Workers' League which points out the dangers of the imperialistic policies of the U. S. It educates the workers to the dangers of the new world wars. The youth of America is becoming more and more militarized. The numbers of young men in the Citizens' Training Camps and Reserve Officers' Training Corps is growing larger and larger, drilling and disciplining the youth into docile cannon fodder, to be used in the next war, in which the adult will also suffer. It is to the benefit of the adult workers to help organize the young workers, to build a strong youth movement, to build a powerful youth working class organization, to recruit for the Young Workers' League.

NICARAGUA AND CHINA

By WILLIAM PICKENS.

THE materialism of a government controlled by money, and the moral poverty of the American people, were never better exposed than in our recent relations to the little country called Nicaragua; there is almost no protest from the American people, even the their government has stepped into the quarrel among citizens of a weaker country and is deciding the matter, like any big bully, in favor of the party that it wants to win. This party is confessedly and professedly the non-progressive, non-liberal party of Nicaragua. By this action young Americans are to be impressed that anything is all right if only one is able to "get away with it"—and we are supposed to marvel at the growth of domestic crime,—burglary, highway robbery, and the plundering of public treasuries by those elected or appointed to guard them. The great government itself is setting the example as the chief criminal when it considers only expediency and its own advantage in dealing with a weaker nation. What difference between such an act by a nation and the act of a wife-beater who holds up and robs and bullies another inhabitant?

Another thing: it weakens the moral position of a government to be itself guilty of a thing like that. For example, America is playing hush-mouth on the doings of England in China because America is doing just as bad a deed in Central America. Britain has to keep quiet on Nicaragua and America must keep quiet on Shanghai. Two bigger ones trouble with loot cannot yell for the police, one against the other.

How we have fallen from the high ideals of Paine, of Lafayette and Lincoln. Even under Roosevelt, altho lynching was going on merrily in the south, we did conduct ourselves internationally in a way to reserve the right to protest against the massacre of Jews in Russia and of Armenians in Turkey. But now it seams that this unfortunate accident of a Coolidge administration is about to rob us of our last moral birthright.

And there are both American and British people who do not agree to this bullying either in Latin America or in the Orient. They ought to have the courage to speak out.

THE POLITICAL ARENA

By BERT MILLER.

THE dominating forces in the Republican Party are making progress in their effort to can Calvin Coolidge. This is the conclusion to be drawn from recent political events and from the illuminating article which has just appeared in the New York Times.

Things have not prospered politically for Cautious Cal in recent days. He has made himself non persona grata with the powerful financial interests controlling the Republican party. They have decided that his usefulness is at an end. Representing the decadent manufacturing and industrial interests of New England, he finds himself far out of his depth in handling the difficult problems with which American imperialism confronts him. As a result we witness a well-organized and very definite effort within the Republican Party to discredit Coolidge and cast him into the political scrap heap.

Instances of the president's incompetence are not lacking and furthermore they have been thrust prominently into the limelight by his antagonists. His bungling methods in handling the recent negotiations with Mexico and Nicaragua have not only helped to expose American imperialism in all its ruthlessness and hypocrisy before the whole world, but their crudeness has in addition put American diplomacy in a most ridiculous light. Opposition to the cruiser building program brought down upon Coolidge the ire of the powerful navy group in Congress, while the collapse of the proposed disarmament conference injured his prestige still further.

The dominant capitalist groups in this country see but problems ahead. The much lauded prosperity is not as secure as the workers have been led to believe. Big labor struggles are looming on the horizon. The possibilities of new imperialist war ventures grows daily more certain. Such important problems require a firmer hand at the wheel. Coolidge cannot fill the bill.

Small wonder then that we behold the astonishing spectacle of Butler politely showing Coolidge the door as far as the next presidential nomination is concerned. This open repudiation of Coolidge by Nicholas Murray Butler, one of the leading men in the Republican Party, must be considered as a most significant event.

With this background in view Mr. Speers' article takes on the utmost importance. For instance, he claims that "When President Coolidge put his signature on the vote message of the McNary-Haugen Farm Relief Bill he touched off a potentially charged current of political electricity as has been let loose in national politics for years. It has already welded about the positive and negative poles of support and opposition the two major economic groups and political power counts for most in the United States—the manufacturing and the farming interests."

This article attempts to show that "The fifteen states whose representatives in congress supported the McNary-Haugen bill . . . will send no less than 392 delegates to the national convention and will control 175 presidential electors . . . , a 33 per cent balance of power." And he declares that "the 392 delegates from the above 15 states, plus 150 delegates from Southern and border states favorable to the McNary-Haugen bill, make 542 delegates lacking only about 13 to make the necessary majority of 555. The 13 or more likely may be forthcoming from California, Colorado, Idaho, Utah, Michigan, Wyoming, Mississippi, Georgia —whose numbers voted 45 to 16 on the bill."

Mr. Speers' article claims that the possibility of either Lowden or Dawes as the most formidable opposition to Coolidge. We are of the opinion that Dawes is by all odds the stronger. Dawes has managed to win for himself the reputation of being with the farmers through his support of the McNary-Haugen bill. His support of the Branch Banking Bill gives him the support of the banking interests. The fact that Dawes is himself a banker and that his name is associated with the notorious Dawes Plan, is an additional guarantee of support from this source. Dawes seeks to play the role of the strong man in American politics, the American Mussolini. The recent sensational filibuster will strengthen his hand in this respect in so far as it has demonstrated the clumsiness of parliamentary procedure in congress.

Meanwhile it would be well to consider for a moment the significance of the farm movement as far as labor is concerned. The rising tide of discontent among the Western farmers has frequently aroused talk of a possible third party. However, if Dawes becomes a candidate representing a bloc of the banking and the farming interests, then the possibility of the development of a third party becomes slim, for the third party movements of the last few years have depended to a large extent upon the support of the western farmers. The development of a third party would make it extremely difficult to bring about a strong labor party movement. However, the nomination of a black reactionary like Dawes, whose labor record is so indefensible, would make the possibilities of a labor party movement much more likely. Such a movement would undoubtedly rally the support of the poor farmers. The workers and farmers would do well to watch with the closest attention the acts of the political drama as it unfolds during the coming year.

FOOTNOTES TO THE NEWS

By EUGENE LYONS

Frederick Moore, the new Times correspondent in Shanghai, enjoys his job. He was sent over apparently because he's hard-boiled. He thinks that nothing of any importance has happened in China since the Boxer days. A few thousand Americans, he says in his dispatches, could lick the whole damned Chinese nation. He's on pins and needles for the fun to begin, but in the meantime must content himself with smaller thrills. The beheading of militant workers, for instance. Others might shudder at the brutality of Great Britain's friends in suppressing strikes, but not Mr. Moore. He just revels in the sight. Here is how he talks of it:

"The Chinese generals around Shanghai suppress the Nationalist agitators by head-chopping. Picturesque headsmen with long, broad-bladed, highly polished, keen-edged choppers, slung by colored sashes upon the back, accompany every Chinese army, and frequently visitors to an adjoining Chinese city can behold human heads exposed in fish-net bags on posts at prominent corners. Chinese crowds are accustomed to the sight and conduct their small trades nearby little disconcerted. . . . As perhaps a hundred heads have been displayed in Shanghai in the past month the disciples of Michael Borodin are not evident about the city."

Isn't that lovely? There's nothing like a dash of sadism to make a reporter's service with the marines thoroughly enjoyable.

INTRODUCING THE PERFECT REPORTER—

Our customers have already met Lester the lunatic, his long-distance sweetie, Myrtle, and Alkali Al. And now we want them to step right up and shake hands with another member of our growing and happy little family—Jake, the Demon Reporter. There isn't another like him anywhere. He's absolutely the perfect reporter. He's been through the mill, knows everything that Willie Hearst and Mussey and the tabloids could show him.

Starting life as a humble garbage collector, Jake quickly discovered that he had a nose for scandal. But he decided not to begin his real life's work until he had schooled himself in the fundamentals of journalism. First he gave himself several years of intensive training as a second-story man. He became expert in climbing through windows, house-breaking, rifling the mails, cracking safes, and other routine duties of his chosen calling. Then he joined the Burns agency and got the knack of gumshoeing, manufacturing evidence, fixing the cops, co-respondence, etc. Thus equipped he entered the newspaper field. For some time he was the star man on a Hearst sheet, and thence was promoted to a red-hot tabloid.

There he might have remained to this day, but fortunately for this column Jake carried a dark secret in his breast (as he would put it if he were telling the story). For many years he hid it from the world in general and his editors in particular. But one day, having remained accidentally sober, he gave himself away. A SHOCKED TABLOID OFFICE LEARNED THAT JAKE COULD WRITE ENGLISH! That was the end. Not all his pranks as a reporter could scare him. He was fired, to his own loss and to our gain.

Now Jake is the only person we know who gets a kick out of life twenty-four hours a day. Your life and mine are made up of dull work and petty worries, with young sprees of nothing-at-all in between. But Jake's minutes pop and splutter like firecrackers—murders, mysteries, confessions, plots, kidnappings, exposes, crimes and excitements explode one after another. There's always a new one before the last is cold. Life, to him, is just one lengthening scandal in crimson and purple. Humanity, to him, is just a collection of dope fiends, white slavers, blackmailers, confidence men, adulterers, counterfeiters, pimps, sirens and ordinary thieves, with a scattering of broken-hearted mothers for background. He smells scandals amidst the most respectable performers. He detects mystery in every line on the police blotter. Send him out to talk to anyone anywhere, and he will discover diet and tragedy, broken hearts and broken heads.

And, what is most to his credit, Jake never loses sight of the line of duty. He tells all and more, no matter whom it hurts. His first duty is to his public and reputations be damned. Mothers might weep to have the names of their erring daughters kept out of the paper. But they can't swerve Jake. He will not allow sentiment to interfere with his job, which is to present the world as he sees it through a double-lensed magnifying imagination.

We have already assigned him to do several interviews. Watch for them! We know in advance that he will find that his subjects, however respectable they may seem on the surface, have a secret past—and maybe a pluperfect.

RECIPE FOR SUCCESS.—The following simple formula appears under the title "The Ideals of Kiwanis" and is written by O. Samuel Cummings. All you have to do is apply it—practice in cross-puzzles may help you understand it—and success is yours:

"Kiwanis ideals are the product of the collective idealism of those busy, practical men who are Kiwanians. Kiwanis ideals are an expression of the inner hopes, ambitions and desires of average businessmen. These hidden, unexpressed but fundamental reactions of the human soul are the very fabric of life itself. They are the product of the moral and spiritual evolution of mankind. Those reactions are the hidden signs of that struggle in which every man engages, seeking to apply his philosophy of life to his duties and privileges as a member of society."

In the Name of Modesty.—For ostentatious well-advertised modesty, Otto H. Kahn takes the cake. He has Kling eyes from avoiding the limelight. For instance preparing to sail to Europe recently he was careful to keep his name off the passenger list. He kept his trip secret—but not too secret. He very graciously favored the public with a statement JUST BEFORE SAILING. Modesty, but not at the expense of publicity. Moreover he was thoughtful enough to inform the reporters that he will look for new artistic talents abroad. This, of course, is to make sure that he will not be bothered by ambitious artists or insistent reporters upon his arrival in Europe.

— Sorry you started counting?

— No, sorry I started giving father.

— Where you gonna get the money to pay me back?

— Loan it from father.

Quake Refugees In West Japan Starving

Damaged Railroads Fail to Transport Food Enough

TOKIO, March 9.—Hundreds of refugees in the earthquake districts were facing starvation today, according to advices received here.

Handicapped by a partly demoralized railroad system, the task of getting supplies and food to the affected areas is extremely difficult. Motor transportation to the stricken areas is impossible.

A gale, accompanied by a drenching rain, was sweeping over the Sanin district today, bringing added suffering.

Many of the makeshift shelters have been blown down.

Conditions are said to be indescribable in the affected provinces. Rescue parties are digging into the smashed houses to get the bodies of the dead. The bodies are then piled in the streets and burned.

Not Doctors Enough.

The number of injured is overwhelming. Doctors and nurses are being rushed in from Kobe and Osaka and other centers, but they are not able to cope with the situation.

Relief and supplies are being sent from all parts of Japan, but transportation is wholly inadequate. Coolies are being used to pack in food over the devastated highways. They are packing supplies as far as ten miles in this manner.

Thousands Killed.

Kyoto prefecture police today issued a statement of casualties in their district. The report said that 2,275 persons were killed in the temblor which rocked western Japan, that 4,107 were injured and that 88 were missing.

The official report said that 5,934 houses had been destroyed in the district.

More than 7,000 houses were destroyed in the four provinces which received the heaviest damage. About half of them were shaken to the earth by the force of the shock. The rest were destroyed by fire which raged subsequent to the quake.

Thousand Die in One Town.

The Province of Yosha was particularly hard hit. At least 1,643 persons were killed in this territory, including the town of Mineyama, where 1,000 were killed.

Thirty-five persons were killed in the Province of Nake. A close check

Einstein Is Sarcastic About Virginians Who Arrest For Relativity

BERLIN, March 9. — Professor Albert Einstein is a new cause for being prosecuted. The directors of the Virginia High School think so and have preferred charges against Professor James Carver of that school for blasphemy because he taught Einstein's theory of relativity.

When informed of the impending trial of Carter, Einstein replied:

"If this information is correct I can express only the most profound admiration for the arrogance of those heroes of Virginia because they believe God needs their strength for his defense."

CHURCH BODIES TRY TO CENSOR MUSIC, DRAMA

Bill Recommends State Control Department

ALBANY, N. Y., March 9.—The reading of the Jenks bill, providing censorship and state control of the stage, before the state legislature drew a large crowd here so that the hearing had to be transferred from the assembly parlor to the senate chamber.

The bill, if passed, would choke all free expression on the dramatic and musical stage and would re-inaugurate an era of puritanism and blue laws. It provides for a division of dramatics in the state educational department which would review manuscripts of dramas, musical comedies and other productions.

Strong opposition is carried on by producers and the Actors Equity Association. Large crowds of spectators came today to hear Elsie Ferguson speak against the bill. Others who oppose the bill include Arthur Hopkins, Arthur Richman, president of the American Dramatists' Society, Theresa Helburn, director of the Theatre Guild; Sidney Howard, of the Actors' League, and Charles K. Gilbert, of the Social Service Commission.

Dr. John R. Straton, the Cotton Mather of the modern era, and other church members were to speak for the bill.

Thieves' Treaty Rouses Many Anxieties

Recognition Of Bessarabian Steal Exposes England

MOSCOW, March 9.—The newspapers here expose editorially and by special articles the plot of England to create a bloc of Western European states, as most lately indicated in the sudden recognition by the fascist Italian government of the Bessarabian treaty.

This treaty with Roumania, granting that country the old Russian province of Bessarabia, was filed with the League of Nations in October, 1920. It was soon after ratified by England and France. It requires the concurrence of Italy, the French Foreign office says of Japan also, in order to be recognized as official by the League. However, the Roumanian army was already occupying Bessarabia when the treaty was made, and has continued to do so, putting down with great severity and with abominable brutalities any workers' or peasants' movement that may be started.

English Intrigue.

The significance of Italy's ratification is seen by public opinion in the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics to be a further step in the Anglo-fascist imperialist nations in the encirclement of the Soviet Union by a chain of hostile semi-fascist states, bound together under the leadership of England, and supported, at least partially, by France and others.

Recent publication of letters exchanged among whitewguard plotters in England and France, showing close relationships between members of the British cabinet and Czarist adventurers, planning to break Anglo-Russian relations, and to raise a mercenary army to invade the U. S. S. R., tend to strengthen the belief that England is back of the Italian recognition.

What Did They Get?

VIENNA, March 9.—Speculation here and in the Balkans over the recognition by Mussolini of the Bessarabian treaty turned on the probable price paid Italy, by Roumania and by England, and the probable results in international relations.

It is felt here that France will not enjoy the hegemony over Roumania, and thru her, over the little entente, which it is felt has been promised Italy by the government of Bilody Marne.

Diplomats familiar with the Balkan factors expect also great anxiety in the Kingdom of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes as one conclusion of the Italian decision. Serbia and Albania are in the line of march of Mussolini's imperial ambition, and with Roumania as a part of his force, located in their rear, Serbia, especially, is looking for closer alliances. She will find one in France, and perhaps will grow more friendly towards the U. S. S. R., according to the best opinion in Vienna.

DEPORTATION OF ITALIANS FLAYED AS FASCIST HELP

U. S. Imperialistic Says Ex-Congressman

ST PAUL, Minn., March 9.—Fascism and American imperialism came in for a severe drubbing at the hands of Ernest Lundeen, former congressman from Minneapolis, at an anti-Fascisti meeting here.

Attacking the practice of deporting anti-Fascisti to Italy and leaving them to the tender mercies of Mussolini, Mr. Lundeen said, "A tremendous protest must be raised by the people of this country if the right of a political asylum is to be maintained. Deportation of Italian refugees is already under way, and it seems as if the department of justice is helping Mussolini in the persecution and the murder of his political enemies."

Declaring that the occupation of Nicaragua by American marines is a symptom that the United States is going fascist, Mr. Lundeen declared that people should be allowed a referendum before war is declared.

Committees were selected to draw up resolutions protesting against the deportation of Italians and against American imperialism.

Increased Prosperity For the Big Business Man Shows in Income

WASHINGTON, March 8.—Swelled by the record prosperity of corporations last year, March income tax payments will total about $575,000,000, it was estimated today.

The treasury conceded today that on official estimates collections would be in excess of $550,000,000, but declined to fix a definite figure.

Senator Avers British Plot U. S. Ruin

Cruiser to Nicaragua Helps Spoil American Trade

By CHARLES P. STEWART.
(Exclusive Central Press Dispatch to The DAILY WORKER.)

WASHINGTON, March 9.—"Is Great Britain's dispatch of the cruiser 'Colombo' to Nicaraguan waters a threat against the Monroe Doctrine?" asks Senator Henrik Shipstead of Minnesota.

"Pooh!" he replies. "Great Britain disavows any such intention and undoubtedly disavows it sincerely. Nevertheless, the 'Colombo's' presence off Nicaragua gives the state department an excuse to plead that the United States must intervene in the new world's troubles or other powers will intervene to protect their own nationals, thus violating the Monroe Doctrine.

"The obvious effect is to strengthen the state department's position with the American people in such situations as that in Nicaragua.

"Why this British policy of helpfulness toward the state department? Well, the British are playing a very deep game. If this game facilitates the state department's plans in situations which do not concern Great Britain, as in Nicaragua, Great Britain may conceivably expect the state department to favor British plans in other fields which do concern her—shall we say, for instance, in China?

"Another consideration, doubtless, is that such United States' methods as those used in Nicaragua antagonize all Latin-America against this country, with damage to our friendly relations, political prestige and trade throughout the entire family of republics to the southward. What ever we lose in this respect is so much loss to Europe, including Great Britain.

"Is it not natural for the British to make it as easy as possible for the state department to pursue a policy whereby they gain at our expense?

"A Pretext." He Says.

"As for Great Britain's claim that her nationals in Nicaragua might need a cruiser as a refuge, that evidently is the merest pretext. The trouble in Nicaragua was an old story long before the 'Colombo's' dispatch to Corinto was suggested. When the 'Colombo' finally was ordered thither, United States' marines already fully dominated the situation and were giving full protection to all foreign lives and property as well as citizens of the United States there.

"Thus, the only genuine occasion for the presence of British forces in Nicaraguan waters would be the deliberate intention to defy the Monroe Doctrine, which is too silly a theory for serious consideration."

Department's Answer.

While no individual official of the state department would make any comment on Senator Shipstead's assertions, the division of current in-

Polish Workers Riot When Unemployed Are Lured by False "Ad"

WARSAW, March 9.—The unemployment problem in Poland was given an ironic twist recently when a typographical error in an advertisement caused an American firm to be besieged by a host of workers out of jobs.

Uen & Co., who are doing sewer construction work in the city of Czenstochau, advertised for forty workers. Through some error this appeared as 400. A riot broke out when only forty were employed, and the angry workers, who believed themselves to have been cheated by a trick of the bosses, did considerable damage in the office of the company. Police interfered, and the distrubance was quelled, but not before a number of the workers had been hurt.

NAVIES INCREASE AS NATIONS TALK OF ARMS PARLEY

Urge New Gas Method In Paris Speech

LONDON, March 9.—The British government will not stop construction of any of its warships already being build, W. C. Bridgeman, first lord of the admiralty, announced in Commons today. Construction on new ships, not yet begun, will be delayed a short time, he said, until the Geneva conference is out of the way.

Only "Conversation".

The foreign office stated today that no official invitation for a tripartite conference has been received but that there have been informal exchanges of views during the past month.

The British would like to make the proposed conference informal and would prefer to refer to it as "conversations." It was pointed out that Washington has been advised that any such "conversations" must be limited due to the absence of France and Italy.

Don't Expect Peace.

While the British government, for diplomatic reasons, is willing to enter a tri-partite naval disarmament with the United States and Japan, the British press is skeptical of such a conference meeting with great success.

U. S. Oil Men in Mexico Discuss Obeying Law

Tellez Blames Knights Of Columbus For Friction

MEXICO CITY, March 9.—Reliable sources are quoted here to the effect that new negotiations are going on between the law breaking American oil companies and the government. It is not known at what stage the conversations are at present, but hope is expressed that the Doheny, Sinclair, Mellon interests which still lead a small group of oil men, nearly all Americans, to defy the Mexican constitution and refuse payment of taxes, will finally yield on essential points.

Former President Obregon is supposed to be taking part in the discussions, which are very secret.

Obregon Snubs King.

Obregon today declined to accept a decoration of the Royal Order of Saints Maurice and Lazarus from King Victor Emanuel of Italy. He based his refusal on the ground that it would be inconsistent for the head of the Mexican democratic revolution to accept an insignia from a fascist government which is inspired by ideals contrary to the principles of the Mexican revolution.

General Obregon said he believed it was because he had occupied the position of revolutionary president which moved Italy's King to present the decoration, and for that reason he must refuse to accept. His refusal was contained in a letter written to the foreign office.

Tellez Blames Knights.

The ambassador to the United States, Manuel C. Tellez, in a public statement declared he would probably return to the United States, and said that the recent mysterious note of the U. S. department of state to the Mexican government was not of as much importance as the public thought.

He said, however, that there were difficulties made for the Mexican embassy by the Knights of Columbus and the Archbishop of Baltimore, and by certain senators in Washington. Discussing these attacks, Tellez said:

"I have been charged with many things. Baseless charges have been hurled about that we have been trying to influence Senator Borah with money. Is there anything more absurd?

"Another absurd charge that we are trying to buy the influence of the New York World has been made. How much money would the government have to have for such fantastic schemes?"

NEW YORK CITY'S WORKERS GATHER TO HONOR MEMORY OF RUTHENBERG

Throngs of workers filled Carnegie Hall, Central Opera House and overflowed to other halls nearby, to pay their last respects last night to the memory of our beloved comrade, C. E. Ruthenberg, before his ashes are borne across the seas to be laid beside the other revolutionary leaders of our day, in Moscow.

Marked with the inscription "Our Leader, Comrade Ruthenberg, Central Executive Committee Workers (Communist) Party, July 9, 1882-March 2, 1927," an urn containing Ruthenberg's ashes lay in a bronze case in the main auditorium of Manhattan Lyceum all day yesterday, guarded continually by a corps of devoted workers who were on duty from the time the funeral procession arrived on Tuesday night until the special guard wearing red shirts, with black arm bands, conducted the ashes to the halls for last night's final ceremonies.

In spite of the fact that many of these workers had to go to their shops yesterday morning, they stood all night watching the ashes to which many thousands of their fellow-workers came to bring flowers and a last word of tribute and respect.

At certain times during the long vigil, the guard of honor consisted of four members of the Kuomintang; and there was also a Negro worker who shared this watch with them. To many mourners this seemed truly symbolic of Comrade Ruthenberg's life article which had been in behalf of all workers of all nationalities.

The guard during part of the day yesterday, was formed of members of

DELEGATES FROM SUBJECT NATIONS AT BRUSSELS PLANNED FREEDOM

The article printed below is part of a series written by the delegate of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League to the Brussells Congress Against Colonial Oppression and Imperialism. The congress was made up of delegates from anti-imperialist organizations, peace societies and labor unions in the European, American and other imperialist nations, from labor bodies and nationalist organizations in the colonial countries, and from subjugated races even in countries with full sovereignty.

Important resolutions were passed, for the practical carrying on of the work of freeing conquered peoples from their slavery. A survey of the work of the congress and the personalities attending, which have made it one of the great events of this era, will be found in these articles.

By MANUEL GOMEZ.

BRUSSELS, Feb. 11 (By mail, delayed).—The long-hoped-for and long-dreaded coming together of oppressed peoples with workers of the oppressing nations has become a world-wide reality.

Upwards of 180 delegates—white, yellow, black and brown—from no less than 40 different countries, make up the first world congress against imperialism, which opened its sessions here last night in the Egmont Palace. The overwhelming majority of the delegates come from colonial and semi-colonial countries. Some have left the field of battle to be present here.

Invited Crowds.

Altho admission was strictly by invitation, the great hall of the palace was crowded with spectators as S. O. Davies, of the executive committee of the Miners' Federation of Great Britain, rose to call the congress to order. In the seats reserved for delegates the yellow race was especially in evidence, the impressive Chinese delegation of 30 being flanked on either side by the delegation from Korea and from French Indo-China. Behind them were the delegates from the Dutch East Indies, Persia, the Riff, Holland, Germany and France. Across the aisle were the representatives from India, Egypt, Senegal, South Africa, Latin America, Great Britain, France and the United States.

Organize the Traction Workers!

ARTICLE II. EXPLOITATION — HOW IT WORKS

By ROBERT MITCHELL.

The tragic picture thus far presented illustrating the exploitation of the traction workers is by no means exaggerated. Nor should it be supposed that the examples of the various occupations chosen are unrepresentative of the whole picture. In fact the conditions under which many of the other grades of workers are employed is even worse than that of the workers already mentioned.

Exploited Spaniards.

The men, for instance, who are employed in the power houses which generate the electricity for the Interborough Rapid Transit Company have even a more fearful lot. They are almost entirely foreign-born, usually Spaniards. Their miserably low wages and long hours afford them neither the opportunity nor the inclination to learn the language and ways of the country.

In many cases they are employed in broken shifts at irregular hours and at least half of them during the night. Partly because of these facts but mostly because of the pressure of economic need, they herd themselves together in one section of the city, usually in one block, often several score on one floor of an apartment house, overcrowded against all rules of health and in obvious violation of the tenement laws.

Floating Dead Bodies.

Their occupation is of the most unsanitary character. The power houses are built on the banks of the Hudson and East Rivers. To cool the generating machinery and for other processes, the method is utilized of letting the river waters into the power houses. The men are often compelled, by the peculiar nature of their work, to wade waist-deep in water loaded with refuse and the bodies of dead animals. The fearful heat and suffocation of their disease laden quarters make the tasks of the men quite unbearable, especially together the summer months.

Another example why be chosen: the platform men. The task of these workers is to help open and shut train doors, usually during the rush hours.

Herd Human Droves.

They help to direct, hold off, or herd together, as the case may be, the inevitable human masses surging from east to west, west to east, north to south, south to north—the hopeless, monotonous mass-refrain of transit congestion. Transit con-

Mme. Borodin In Chang's Jail Is Report

Soviet Union Protests Act Of Seizing Steamer

SHANGHAI, March 9. — General Chang Tsung-chang has wired Chang Tso-lin for instructions as to treatment of Mme. Borodin, wife of Jacob Borodin, adviser to the Nationalist government, according to reports here.

Mme. Borodin is reported to have been captured when Chang Tsung-chang's troops, in gross violation of international law, boarded a steamer flying the flag of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, and carrying among general passengers, several persons friendly to the people's government of China.

There is a report that all of these were immediately executed by Chang Tsung-chang's men, with the exception of the woman identified as Mme. Borodin, and that she is held a close prisoner, at Tsinan.

The government of the U. S. S. R. in a note from the embassy at Peking, has filed a protest with the Peking government and with General Chang Tso-lin who dominates it, against the seizure of the steamer, Pamiat Lenina, on which Mme. Borodin is said to have been captured.

Triple Attack.

The militarist defenders of Shanghai fear General Chang Kai-shek, commander-in-chief of the Nationalist forces, will lead an attack on the center of the northerners' line, making a drive toward Pengpu, via Anking to cut the Tsingpu railroad. They expect General Ho Ying-ching will lead the Nationalist east wing in an attack toward Soochow, via Hangchow and Yishing, and his objective will be the Shanghai-Nanking railroad. General Yang Sun-tai can lead the west wing of the Cantonese from Hupen towards Ankwei, and his objective wil be the Lanchai railroad.

General An Kuochun, field commander of the northern forces, is calling for reinforcements to rush to all positions by the three railroads. Chang Tsung-chang and Sun Chuan-fang have possibly appointed General Sheh Chuan-chang's principal lieutenant, to succeed General Li Pao-chang, whose wholesale executions so aroused the Shanghai inhabitants against the general strike, as defense commissioner of Shanghai. This indicates that Chang is supplanting Sun's subordinates with men of his own choosing.

Use English Ships.

Shantung soldiers wearing mufti boarded a steam launch belonging to the China Merchant Company, which was moored in the vicinity of the Garden Bridge in the international settlement, intimidated the crew with pistols and took the launch to the Kiangnan arsenal.

Another batch of northern soldiery boarded and commandeered the British steamer Winning near Hankow, but a British destroyer intercepted the vessel, bluejackets boarded it and took it to Hankow.

Chang's police last night raided the Commercial press, China's most important printing plant in the Chapei district.

Quake Refugees In Japan Are Starving of the injured in this province has not yet been made.

Approximately 3,000 were killed and injured in the Province of Takeno. Most of the casualties in this province, reports said, came under the heading of "injured."

Six persons were killed in the Province of Kumano; five were injured.

Property damage will reach a staggering total.

No official estimate is available, but it will reach into the millions.

Meanwhile all of Japan is concentrating on aiding refugees, many of whom are in a sorry plight.

Quake Knows No Bank.

PARIS, March 9.—Colonel Van Renssalaer V. Kane, well known in New York and Paris society, was killed at Kobe, Japan, Tuesday in the earthquake, according to a private dispatch reaching Paris tonight.

Kane, who was in charge of the American rail traffic in France during the war, and was a member of the Armistice Commission, was traveling in Japan.

sade to save China from the Chinese. It looked for a while as if the lads were falling down on the job, but we advised patience. The hour has struck. Mr. Moore is busy telling us that red is yellow and vice versa. Every time a militarist general joins the Nationalists we are informed that the northern war lords are strengthened as a result. The Nationalists are suffering daily defeats and their ultimate annihilation is predicted with monotonous regularity. If the Nationalists did not persist in forging ahead Mr. Moore might be a good prophet.

Hear! Hear! Movie folks must be as pure as a thousand dollar bill or they must quit the movies. So saith Cecil de Mille, moving picture magnate, for is it not magic). Incidentally Cecil got his bald head on the front page. No wonder. Florenz Ziegfield also monopolized the front page of Chicago papers last year when I announced that his chorus girls would wear reasonably large fig leaves in the future. Of course they continued to appear on the stage in normal dress, but the novelty of the announcement was real news and Florenz got his publicity.

UNCLE SAM is a thrifty propositon. Gen. H. M. Lords of the budget is out with a pruning hook. The flunkey who brushes the generals coat or rather the fellow who waves a brush in the immediate vicinity of the general will never again consign his nose to the nearest cuspidor and articulate an obsequious "thank you" because there is no provision in the general's budget for tipping. Meihings (as John L. Lewis would say) that Uncle Sam's two little sprees in Nicaragua and China would keep an army of bootblacks and porters busy for many moons.

THE end does not always justify the means, but it came darned near it in the case of Marian Mayers, a pretty co-ed of the University of South Dakota who was caught contemplating a bank robbery, to pay her way through school. She was given a prison sentence of thirty days. Miss Mayers was sitting in the bank building with her burglar's kit by her side, when she was apprehended. Thirty days for such an offense is not bad. The girl may have been suffering from a delusion that she was a bank president.

MOST people are under the impression that policemen graduate only from the rubber and the speakeasy. How many of our readers know that there is a university here in New York City where the limbs of the law go in for higher education in preparation for their calling. They are not only taught how to avoid hunions but also how to speak English language so that they may not be mistaken for baboons and hustled off to the Bronx zoo by absent-minded naturalists. One of these students was arrested a few days ago and held for assault and robbery. A "practical" university, indeed!

AGITATION for freedom is sweeping through Asia. I suppose you know who is responsible! None other than the government of the Soviet Union. Before the Soviet Union was dreamed of there were revolts and murmurings among oppressed peoples and in those distant days the imperialists found some convenient scape goat. The imperialists favor simple reasons, reasons that don't impose a serious strain on the interior of the human cranium. At the rate rebellion is progressing in Asia it looks as if the imperialists might have more excuses than subjects in a few more decades.

BY "YELLOW DOG" CONTRACT BOONE CO. LOWERS PAY

Worker Must Swear Not To Join Union

BLAIR, W. Va.—The Boone Coal Corporation makes its men sign a "yellow dog contract" before they can work in its Spruce Fork mine for the wage of 47 to 53 cents per ton will below the union scale, but all this outfit pays. The contract states that the employee applies for work on the following terms:

I hereby apply to Boone County Coal Corporation for employment at its mines situated o nthe Spruce Fork of Coal River in Logan and Boone Counties, West Virginia, upon the following terms:

Strictly Non-Union.

(1) I understand that the company is operating "non-union" and that it is to continue to operate non-union while I am in its employ.

(2) I am not now a member of the United Mine Workers of America, the I. W. W., or any other organization of mine workers, and will not, while I am in the employ of this company, join or affiliate with any such mine labor organization.

(3) If at any time while in the employ of the company I want to become a member of or affiliated with any such organization, I agree to withdraw from its employment, after giving it three days' notice thereof, and to leave the company house which I may be occupying or using.

(4) I will not make any effort while in the employ of the company or upon its property to unionize its employes or interfere in any way with their working for the company.

(5) I agree to accept the scale of wages which the company is paying at this time for similar work, which is satisfactory to me.

Police today were investigating the death of a young woman whose body was found under the crib work of a Harlem River bridge, with a deep knife wound in the back of the neck.

COURT TO STATE PERTINENCY OF SINCLAIR QUIZ

Defense Fights Hard to Leave It To Jury

WASHINGTON, March 9. Harry F. Sinclair, owner of Teapot Dome and central figure in a series of oil scandals that involve high officials of the Government suffered a serious blow today, in his fight for conviction.

Judge H. Holtz, of the District Supreme Court, ruled today that the question of pertinency in the questions which Sinclair refused to answer before the Senate Oil Committee, was a question of law for the court and not a point of fact for the jury.

Day of Argument.

The entire day had been given to argument on the point, the defense contending that the jury should decide the materiality of the questions.

The jury has now only to deliberate upon the facts of the case which are admitted by both sides.

The defense had centered its whole effort upon an attempt to place the issue of relevancy before the court.

Would Save Fall.

Sinclair is on trial for refusal to answer seven questions propounded by the Senate Oil Investigating Committee in March 1924, relating to the leasing negotiations with former secretary of the Interior Albert B. Fall in 1922.

In concluding, the prosecution's case, District Attorney Peyton Gordon was blocked in his fourth attempt to place before the jury the story behind the questions of the senate investigators.

The government's trial record included only the admitted facts in the case, namely that Sinclair declined to answer certain questions.

Weepah Gold Rush In Real Estate Stage; Find Some Rich Rock

TONOPHAH, NEV., March 9.—The little settlement of Weepah, 38 miles from here, teemed with activity today as miners, amateur and professional, in quest of yellow gold, swarmed over the surrounding country to stake out claims.

The rush to get claims in the vicinity started after two "rich" assays appeared here with specimens which assayed $78,000 to the ton.

Apparently doomed to spend its days in sleep contemplation, Weepah suddenly took on a new lease of life. Now it is beginning to take on the aspect of an old mining camp in boom days.

Hundreds continue to flock into the town, some of them to stake out claims as far as ten miles away from the original strikes. A brisk business is being done in claims.

The original strike was made on patented claims owned by Frank Horton, father of one of the boys who brought the ore here.

Old prospectors are in variance concerning the strike, but all agree that it is the richest gold rock ever uncovered in Nevada.

Well-Attended Memorial in Grand Rapids, Mich.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich.—The well attended Ruthenberg Memorial Meeting held in this city demonstrated conclusively that the class-conscious workers of Grand Rapids loved and appreciated Comrade Ruthenberg as a great leader of the working class.

The main speaker was E. Baker, the district organizer of the Workers Party. Nydio Barker of the Young Pioneers and Arnold Ziegler of the Young Workers' League, both of this city, spoke in behalf of their respective organizations. Members of three Young Pioneer groups led in the singing of songs.

The spirit of the evening was tied a determination on the part of everyone to carry on in the struggle with more energy, and devotion than ever before. New members were taken in.

La Follette Man Writes.

ROBERT A. HOFFMAN, Secretary of Buffalo La Follette Committee in 1924 campaign states: "Death erases all differences of opinion and makes possible a true estimate of our contemporaries. Since the passing of Eugene V. Debs, I. E. Ruthenberg was the outstanding militant leader of the foreign American working for the dawn of a better day. Regardless of differences over tactics it is a matter of record that Ruthenberg ever stood for the sincerity of the late Communist leader. Just as Americans of today honor and remember the outstanding abolitionists of yesterday—Phillips, Garrison, Lovejoy, John Brown and Lincoln; so in a day that is yet to dawn Americans will pay homage to the memory of such militants of our day as Debs, John Reed and C. E. Ruthenberg. Individuals die but movements survive and ideas of human betterment eventually triumph."

Hat Workers Feel Blow.

MILLINERY WORKERS, Sewell Hat Shop, receive: "The death of Charles E. Ruthenberg is a severe blow to the labor movement. Ruthenberg was a wise and courageous leader, who never wavered in his fight against the exploiters of labor. Ruthenberg's death grieves us, but it will not check us in our fight for the emancipation of the working class. We will close our ranks and continue the struggle."

Letts Invited.

The Lettish Educational Society of New York, in regular meeting, invites all the Letts of New York to come to the memorial meeting and promises a speaker in Lettish for hem. It also sends, through O. Preeliin, chairman, the following message:

"The membership meeting of Lettish Educational Society of New York assembled at March 9th expressed great grief and confidence on the death of C. E. Ruthenberg. Together with all members of Workers (Communist) Party of America and all the workers in revolutionary movement we mourn the loss of this fighter in the ranks of our forces.

"Memory of C. E. Ruthenberg must be honored by the widest consolidation of workers on every line of their class struggle as adviced and directed by Communist Internacional."

Workers' School Holidays.

The Workers' School, New York, of which Ruthenberg was a former instructor, declares a holiday on Wednesday, March 9th, the date of the memorial meeting. The Students Council of this school expresses its grief, and has dedicated an issue of The Student Worker, its official magazine, to the memory of the great leader.

Party Units Resolve.

From comrades and party units in New York, outpourings of condolence come: L. Candela, former secretary of the Italian section of the Workers Party, from the German Bureau, of the Workers Party, through its secretary, E. R. Saenger, and from the comrades of Unit 2-F, Sub-section 2-B.

Party Journals Feel Loss.

There are likewise letters expressing grief over the death of Ruthenberg sent to the Party Press from

The Pioneers of Section 3, Philadelphia; the East Liverpool, Ohio branch and the Boston local of the American Negro Labor Congress; the Jewish Bureau of the Workers Party, District 1, and S. B. Lesow, manager of the Workers Party office of Fairhope; Elliot Haves, Wellesley, Mass.; the staff of the Lithuanian daily newspaper, Vilnis, of Chicago; the S. Street Workers Club, Maydenik, School of Patchogue, Pa., and from E. J. Byrne of Richmond, Va.

Not Disheartened.

MARK STONE. "I am deeply shocked at the untimely death of C. E. Ruthenberg. With the death of this great organizer and leader, the labor movement and especially the foreign-born workers of this country have lost a warm-hearted friend and an active fighter in their behalf.

"He was always in the forefront of the trade union movement. During the world war when the workers were thrown headlong into the international slaughter put to get profits for the capitalist class, he bravely fired the baton who were responsible for the war. He was hounded from prison to prison for daring to oppose their bloody and vicious rule and for pointing out to the working class the real meaning of bourgeois militarism.

"For this deep devotion to the interests of the working class the capitalist dictators sent him to jail and persecuted him. But the capitalist class will in time be brought before the bar of proletarian justice and dealt with accordingly. The working class will not be disheartened by the death of Comrade Ruthenberg, but will adhere to his principles and carry on his fight against capitalism."

Armenian Workers Express Grief.

"The Bureau of the Armenian fractions of the Workers (Communist) Party mourns with deep grief and sorrow the loss of our iron leader, Comrade Charles Emil Ruthenberg. He was a Bolshevik, personifying the best that is in the American as well as the world proletariat.

"In his magnificent labors to lead the party, the vanguard of the American working class, he found time enough to give close attention to, and take part in, the efforts of our bureau to propagate the principles and program of our party among the Armenian laboring masses in America.

"We feel proud to have co-operated with him, and pledge ourselves to 'firmly close our ranks' and 'fight on' for the realization of the principles and program of our party that he so ably represented."—Bureau of Armenian Fractions of The Workers (Communist) Party of America.

INTERNATIONAL RED AID EXPRESSES GRIEF

The Executive Committee of the International Red Aid, headquarters in Moscow, has just cabled the Central Committee of the International Labor Defense, Chicago, and condoles it on the loss of Ruthenberg. "His work in behalf of the victims of capitalist terrorism, and for class justice will be remembered as an example to all loyal members of the working class," says the cablegram.

Sen. Shipsted Says British Plot Ruin of U. S. Capitalism

presents this as the administration's side of the case:

"At the outset the British government left the Nicaragua situation exclusively to the United States, presumably because it considered the latter protecting everybody and British nationals then were not particularly insistent. Later, British residents began demanding protection under their own flag, with increasing urgency. On Feb. 15, the British charge d'affairs at Managua asked President Diaz of Nicaragua for guarantees. The United States gave assurances of protection, but avoided the word 'guarantees' as implying indemnification in event of losses.

Ambassador's Statement.

"Subsequently, Sir Esme Howard, British ambassador to the United States, informed the state department that the British contemplated sending a cruiser. Then, that they had reluctantly decided to send it. He emphasized that no landing was intended, but that the cruiser was intended simply for rescue purposes in the event of danger."

SCIENTISTS OF THE SOVIET UNION EXPRESS SOLIDARITY WITH WHITE RUSSIAN MASSES

MOSCOW, February 14th. (By Mail)—The scientists' congress of the Soviet Union adopted the following appeal to the scientists of the whole world, in its concluding session:

The second scientists congress of the Soviet Union which represents 14,000 scientists, academy members, professors, college teachers, members of scientific investigation institutes, etc. of Moscow, Leningrad, Kor, Kiev, Odessa, Tashkent etc., raises its indignant protest against the national suppression by the Polish government.

The congress expresses its confidence that the development and the enthusiasm of the White Russian toiling masses cannot be crushed by any repressions, and appeals to the scientists of the whole world to join in this protest against the persecution of that section of the White Russian Soviet Republic, which freely develops and strengthens in fraternal alliance with the Socialist Soviet Republics.

floor amid a tremendous outburst of applause.

"In extending a fraternal salute," began the famous French author, "to all those who have come here from the far corners of the earth, representing uncounted multitudes of human beings, I say to you: you are not men who come here only to fraternize with each other, to clasp hands; you are also fighters who come to organize for struggle. You are going to carry forward in the world the old cry of freedom, the cry of emancipation of all races, peoples and classes of the oppressed."

Fight Imperialism.

Barbusse, who left his sick-bed to attend this congress, was applauded tumultuously throuout his long speech. He dwelt with particular emphasis upon the heroic struggle of the Chinese people against imperialism. The Chinese situation, indeed, sets the keynote for the entire congress. Telegrams of greeting were read from Mrs. Sun Yat Sen, from the central committee of the Kuo Min Tang party and from the Chinese revolutionary armies. Liao, the delegate of the Kuo Min Tang, then rose to speak.

Till Victory Comes.

Liao affirmed the determination of the Chinese people to fight until complete victory is won.

"The overthrow of imperialism," he declared, "is a task to which all oppressed groups must set themselves. The significance of this congress is that it brings us together, enables us to pave the way for fruitful collaboration against our common enemy. I am especially glad to see represented here organizations of workers in the imperialist countries. If the workers are content to serve the aims of imperialism they will unconsciously play into the hands of their own oppressors, for it is not the workers who rule in the imperialist countries but the enemies of the workers.

Protest Helps Chinese.

"I want to thank the European working class," he went on, "for their magnificent campaigns of protest on behalf of the Chinese people. I thank especially the workers of England and of Australia, and also the nationalist movement of India for its stand against the use of Indian troops in China. Lastly, I want to pay homage to the workers' and peasants' government of Soviet Russia, which has shown itself the true friend of oppressed peoples through the world."

Oppressed Vels Speaks.

Other speakers included Jawahar Lal Nehru, representing the Indian National Congress; Sen Katayama, the famous Japanese revolutionist; Kin Fa Lin, of Korea; Carlos Quijano, representing the Revolutionary Nationalist Party of Venezuela, South America; and A. Fenner Brockway, secretary of the Independent Labor Party of Great Britain.

Brockway Promises New Policy.

Brockway, who spoke last, expressed discontent with the colonial policy of Great Britain during the MacDonald government and declared that large numbers of his party members are determined that when labor next comes to power in Britain it will follow a different policy. "I am particularly ashamed," he said, "of the Bengal ordinances." He stated explicitly that his party, which he is representing officially at this congress, is opposed to the British armaments against China and is in favor of immediate recognition of the revolutionary Cantonese government. In conclusion he pledged his party to insistence upon the immediate recall of British military forces from changsha; important and unyielding opposition to any attempt at war and consistent support of the Chinese struggle for freedom. "If war breaks out," he said, "we shall be on the side of China, and against England." He shook hands with the Kuo Min Tang representative, Liao, greeting the entire congress in the name of the I. L. P.

It is expected that the congress will last four or five days. The agenda is as follows:

Agenda.

1. Opening addresses.

2. Imperialism and its consequences in the colonial and semi-colonial countries.

3. Co-operation between the national liberation movements in oppressed countries and the labor and the labor and anti-imperialist movements in the imperialist countries.

4. Co-ordination of the national emancipation movements with the labor movements of all countries, colonial as well as imperialist.

5. Imperialism and the danger of wars.

6. Establishment of a permanent world-wide organization linking up all forces against imperialism and colonial oppression.

Committees have been named to deal, respectively, with the problems of struggle against British, French, American and Japanese imperialism. Each of these committees includes representatives from the imperialist countries as well as from the colonies and semi-colonies.

The presiding committee of the congress, as finally selected, is made up as follows:

Honorary chairmen—George Lansbury, M. P.; Professor Albert Einstein, Romain Rolland and Mrs. Sun Yat Sen.

Chairman: Edo Fimmen, secretary of the International Federation of Transport Workers.

Committeemen: China—Liao, Kuo Min Tang; Chen Koen, All-China Federation of Trade Unions. Mexico—Julio A. Progressive Bills Killed By New York State Legislature

ALBANY, N. Y., March 9.—The Gledney bill, which would have permitted physicians to impart birth control information to married persons, was killed today by the codes committee of the assembly. This is the fourth year that this bill is suffering defeat in the legislature.

The Hackenburg bill, which would have prevented injunctions in labor disputes, without notice, was also defeated by the committee.

The same happened to the Hofstadter bill designed to permit women to serve on juries. Other bills pertaining to the same nature were also killed by the Assembly Judiciary Committee earlier during the day.

Navies Increase As Nations Talk "Peace"

terence with Japan and Great Britain did not attract a great deal of attention in the newspapers today.

Lay Blame on France.

The Chronicle, liberal organ, was the only newspaper to comment editorially. This paper points out that France and Italy did not accept the five power conference proposal and adds that "it is evident that an agreement tying down Great Britain to naval restrictions which are not accepted by her nearest neighbors will not be possible." The Chronicle suggests that the way out of the difficulty would be for Great Britain to agree to limitation on condition that the restrictions would not be binding if any European power took advantage of the agreement to build in competition with Great Britain.

Only In Pacific.

In official circles it was stated that the British government might suggest that tri-partite conference be held to apply only to the Pacific, in view of the United States, Japanese and British interests there in such an agreement, however, there would probably be some difficulty as Japan might be expected to ask for her ratio of Pacific ships be greater than that of Great Britain and the United States because her interests are almost entirely in the Pacific.

Gas Technique Improves

Paris, March 9.—Andre Michels, great manufacturer and lecturer on the union of commerce and industry yesterday, detailed the possibilities of poison gas in the coming war. He proposed a league for the annihilation of any country which attempts to destroy Paris. Said Michelin:

"Chemical warfare research has made vast strides since the last war and technique in the next conflict will make possible the asphyxiation of a city the size of Paris. Therefore, we must prepare for the terrible forces to combat the terrible prospect."

To Spread Death

"I strongly urge the government to enter into immediate negotiations with as many nations as can be interested to the end that all may be brought into an international pact to get together should a frightful attack be made on one of our cities in the next war.

"I suggest that in the event a nation makes an asphyxiating gas attack upon Paris or some other city, the nations party to the agreement assemble all available bombing planes in a given city the next day and spread ruin over the territory of the country making the attack

Will Elevate Guns.

WASHINGTON, March 9.—Although the state department has unofficially announced that it is meeting England and Japan to discuss the limitation in naval armaments, the navy department goes ahead with its plans to increase the range of the heavy batteries on thirteen of the United States' eighteen first line battleships.

Defy Baldwin.

In order to do this, the failure of the senate to pass the naval defficiency bill, setting aside $920,000 specifically for the raising of the muzzles of guns on American battleships will have to be overcome by taking the money from other sources.

The navy department is also aware that Ambassador Houghton is instructed to negotiate with the British government over Premier Baldwin's note of protest against the increasing of the range of American naval guns. This note was sent several months ago, but was only made public today.

While negotiations continue, the guns will be elevated.

ORGANIZE THE TRACTION WORKERS!

gestion, unbelievably inhuman and brutal, an actual battering ram of momentarily frenzied animals beating themselves together under a set of human conductors. Such plainly is the situation which the union organizers will have to face, and which they must overcome.

Here indeed is visible in its most extreme form the chain reverse fruit of a disordered and planless system of social organization. A metropolitan city, drunk with super growth, the magnetic center of an unbalanced and disgraceful plumbering system of railway, hemmed over its growth grow the confines of its existence, but denies it inevitable to continue its "growth."

Terrific Strain.

The strain of working under these conditions can be appreciated only by those employed in the harrowing task of directing the underground traffic. Now, it might be supposed that the least compensation for such effort should be a decent wage. But the platform guards are perhaps the most underpaid group of the Interborough. Their average wage probably does not exceed $24 per week.

In addition, their work, especially of those still learning, is of the most uncertain kind. Often men do not average over two or three days per week. They are kept for many months on the beginner's list waiting for their turn. They are seldom informed as to the exact time of their hours to begin work, but like the miners must be always on hand to await what may turn up. These men, begin with a wage of about 21 cents an hour and it is by no means uncommon to find a daily average extending over weeks and even months of $1.75 to $2.00 per day. Also, they must pay for their own uniforms.

And what is the condition among the motormen, the most highly paid group of all? Those workers receive as base an eight hour day. But in reality, only a small number, those who have waited long years for seniority, fights, share in the benefits of the shorter day.

Many of the others work what is termed "swing runs," that is, they have a "run" which may require four or five hours followed by an interlude of three or four hours after which they complete their day's work with another "run" of three or four hours. Another prevalent practise, especially emphasized since the recent Interborough strike, is the one of compelling the men to begin their "runs" at points far removed from their homes. For instance, a motorman who lives in the Bronx is assigned to begin his "run" perhaps at South Ferry (Lower Manhattan) or even at some distant point in Brooklyn.

It may safely be said that two or three hours daily are thus added to the working time of many motormen for which, of course, they receive no pay. Those who have "swing runs" often find it impossible to go home between "tricks" and the intervening time is lost in waiting in this way fourteen or sixteen hours are frequently added to a day's work.

It requires years of training to become a motorman. These workers form a class of highly skilled labor. Yet they pay varies between $35 and $41 weekly. Only in rare instances does it rise higher. Very likely $40 would be a good average. This makes them perhaps the most underpaid employees of their class in the country.

Plenty of Danger.

The work of the motorman has its [illegible] unknown to the public. The constant vibration of the rapidly trains has the uniform effect of causing a number of occupational diseases, notably an aggravated form of stomach trouble. The air in the subways is always filled with steel dust, the constant intake of which into the lungs wreaks its certain havoc in good time. No opportunity is provided during a six or even an eight hour run for the men to take their meals or carry out other needs. They must eat "on the fly," usually a hastily swallowed sandwich. The vibration of the train prevents proper digestion and practically all motormen complain of stomach ailments. As for the other needs of nature, the impossibility of exercising these functions leads to numerous varieties of kidney and intestine troubles.

These are the conditions under which the traction workers pass their lives—and this is not all, for there is still the Company Union!

LEAGUE ADMITS POVERTY MAKES PROSTITUTION

Organized Traffic Gets Women of Poor Lands

GENEVA, March 9.—The appalling number of about ten thousand women are annually bought and sold like so many chattels in the profitable international white slave traffic. That's the conclusion drawn from a voluminous detailed report presented by the League of Nations' white slave committee, headed by Colonel Freeman Snow, of New York.

Poverty Forces Them.

Economic conditions, much more than the innate badness of the women or their desire for such a life, is the chief factor in the supply.

Countries with depreciated currences and a surplus of women are where the outlook is the most gloomy are the sources where slavers operate with the greatest results.

The prices are said to range all the way from one hundred dollars to two thousand dollars, depending on the woman's youth and beauty and the demand.

Prove Commercialization.

The investigation of the committee extended over thirty countries.

One of the most important features of the report is that it ends the controversy of whether there is or not such a thing as an international traffic in women for immoral purposes.

The committee answers strongly in the affirmative.

The information gleaned splashes that not a few white slavers have made comfortable fortunes.

Italy Lines Up With England Against the Soviet Union

Indisputable evidence of the efforts of the British foreign office to increase the tension in its relations with the Soviet Union and its further progress in doing what it denies most vehemently—organizing a Baltic-Balkan bloc against the Soviet Union—has been furnished in the last two days.

Sir Austen Chamberlain, British foreign minister, in an interview in Geneva, has characterized the relations between the two countries as "very bad" and intimated that only concern for other nations which might be involved prevented a break with the Soviet Union.

In plain English—Chamberlain was speaking the language of diplomacy—this means that Great Britain has not as yet lined up a sufficient number of countries to back whatever plan she has in mind to follow the severance of diplomatic relations.

The second incident, in which the hand of Great Britain is quite apparent, is the ratification of the Bessarabian treaty by which Italy acknowledges the right of Rumania to this Russian province. The Italian government has avoided endorsement of this pact since 1920 and its acceptance of it now coinciding with the remarks of Chamberlain and the known fact of agreement between Italy and Great Britain means the former country will back Rumania against the Soviet Union as part of the general scheme of the British foreign office. Italy has been drawn into the anti-Soviet Union bloc.

There is a second consequence of the agreement with Rumania and that is that the breach between Italy and France, the creator of the Little Entente—Rumania, Jugoslavia and Czecho-Slovakia—will become wider. Nor will Jugoslavia look with anything but enmity at the agreement between Rumania and Italy which she knows means no good to her ambitions to dominate the Little Entente.

The new agreement therefore, altho it strengthens the British conducted anti-Soviet Union bloc, creates a whole new series of contradictions in western Europe and the Balkans, only a few of which we have mentioned above.

The anti-Soviet Union front has grown in size by this latest maneuver but it is doubtful if it has gained in real strength by reason of the new antagonisms, or the revival of old ones, which it has brought about.

One thing is certain—it is that Italy's imperialist policy of driving toward the east, backed by Great Britain, is a policy which can end only in war unless stopped by revolution.

The Balkans and the Far East, and there is a direct connection between British policy in China and in eastern and southeastern Europe, are the spots where a world conflagration can begin. United action of the working class and the colonial peoples of the world alone can prevent its breaking out or extinguish when it begins.

Peace Talk and War Preparations.

The U. S. naval department is to begin to elevate the guns of the battleships Oklahoma and Nevada at once.

The British government has protested, claiming that this is in violation of the Washington arms pact but the protest has been disregarded. In the meantime work on the new cruisers authorized by the last congress will be started.

The above news gives us the proper estimate of the sincerity of the Coolidge disarmament proposals. No one but the ever hopeful liberals could see in the proposed conference anything but a grand gesture intended to pacify the sections of the population upon which the burden of militarism falls heaviest.

The invitation to the arms parley was declined by France and Italy but Great Britain and Japan will be present. We thus will be afforded the spectacle of the representatives of the three great imperialist rivals meeting in solemn conclave and discussing disarmament while in the shipyards of each nation, as in the United States, the work of building new battleships and making old ones more efficient proceeds right merrily.

The imperialists talk peace but peace to them means simply that there is no open war in progress between imperialist nations. Little wars like the invasion of Nicaragua, preparations for imperialist aggression in China, slaughter of revolting tribesmen in Syria, these do not count.

But it is for aggression against colonial peoples as well as war against one another that naval guns are elevated and new warships built while hypocritical parleys are held to fool the masses.

War, not peace, is the outstanding characteristic of imperialism and to this the American government offers no exception.

Michigan Students Are Attacked With Tear Gas Bombs by Police

ANN HARBOR, Mich., March 9.—Three persons injured was the toll today of a free-for-all battle between police and 500 University of Michigan students.

The outbreak followed the Michigan-Iowa basketball game which Michigan won, thereby giving it the undisputed claim to the big ten conference championship.

The student first surged up the street to the Arcade theatre. Singing, yelling, hooting, they rushed toward the entrance but were turned back, as the management had a cordon of police waiting for the attack. The Majestic theatre then was selected as the next objective. There the students were met by a force of policemen armed with tear gas.

The students hurled bricks, eggs, sticks and all available objects but the tear bombs proved too affective and another retreat took place.

Browning admitted that his attorneys are gathering evidence for the suit and that it will be filed within short time.

Forming the Imperialist Front Against China

By WILLIAM F. DUNNE.

THE imperialist front against China is being formed.

The tremendous sweep of the Chinese national liberation movement, its broad mass base, its continued victories, its remarkable ability to consolidate and maintain itself, the rapid rise of the labor movement and the extension of organization among the peasants, and finally, its uncompromising anti-imperialist character, is tending to force a united front of the imperialist powers for armed intervention in China.

Rivalries still exist and will continue to exist and their importance must not be under-estimated but the general interests of imperialism, faced by the probability of being swept completely out of China, are becoming paramount.

THE preparations for actual armed invasion of China by a combination of powers with Great Britain the most aggressive at tho moment are becoming more brazen because of the inability of the Chinese militarists (Sun Chuang Fang, Chang Tso Lin, Wu Pei Fu, Chang Tsung Chang) to stop the advance of the Kuomintang forces. No day passes without news of an increase in and new activities of the imperialist forces in China.

The commander-in-chief of these imperialist tools are, it is now clear, unable to offer any serious resistance to the people's armies. It perhaps would be more correct to say that these troops are unwilling to fight against their own people bearing the standard of Sun Yat Sen.

Britain and Japan especially have depended upon the militarists to do the fighting for them. For a certain period this method worked well but the collapse of Sun Chuang Fang, the demoralization of the forces of Wu Pei Fu, the dissatisfaction even among the Shantung troops of Chang Tsung Chang (hitherto regarded as impervious to Kuomintang propaganda) is evidence that little can be expected from these former allies of imperialism. They have taken the Kuomingtang cure.

NOTHING has been more disgusting than the inspired dispatches emanating from Shanghai and penned by the various correspondents of the imperialist press. These individuals have lauded Chinese militarists like Chang Tsung Chang, they have praised his savagery and eulogised his swordsmen as they struck the heads from "agitators." They predicted the collapse of the trade union and nationalist movement in Shanghai after the mass murders but lo and behold, as we learn from other dispatches, there were 300,000 workers on strike instead of the 100,000 which they "estimated" and the bedgerents simply gave the movement a new impetus.

Far from being paralysed by terror the bloody Chinese workers and students have forced the chief of police who was responsible for the executions to flee Shanghai and start in the general direction of Nanking where he will be safe if he gets there. Undoubtedly a little squad of "Dare to Dies" have been instructed to drop all other work until this bloody villain has been sent to join his ancestors.

SIMILARLY, the foremen and superintendents in the Shanghai factories who made the mistake of being loyal to the imperialists and militarists instead of to the people, who co-operated with the murderers are now, according to dispatches, being given a taste of their own medicine which, because they are cowards and mercenaries, will have the effect of further weakening the support they can give to their masters.

The imperialist press correspondents are of course enraged by these unexpected developments. Their fine humanitarian instincts which could tolerate the mass murder of students and workers fighting for their own liberation by degenerate assassins turn to revengeful frenzy when the masses strike back.

But the anti-Chinese propaganda coming from Shanghai and, other cities can be explained only by the vagaries of newspapermen.

Some of the recent dispatches, notably those to the British press, bear all the marks of a deliberate attempt to incite and justify the latest Chinese nation by an imperialist combination. The London Spectator publishes an article from its correspondent which advocates aggression openly. After reciting a number of alleged beatings of missionaries, etc. (he makes no charge that a single person has been killed and lists the injured as Americans) he says:

AT the risk of prophecy, one would venture to say that nothing but a stern, sharp lesson will restore order in China and make it an abode fit not only for foreigners but for the Chinese."

The correspondent characterizes the national liberation movement as "Bolshevist" and says that it is "compilicated by Russian assistance and direction."

The implications of the above statements are clear. The imperialist powers will raise the slogan of "law and order for foreigners and Chinese" as an excuse for war.

It is well to examine carefully the charges of violence against civilian foreigners made at this time. The record shows that right from the time of the Hongkong strike in 1922 up to the present that civilian foreigners as a rule have been perfectly safe in even in the most remote sections of China. The exceptions to this have occurred when the banditry of the militarist leaders, now crushed out in the province which the Kuomintang governs, was rampant.

THE hundreds of missionaries, commercial representatives, etc., who with their families are now in Shanghai, have travelled there from the interior of China without serious mishap although they may have suffered some personal discomfort. But whatever their discomforts have been they are negligible compared with such outrages as the bombardment of Wahsien where some 2,000 Chinese were killed by British cannon, the unprovoked shooting of strikers and students in Shanghai by British police and the recent unexampled public slaughter of workers and students in the same city.

The Chinese know that the imperialists of all nations are involved in these affairs. If they were to take life for life they would be more than justified.

The most amazing thing in connection with the Chinese national liberation movement, and a result of its consciousness and discipline, is the tolerance with which the Chinese have treated nationals whose governments have massacred them by the thousands.

IMPERIALISM, be it British, American, Japanese or French, has no case against the Chinese on this ground.

But the publicity campaign against China will continue for the reason that imperialism must get out of China in the very near future or, in desperation, launch an offensive against Kuomintang and the masses which it leads.

As the Communist International says in its recent appeal to the workers of the world to stop war on China:

"Workers, do not persuade yourselves that the conflicting interests of the imperialists can prevent a joint attack upon China; the international robbers are coming to an agreement concerning the division of the spoils. In preparation for the bloody attack upon the Chinese people, the capitalist provocateurs are trying to destroy the feeling of solidarity amongst the toilers with the heroic struggle of the Chinese people."

THIS is the reason for the deluge of fake atrocity stories and the increase of general propaganda against the Chinese masses and the people's government. Murderous militarists who execute students and workers by the hundreds are praised but the masses led by the Kuomingtang who are smashing the militarists are described as the most fitting target for the fire of imperialism.

If there is a joint invasion of China, and if it meets with some success, it will be followed by an attack on the Soviet Union and the rise of a reaction still blacker than that which now holds the workers and colonial peoples in its grip.

The slogan of "Hands Off China" must be made a reality by forcing the withdrawal of all armed forces from the land of the Red flag of China and snapping in "the sweet wind that blows from the south," as the Chinese say, is driving imperialism to frenzy.

RELIEF IS STILL NEEDED IN PASSAIC REGION; MOST OF THE WORKERS NOT YET RETURNED

PASSAIC, March 9.—Alfred Wagenknecht, chairman of the General Relief Committee, Passaic Strikers, issued an appeal today to organized labor and all sympathizers with the Passaic strikers in their long and arduous struggle for the union to continue contributions for relief until such time as most of the workers are back in the mills.

It was pointed out by the relief chairman that of six thousand Botany strikers only 1,200 have been taken back so far. "This leaves 44,800 who are still struggle for the union to continue contributions for relief until such time as most of the workers are back in the mills.

It was pointed out by the relief chairman that of six thousand Botany strikers only 1,200 have been taken back so far. "This leaves 44,800 who are still struggle for the union to continue contributions for relief until such time as most of the workers are back in the mills.

Some of these have temporary jobs, and are therefore able to look out for their families and selves, but most of them are not able to secure suitable employment and must depend upon relief until such time as they return to the mills. This is also true of the workers from other mills. It is not that the employers are not willing to take back their old and experienced workers, but rather because of the very effectiveness of the big strike the mills ware crippled and resumption has bee necessarily slow. This means that though the strike is over, we must still face the serious question of unemployment. As long as the textile workers are unemployed they must be given relief. We must tide these workers over this unemployment period if we are to be successful in building a union in Passaic."

More Chain Papers.

LYNN, Mass., March 9.—Frederick M. Enwright, publisher of the Lynn-Telegram News, announced today that he was starting a chain of papers in Boston, Worcester, Springfield, Hartford, Coan., and New York City. All will be afternoon publications. The Boston paper will be started first, within six weeks, Enwright stated.

HERETIC BISHOP CONTINUES ON HIS SUCCESSFUL TOUR

Labor Defense Speaker Fills the Halls

CHICAGO, March 9.—Beginning a tour of the important cities of the West, Bishop William Montgomery Brown has just concluded a number of highly successful and enthusiastic meetings in Salt Lake City, Denver, and Los Angeles. In the latter two cities, Bishop Brown held a number of meetings which were very well attended by workers anxiods to hear his famous talk on "The Power of the Workers," according to information received here today.

Leader of International Labor Defense

Bishop Brown, who is a member of the national committee of International Labor Defense, under the auspices of which the tour is being made, is known throughout the world as the "Heretic Bishop." His booklet "Communism and Christianism," a radical interpretation of religion and the labor movement, was the immediate cause for his expulsion from the church, and has been translated into a dozen languages and distributed in hundreds of thousands of copies.

Wherever Bishop Brown has held a meeting the halls have been packed with workers eager to hear him speak on the labor movement. His meetings for the I. L. D. for which he has spoken many times in the East and Mid-west, have aroused great interest in the West and there is every indication to assure the continued success of the tour.

His coming meetings for the I. L. D. on the present tour are as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO: March 31, meeting at California Hall, Turk and Polk streets.

March 12, banquet at California Hall.

OAKLAND, CALIF.: March 13, meeting at Ahmes's Hall, 13th and Harrison Streets.

PORTLAND, ORE.: March 16.

TACOMA, WASH.: March 17. Masonic Hall, 712 St. Helens Ave.

SEATTLE, WASH.: March 20. Moose Temple, 8 p. m.

VANCOUVER, B. C.: March 21, Wesley Church.

SPOKANE, WASH.: March 23.

Women's Party Fakes Delegation to Fight Maximum Hour Statute

NEW YORK (FP).—Women advertised as unorganized workers in the candy stores and restaurants of New York City were taken to the legislature in Albany by the National Woman's Party to oppose a shorter work week law. The same group of women was brought to testify to the state industrial survey commission which formulated the compromise law under consideration.

Industrial Union, represented by the state federation of labor and the Women's Trade Union League and welfare organizations like the Consumers' League, have tried to get a straight 48-hour law for women passed to replace the 54-hour statute now in effect.

Labor's argument against the Woman's Party position on restrictive legislation is chiefly that the organization aims to sweep away women's standards instead of seeking similar protective legislation to aid for men workers in their zeal to make both sexes equal—as far as the law goes—on the job.

Small Wages of Chicago Workers Exposed In Report Just Issued

CHICAGO, March 9.—The Social Service Review soon to be published here by the University of Chicago will have figures on the smallest amounts a family can live on."

The statistics were obtained by the late Dr. Leila Houghteling in a study of "the income and standard of living of unskilled laborers in Chicago." In full reports from 421 of the 467 families studied she learned that:

Seventeen family heads in 1924 earned less than $1,000, or less than $18 a week; ninety between $1,000 and $1,199; 207 between $1,200 and $1,499; eighty-nine between $1,500 and $1,799; thirteen between $1,800 and $1,999, and seven between $2,000 and $2,399.

Entire College Put On Bonds Not to Riot

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., March 9.—The entire student body of Amherst college, alma mater of President Coolidge and prereat resident of his son John, was put on good behavior for a year today by Judge John D. O'Donnell, of district court. At the same time the judge suspended fines of $25 each imposed on George F. Richards and Rollo A. Barnes, members of the freshman class, charged with disturbing the peace. They were arrested during a riot.

Socialists "Bankrupt," Hints V. F. Calverton In Lecture at C. P. Hall

"In spite of the bankruptcy of the socialist party of the United States," declared V. F. Calverton, editor of "The Modern Quarterly," speaking on "The New Negro," at the Workers' School, 108 E. 14th St., Sunday night, "there is no doubt that the Communist Party would join with it to fight some fundamental major issue."

Calverton's lecture, which was an academic discussion of the early Ethiopian culture, brought forth spirited comment from the floor. A large number of speakers, active in the revolutionary movement, insisted that Calverton had neglected to emphasize the necessity for immediate struggle for the emancipation of the American Negroes as wage workers, side by side with their emancipation as a race.

The lecturer, besides being a contributor to "The Nation" and "Current History," also conducts a column for "The New Leader," a socialist weekly.

Calverton has also contributed to the magazine section of The DAILY WORKER.

Want Woman For Regent.

ALBANY, N. Y., March 9.—Republican women of the state started a drive today to have a member of their sex elected to the board of regents to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Charles B. Alexander of New York.

WASHINGTON, March 9.—President Coolidge expects to establish the summer White House "in the West" this year—the term embracing all the territory between Michigan and Utah, it was announced at the White House today.

Dissolve Injunction.

SCRANTON, Pa. (FP).—A Lackawanna county court injunction against Local 119, printing pressmen, was dissolved when the union reached an agreement with the Scranton Printing Co., which took out the restraining order. Three nonunion men whose discharge the union had demanded, were taken into the organization and the shop is again 100%.

Beckerman Asks Cops to Break Kulok Strike

Amalgamated Reactionaries Can't Keep Shop Working

A one hundred percent strike was affected again yesterday in the shop of M. Kulok at 28 Eldridge Street, where picketing has been going on for several days following the attempt of the Joint Board of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers to fill the places of those who struck last week.

Part of the latest set of workers in this shop had already come out before yesterday, but at two o'clock in the afternoon the balance of the workers walked out and went to Manhattan Lyceum for a shop meeting.

Call Out Police.

When the news spread to the office of the Amalgamated, they rushed to the city's industrial squad for help, and these officers came down to Manhattan Lyceum to try to send the workers back.

"Who wants to go to work? Anyone who wants to go back to the shop can go on now", they said.

Cops Phone Joint Board.

But no one answered this call, and finally the squad phoned the Joint Board for help and A. Moscow the well-known business agent, and his famous friend "Frenchy" the gangster, came and took the shop to a meeting at the Joint Board office.

The strike in the Kulok shop was called two weeks ago after M. Littman had been taken off his job and fined $50 by the Joint Board because he attended a left wing meeting.

Always Strike.

Several others who came out on strike with him were also fined, and for the past two weeks the Joint Board of the union has been sending up one set of workers after another only to have them come out on strike when they learn what had happened there.

Picketing of this shop will continue every day, and members of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers' are urged to help in this fight to protect their fellow-workers.

CALIFORNIA BUYS $7,000 BONDS OF GARMENT UNION

As a result of the visit to coast cities of Julius Portnoy, secretary of the "Save the Union" bond issue, California just forwarded subscriptions for bonds to the amount of $7,000, according to a message received by telegraph from Max Levine, who is working for the bond issue in the west.

Despite International.

In announcing this latest contribution from California, A. Weiss, who is in charge of the bond issue, said that it had been subscribed by "friends of the cloakmakers in spite of the repeated efforts of the International to hinder the campaign.

California has contributed a total of $18,000 for bonds since the issue of $250,000 was announced. Of the present sum, $5,000 was sent from San Diego, and $2,000 from Los Angeles, Weiss said.

The bond issue is guaranteed by the Joint Board and by the powerful locals of the operators, finishers, pressers, and dressmakers in the union. The bonds may be purchased in denominations of $25, $50, $100 and $500; bear interest at six per cent, and will mature in two years. Some organizations and shops have bought bonds which they have presented to The DAILY WORKER, thus aiding both cloakmakers and the newspaper.

Giant Liner Aground

The Hamburg American Liner Deutschland inbound with 1,060 passengers on board, went aground in the lower bay today in a thick misty fog which hung over the harbor and city. Aided by two tugs and her own power the giant liner was refloated and proceeded to her pier undamaged.

Train Kills Two

ALBANY, N. Y., March 9.—After passing the Antin bill increasing the salaries of six children's court judges in New York City from $12,000 to $17,500 a year, the senate today reconsidered its vote and restored the bill to the calendar for action next Monday night

SHINGLE WEAVERS SIGN ONE OWNER; OTHERS TIED UP

Chairman of Committee Calls for Relief

HOQUIAM, Wash., March 9.—The Pacific Northwest is on the map of the labor world again with a strike of native born American workers in the basic industry of this district. It may be the beginning of the organization of the thousands of unorganized mill and logging workers of the whole nation. God knows they need it.

The sixth week of the strike of the 1,000 shingle weavers in the Gray's Harbor district finds the ranks of the workers solid and the owners increasingly worried over the accumulation of unfilled orders and the flight of business to manufacturers in other districts. The mills are shut down tight and there are no scabs to take the jobs of the strikers.

As an indication of the wish of the bosses to resume operations the signing up of the Robert Gray Shingle Co., involving men on two shifts, on the old wage scale is of great value to the morale of the strikers.

The strike began on February 1st when the operators after a shutdown of from six weeks to three months announced the opening of the mills with a wage cut ranging from 50 cents to $1.00 per day per man. They figured that the effect on the "starvation cure" of weeks of unemployment would make the men glad to accept any sort of wages. But they underestimated the spirit of the workers.

"For the first time in my life, and I have followed the game for many years, I am proud of the shingle weavers," said C. P. Allison, chairman of the strike committee.

"I had seen them beaten and dragged around so many times that I was unprepared for the wholesale reaction of the workers in opposition to the cut. The spirit of the men is fine and we are out to win. What we need now is financial help from the labor movement of the state. We ask the unions to vote monthly contributions during the period of the strike. Send checks to International Shingle Weavers Union, Local 1, 205 8th St., Hoquiam, Wash.

B. & O. Plan Satisfies Railroad Owners, Who Increase Profits 25%

BALTIMORE, (FP). March 9.—Following the celebration of its centenary, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. announces that its net profit for the year 1926—"net income for the year available for dividends and other corporate purposes, after the payment of interest, rentals, taxes, and other fixed charges"—was $28,404,294, an increase of $7,700,786 over the year 1925. This is a gain in profit of 25% in a single year.

"This is the largest net income earned in any year in the history of your company," the management tells the stockholders, "and reflects in part the improvement in operations resulting from the efficient cooperation of the officers and employes, and from the large expenditure for better facilities and more modern equipment that have been made during the last 5 years."

After paying 4 percent on preferred stock, the B. & O. had left of this profit $17.20 per share on the common capital stock.

Breaking Chains Will Be Shown In Indiana Cities in Near Future

CHICAGO.—The remarkable Russian photo-drama, "Breaking Chains," which has drawn tremendous crowds in its showings thruout the country is showing in three cities in Lake County, Indiana.

On Wednesday, March 9, the picture was shown at the Columbia Theatre, 1124 Columbia Ave.

On Friday, March 11, the residents of Gary will have the opportunity of seeing "Breaking Chains" at the Plaza Theatre, 1132 Broadway.

On Saturday, March 12, the picture will be shown at the Sunnyside Theatre, 3906 Alder St., Indiana Harbor, Ind.

There will be three showings of the picture in each case. The matinees in East Hammond and Indiana Harbor will begin at 2 p. m., and in Gary at 12 noon. In the evenings there will be a showing at each theatre at 7, and another at 9.

Prices of admission for the matinees are: adults 25 cents; children, 10 cents; evening showings: adults, 40 cents; children, 25 cents.

This picture should not be missed by workers who are interested in the historical events that took place in Russia, within recent years. It is one of the best pictures that has ever combined events of historical interest and drama.

BOSTON CENTRAL UNION CONDEMNS ITS LEGISLATORS

Labor Laws Stabbed by Supposed Friends

By PHYLLIS FENIGSTON.

BOSTON, Mass., March 9.—The near future holds startling revelations of questionable practices on the part of labor's legislative agents in the Massachusetts Legislature on Workmen's Compensation, judging from insinuations made by delegates on the floor at the last meeting of Central Labor Union.

The labor politicians are fighting over the spoils and honest men may get their due—for the thieves have apparently fallen out. Personal attacks, hints of charges and counter-charges to be made at the next Central Labor Union meeting flew thick and fast yesterday, from the most unsuspected quarters.

Delegates Aroused.

This matter has occupied four meetings of the Central Body almost to the exclusion of all other business. The Workmen's Compensation Laws have been a football in the hands of our representatives long enough, cried one delegate bitterly, "and it is time that we rescued them for the benefit of the million and a half injured workers in industry who still have to pay their own doctor bills and expenses when they are hurt. Every delegate who spoke on the matter promised an exposure in the near future.

Discover Treachery.

P. H. Jennings, business agent of the Central Labor Union, reported that he had appeared at the State House to speak for Labor's Compensation Bill endorsed by the last state federation convention, when he discovered that the labor legislative agents had split their forces and introduced three separate bills, and he had no way of knowing on which to speak.

No answer for the reasons for this treacherous action was forthcoming.

Flynn's Joker.

John Kearney in an impassioned speech, spoke of the malevolent influence of Michael J. Flynn, high in the legislative councils of the American Federation of Labor, whose evil hand he said had reached into the Massachusetts Legislature. Law and put a joker clause permitting employers to assume their own insurance risks—thus voiding the benefits of the so-called Ohio Plan of Workmen's Compensation.

Delegate Casey rose to present Kearney's report on compensation in the "Labor Leader," in which the item was given a misleading headline about the Ohio Plan.

Lobbyists Use Labor.

Another delegate made a violent attack upon the politics being played by the American Federation of Labor in Washington. "The labor movement is made simply a plaything by these lobbyists," he said.

All is not well with the old guard, once a united body. There are distinct signs of ferment, antagonisms and cleavages. The next meeting of the Boston Central Labor Union promises to be a scene of bitter conflict between the plum-gatherers.

Workers Starve Amid Plenty; Victims of Long Unemployment

Scarcely able to whisper his name, due to weakness caused by undernourishment, Daniel Collins, thirty-eight, was found at the foot of Whitehall Street yesterday by a policeman. He was taken to the Bellevue Hospital. After recovering he stated that he was a longshoreman, out of work, and that he had eaten little for several weeks.

Later in the evening two more men, also longshoremen, were brought to the same hospital. One, Daniel Gorringe, fifty-two, had collapsed in the municipal lodging house and had to be given medical attention. The other, Harry White, twenty-five, stated that he was homeless and that he had not eaten for two days.

Right Wing In Court Fight for Gunman

Sigman's Lawyer Tries To Stop Fine On Guerilla

Max Richter, alias Max Rich, member of "Frenchy's" gang, who is out on bail on two separate charges of assaulting workers, including the shooting of Samuel Cohen, appeared in Jefferson Market Court on Tuesday to answer to the charges of attacking Max Shamez and cutting him with a knife as he was picketing on February 25.

At the request of attorneys for the International, this notorious gangster, who is said to have two previous convictions for felonies, was allowed to change his plea to guilty of disorderly conduct, although he had been charged with felonious assault. He was released upon payment of a fine of ten dollars, although his victim is still suffering from the effects of his attack. Richter is under bail of $3,000 for the shooting of Cohen, who was attacked as he was coming away from the picket line of Reisman, Rothman and Bieber, and shot in one foot.

Lawyer Eloquent.

In spite of the record of this notorious gangster, his lawyer, Mr. Hyman Bushell who represented the International Ladies' Garment Workers' in court, grew very eloquent in behalf of his client, and very wrathy when Richter was fined $10.

He protested to the judge that the gangster should not be penalized for attacking a left wing worker. The lefts are just a bunch of foreigners, said Bushell. They have no respect for this country or its laws. Foreigners are all indecent. They lie, and they only call strikes in order to overthrow the government. This bunch of foreigners do not deserve consideration. They are enemies of "our" institutions and our government.

So speaks the legal representative of the right wing officials.

Picket demonstrations were quiet on Tuesday since few gangsters appeared at the shops. More than two hundred workers picketed at the Millare and Mandell and Brill shops, and large groups went to other shops called on strike by the Joint Board because of discharge of workers for refusal to register with the International or failure of employers to recognize the Joint Board.

Sinclair Trial Gets Under Way With Sharp Clash Among Lawyers

WASHINGTON, March 9. — The government lost the first skirmish in the trial of Harry F. Sinclair for contempt of the senate today when Justice William Hitz in district supreme court sustained defense objections to an attempt to go beyond the senate oil committee's record for evidence relative to the circumstances under which the multi-millionaire oil magnate refused in 1924 to answer certain questions of the senate investigators.

A noisy altercation among attorneys featured the first day in court.

Chicago Physicians To Stop Poisoning

CHICAGO, March 9.—Three plans for the prevention of further poisoning of patients at local hospitals by bichloride of mercury today, by physicians following an investigation into the wholesale poisoning of several babies at Columbus Memorial Hospital. Seven babies were killed through the carelessness of three nurses who gave the babies does of borie acid. The plans include the tinting of each preparation, a separate bureau for preparation and a distinctive labeling of all bottles.

Dr. H. N. Bundeson, commissioner of health will be called to the coroners inquest as there has been a quarrel between them as to who should conduct the investigation.

Liquor Explosion Kills Two Negro Employes

WASHINGTON, March 9. — Two Negro employes were injured, one seriously, when some high-powered confiscated liquor exploded today in the chemistry laboratory of the Internal Revenue Bureau.

The liquor together with some chemicals used in denatured alcohol, had been discarded without warning. The combination exploded and sent a smell of alcohol throughout the building.

ON WOMEN'S DAY EXPRESS REGARD FOR RUTHENBERG

Yorkville Casino Crowd Expresses Grief

The workers who filled Yorkville Casino last night to celebrate International Women's Day on the birthday of Rosa Luxemburg, passed a resolution of sorrow at the death of Comrade Charles E. Ruthenberg, whose ashes, just previous to the opening of the meeting, had been brought to New York from Chicago.

The resolution states, that

"Whereas, the death of Charles E. Ruthenberg, secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party, has deprived the workers of America and the International working class of a great leader;

"And whereas, the working woman of America have special reason to lament the loss of one who was so active in their behalf, and who was outstanding in his advocacy of the winning of the working class woman for the class struggle, and the uniting of the men and women of the working class in the common fight for emancipation.

"Therefore, be it resolved that this meeting at the Yorkville Casino on International Women's Day expresses its deep grief at the loss of Comrade Ruthenberg. Its sympathy to the Workers (Communist) Party in the loss of its leader, and its determination to intensify its efforts for the building up of a movement among the working class women in which Comrade Ruthenberg took such an active part.

Among the speakers who addressed the Women's Day meeting were Rose Wortis, Fanny Warshofsky, J. Louis Engdahl, Margaret Cowl, and Albert Weisbord.

Women's Day in Chicago.

CHICAGO.—Demonstrating the solidarity of the woman of the working class, a large number of working class women's organizations in the city of Chicago are co-operating together to hold a joint celebration of International Women's Day on March 12.

Women workers from the factories and mills of Chicago are making common cause with women workers from the homes of the toilers of the city. They are taking the occasion of International Women's Day to voice their resolution that the women of the working class should fight as one against the oppression of the bosses.

The Chicago demonstration will be held at Northwest Hall corner North and Western Avenues Saturday evening, March 12, at eight o'clock. The program will include such good numbers as the Lithuanian children's chorus, singing by Rose Lindberg and several well known speakers. The admission will be free of charge, and all workers and their families are welcome to attend this celebration.

CHICAGOLITES

Sad Days in Chicago.

It is Saturday. The East End room of Ashland Auditorium is decorated in red and black. Red and black arrows point the way from the street to the room. Workers are coming and going, only the silent guards of the Workers Party, the Y. W. L. and the Pioneers remain at the body of C. E. Ruthenberg.

They are bringing wreaths and flowers with big red ribbons and writing in gold. The room is already filled with flowers, and they are bringing more and more. The party units, the Workmen's Circle branches, individual comrades, trade unions, individual shops, such as the workers from Hart, Schaffner & Marx and others are paying their tribute to the dead leader of the Communist movement. Occasionally newspaper photographers snap pictures. Everybody speaks in a whisper. . . .

Our Great Fathers.

"In the early days in this mid-west country the settlers robbed the Indians, defied federal laws and defrauded the United States government," states Prof. William E. Dodd of the department of history at the University of Chicago, at a conference for the prevention of crime.

He claims that the present day crimes are a result of the lawlessness of our great fathers. "Great and respectable business men violated state and federal laws in the management of great railways and business in this midwest," he stated further.

The wise professor did not mention the highway business men of today. He just picked on the poor pickpockets and the cheap robbers.

Col. Lawrence, Arabian Adventurer, Bares All At $20,000 Per Throw

You'll have to spend $20,000 if you want to get the inside dope on the methods that Colonel Thomas Edward Lawrence employed in securing the support of Arabian chieftains for the British armies during the world war.

The unexpurgated edition of Lawrence's book "The Seven Pillars of Wisdom," will cost $20,000, according to one of the stipulations made by the author in his contract with his publisher, George H. Doran and Company. The reason given by Lawrence is that he does not want to have "political and personal" information in the book circulated.

Ruthenberg Challenged U. S. Capitalism When It Felt Itself All-Powerful

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

CAPITALIST greed felt securely enthroned in New York City, on Tuesday night, March 8th. Its "bomb squad" was ever alert at the great Grand Central Station, and all along the line of march, from 42nd street to the Manhattan Lyceum on Fourth street, police were anxiously attentive, but the long procession of mourning comrades were permitted to follow in peace the ashes of our dead leader, C. E. Ruthenberg, for a brief part of the long journey, on their way to the last resting place 'neath the walls of the Kremlin, at Moscow, capital city of the Union of Soviet Republics.

Yet in this very city Ruthenberg had predicted the downfall of this powerful capitalist state, mightiest in the world today. His prediction was thrown as a challange into the midst of court, prosecutor and jurryman, and he got a prison sentence for telling what he believed.

Built and strengthened for 150 years, with a seemingly disciplined police force today, a mighty army and powerful navy; armed forces on sea, land, air with apparently smoothly running administrations in villages, cities, counties, states and nation at Washington, the prosecutor of Ruthenberg could not imagine the time when the present capitalist government of the United States of America would cease to function.

The prosecutor's questions and Ruthenberg's answers ran thru my mind as we marched, first along Park avenue, the home of the great rich, then into Fourth avenue where the class struggle shows its naked fists in trade union headquarters edging on privately owned shops and factories, then into 14th street and along Second avenue on the East Side where the workers live in dense masses. The questions and answers are to be found in the court record as follows:

"Q. How can the government break down if strikes are going on? A. Thru its inability to function.

"Q. What do you mean by its inability to function, I am speaking of the government while strikes are going on, inability to function? A. Yes; if the industries, if the railroads, if the telegraph were tied up in this country thru the strike of the working class, if industry were broken down thru the contradictions of capitalism, it could be very well the fact that the existing government could no longer carry on its work as a government, thru not having the means of doing so.

"Q. We still have our army and we have got our navy and we have our police department thruout the country; how is the government broken down because industry breaks down? A. It would be very conceivable that if such a situation existed that the larger part of the army, as was the case in Russia, would support the workers in their efforts to establish a government that could function.

"Q. You mean by that, that the soldiers would desert the regular army and go over to the support of the workers? Is that what you mean? A. That the army, as a social unit would go over to the support of the workers' councils, yes."

Asst. District Attorney Charles S. Weeks began to feel a little uneasy at this point and began asking a few questions of his own, that Ruthenberg answered as follows:

"Q. If the railroad workers struck, there are other people in this country besides railroad workers, are there not? A. I presume so.

"Q. Could not the citizens who believe in the government take the places of the railroad workers, and with less efficiency, operate the railroads? A. The situation that I have prescribed presupposes that the masses at that particular time will have been placed in a position of opposition, that they will have been disgusted, that they will desire a change in the situation in the government, or otherwise such a change could not be brought about.

"Q. If the masses numerically want to change the form of government, why don't they do it with the exercise of their vote? A. In the first place, I think it has been figured out that one forty-fourth of the people of the United States, of the citizens of the United States, can block any change in the form of government, that is, thru the arrangement of the method of making amendments to the constitution, the fact that three-quarters of all the states are required.

"The various checks and counterbalances which were inserted in the constitution in order to protect the existing form of government, the government of the capitalists, this method is a long and tedious process, and my explanation presupposes the existence of a crisis, when, it in a matter of life and death, a matter of getting food, getting clothing, getting homes, having society function, for the people to act at once."

Then the prosecutor again took up the questioning.

"Q. But the men going on strike on the railroads cuts down the possibility of transporting the food, doesn't it? A. The new government would have to do it—

"Q. Please answer my question. I will come to the new government later on. A. It would.

"Q. When the workers go out on strike, the railroad workers, that paralyzes the railroads and prevents the transportation of food unless volunteers take their places? A. That is the very point of my illustration that the capitalist system brings about the situation."

Mr. Rorke, the prosecutor, here yelled, "I object," but the court decreed that Ruthenberg might answar, and he did as follows:

"The capitalist system brings about this situation where workers are compelled to strike in order to secure enough to live on, and this paralyzes industry, and this will compel the workers to take steps to change the system in order to eliminate this paralysis of industry, this breakdown.

"What steps are the workers going to take at that point to change the system? They are out now. They have gone out on strike. What steps are the workers going to take to take the railroad and change the system? A. I have stated that in such a crisis there would very likely be set up workers' councils which would assume the state power and begin to function as a government and would take control of the means of production and distribution and operate them for the good of society.

"Q. Do you mean these workers, proletarian workers, are going to take these railroads and other sources of production and production at that point? A. I mean that the working class will take these means of distribution and production and operate them.

"Q. Do you say that at that point a working class state has been established? A. I stated that in such a crisis, workers' councils would be established which would begin to function as a government."

And it was of that change and its triumph that the marchers thundered as they sang "The International," marching in memory of C. E. Ruthenberg, who had courageously challenged American capitalism in the hour when it felt eternally all-powerful.

Ruthenberg---the Leader

By MEILECH EPSTEIN

I CAN see his figure standing before me, as if alive. A tall and stalwart figure, and full of noble bearing. There is looking at me with his light grey eyes of a bluish hue assuming a bright steel gase in moments of serious reflection. And there is his face, refined, intellectual and firm, with its even and sharp lines. I can hear his deep, amotional, soft and caressing voice imparting a tone of inner warmth of feeling and of unusual strength and conviction. It is the voice of a leader.

I have often asked whence has this son of a German longshoreman, who knew so much want and suffering in his early youth, darived this iron ahod body, this steel character, and commanding personality?

Yes, he was born to lead. Those who have seen him but once will never forget the impression he made upon them. And this impression was even more intensified the more intimately one had come to know him.

It is true that as Communists we must not allow ourselves to fall into sacrificing and forceful, but uneisastic the fact of this heavy and unreplaceable loss to keep to the rule. The deep feeling of personal, painful regret must find its expression.

Due to specific American conditions the labor movement of this country has not brought forward the type of a leader that we have seen in Europe. Something was always lacking even in the best of our labor leaders. One sidedness has always been one of his weaknesses. On the one hand, Debs with his over-sentimentalism and emotionalism often losing himself in the dim realms of abstract and beautiful phraseology. On the other hand we had a Daniel DeLeon—hard, inflexible, unyielding and narrow sectarian.

Debs' heart always throbbed in accord with the wishes and needs of the masses, he identified himself with the masses and he was one of them in fact, but he was not their leader. At times he stood at the head of great labor struggles, but lacked the real qualities of leadership. He lacked the theoretical and analytical line of Marxism. He gave himself up to every new wave that came along and he was tossed along by the waves, like a ship without a compass.

Daniel DeLeon was proficient in theory, the most thoro Marxist in America. An obstinate fighter, self-sacrificing and forceful, but unelastic. DeLeon did not understand the Leninistic method of giving in in case of necessity, but not giving up, that tho we must not compromise on main principles, yet it is often necessary to detour from the main road in order to achieve the main objective. DeLeon probably had the qualities of leadership, but he lived always far ahead of time. He did not have the capacity to adapt himself to the objective conditions of the labor movement of his time. Therefore he had to fail, just as Debs, his exact counterpart, had to fail.

Charles E. Ruthenberg was the first comprehensive leader that the labor movement of this country produced. In Ruthenberg there was a combination of all the good qualities of both Debs and DeLeon, minus their weak points. It was not his fault that our Communist movement has not had time to develop to any extensive dimensions and his great capacities for leadership have not met the suitable conditions for their full display.

Ruthenberg was an excellent Marxist. This meant a whole lot in the American socialist movement. In the conglomeration of syndicalism, semi-anarchism and spineless reformism which swarmed within the socialist party, a good Marxist was a rare and valuable phenomenon. Ruthenberg came to the socialist party by way of Marx and he remained a Marxist till the end.

Ruthenberg was an energetic and courageous fighter. This even his bitterest opponents will admit. Intrepid and obstinate in struggle, he threw himself into the midst of every important labor fight disregarding his own life and security. In this he was like DeLeon, but what a big difference between the two of them. Unlike DeLeon, Ruthenberg was not sectarian. To him the letter of the Marxian theory was not a thing of first consideration, as it was to DeLeon. Ruthenberg had an understanding and sympathetic ear for the immediate needs and demands of the masses. Ruthenberg's Marxism was rounded out by his Leninism.

To Ruthenberg mass-activity and mass-struggle were life itself. His road was the highway leading towards the American working masses. And this was extraordinary in a man who came to the socialist movement from a big executive position in the offices of a great cloak factory, the kind of a position that makes a person rather pedantic and detached from the channels of life of the masses. He gave up a great career under capitalism, abandoned his early interests in accounts and figures and attached himself to the life and the struggles of the masses. His mind and his heart were awake to their needs and strivings. All his strategic maneuvers for a labor party were expressions of his great desire to draw the American working class into the struggle against capitalism. This was the aim of his life. He was deeply wounded by the indifference of the overwhelming mass of the workers to their class interests and he was always searching for the way to arouse them to the struggle for their class interests.

Ruthenberg, the intrepid fighter! How many in the labor movement can boast of such a record? Imprisoned twice and a third imprisonment awaited him, but death came along and snatched him out of the hands of capitalist justice. Death is more formidable even than the United States Supreme Court itself.

Ruthenberg was never a parlor-revolutionist. He was not a book-socialist, in spite of the fact that he came to socialism by way of books and theories. His immense anargias have not allowed him to be lost within the realm of abstract theories and speculations. At the very start he became a leader of the Left Wing of the socialist party. He gave himself entirely to the revolutionary movement without conditions or reservations.

Hillquit and Berger were also opposed to war, but what a great difference between their opposition and his. At the St. Louis convention Ruthenberg was the leader of the Left Wing, who fought for the famous anti-war resolution. Right after the convention he carried that resolution to the working masses. He led the great anti-war labor demonstration in Cleveland, the only one of its kind in America. And when capitalist justice made him pay the price he accepted it with the joy of one who has done his duty and was ready to give everything he had for the revolutionary cause.

At the famous Bridgeman convention, when it became known that the convention place would be raided by department of justice agents and that it was necessary to escape, it was agreed that Comrade Ruthenberg should be among the first to leave. But he would not go. As secretary of the party, he claimed, he could not leave the convention before everything is arranged and put in order. He stayed to the last minute and was overtaken by the government spies. Such was Ruthenberg—the first to face hard work and danger, the last to escape from it.

Ruthenberg was more than the secretary of the party. A builder by nature, he kept on building the structure of the Communist movement in this country step by step and layer upon layer, diligently, unswervingly. A robust builder, with a rich experience and a good understanding of the correct Leninist line—he was the leader of the Workers (Communist) Party and the beloved comrade trusted by all.

He was but 44 years of age. He was in the best of his years, full of energy and vitality, when cruel death snatched him away from our midst.

His last words were the proper climax of his eventful revolutionary life.

Charles E. Ruthenberg is dead, but his party is alive. Let us strengthen and build our party, and his

ARTHUR MacMANUS

By GERTRUDE HAESSLER.

THE press last week carried a brief notice of the death of our British comrade Arthur McManus. In one week the American and British movements each mourn the death of one of its best-known figures. Those of our American comrades who met him when he lived in Moscow knew Mac as a genial comrade, always ready to suspend his intense absorption in world labor problems for an hour or two of good fellowship. His frail short figure, his large head with its deep brow surmounted by a shock of unruly hair, his merry eyes and friendly smile and his broad Scotch accent made Mac one of the most popular and likeable figures in the international group in Moscow.

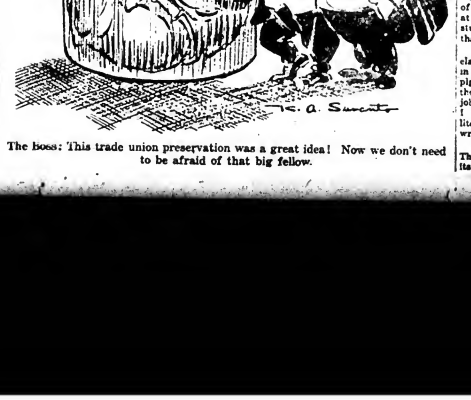
But in Moscow MacManus was already suffering from failing health and the gradual loss of physical strength which ended in his untimely death. The qualities which made Mac the mass leader he was, the Mac who helped to keep the working class movement alive in England during the worst days of reaction of the world war, and to teach the British militarists that there was a limit to which the workers could be driven—these qualities of course had little chance to display themselves in Moscow.



Before the creation of the British Communist Party, MacManus was one of the outstanding leaders of the Socialist Labor Party, the only party in England which in those days could boast of any degree of mass working class following. The party was very small as numbers go, but its main strength was in the industrial areas of the north of England and in Scotland. It wielded a powerful influence in these districts during the war, among the workers in the large munitions, ship-building and armament construction works, particularly in the Clydeside. This was the seat of the famous shop steward movement. Under the fearless leadership of MacManus and his comrades, a revolutionary spirit was developed which became more and more intense as the war progressed. Persecution and imprisonment and the threats of court martial left the leaders undaunted, till at last the baffled government kidnaped them and forbade them to set foot in the disturbed areas. These were the famous Clydeside deportations which displayed the power of the workers' leaders by the fact that the government dared not resort to more drastic measures against them.

The Socialist Labor Party was very left in its tendencies, and when the question arose after the war of joining existing workers' class parties into a single Communist party, it held severely aloof. McManus was one of the leaders who at last succeeded in swinging the best elements of the party into the unity negotiations which ended in the formation of the British Communist Party in 1920 of which MacManus was the chairman until that office was abolished.

Arthur MacManus was all his life a revolutionary by instinct, all his life a fighter in the working class cause, for that cause he more than once suffered hardship and imprisonment. Shortly after his return from Moscow in 1925 he was again arrested along with eleven other Communist leaders as a result of the spectacular "red raids" of the British government. He was sentenced to imprisonment. With health already broken, there is no doubt that this new term hastened his end. He died in the cause for which he had lived.

BOOKS

CONTRIBUTORS WANTED.

We are looking for brief, intelligent, well-written book reviews. They should be no longer than 850 words. Books discussed must be timely (not necessarily hot off the press), and must be written from the point of view of those who have accepted the Marxist interpretation of society as a point of departure. Each review should carry with it the exact title of the book, author, publisher, year, and price. Also full name and address of reviewer.

Those who have been reading the BOOKS department can gather a general idea of what we should like to get from our contributors.

POOR WHITES.

The Twilight of the White Races, by M. Muret. Charles Scribners & Sons. $2.50.

Poor Woodrow Wilson. Little did he know, when his Attorney-General, A. Mitchell Palmer, was hounding Reds, that six years later his name would be mentioned as a collaborator of the Third International; little did he know when he kicked off that his innocuous phrases would, like the eyes of Halen of Troy, set the world afame. Poor Wilson died before Muret published his "Twilight of the White Races."

Here is Muret's discovery: There is a black and brown as well as a yellow peril. Turkey, Egypt, India, Syria, Persia, Afghanistan, China are all rising against the white races. The African Negroes will rise soon.

• • •

How account for this menace to white supremacy? That's simple, says Muret. "Wilson's phrases about self-determination and Moscow propaganda done it." The yellow, brown and black races docilely submitted to the domination of the white race until Wilson came along, and started to mouth about the rights of small nations to determine their own destiny; until the Third International came along and started to hand out gold to backward races in an effort to further their own nefarious schemes.

• • •

Muret's book contains a good deal of excellent material on the nationalist revolts in Asia and Africa. As an interpretation of that material, it is ridiculous.

H. F.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.

"Your column is always entertaining, and sometimes informative," writes John Ramburg of Brooklyn. "There is one suggestion that I should like to make, however. And that is that you run occasional bibliography on subjects of current and vital interest.

"A bibliography on China, for instance, would be far more valuable and interesting just now than several columns of wise-cracks about Will Durant and George Jean Nathan."

A good suggestion.

We print below the names of a number of books on China. No one of them deals adequately with the subject; nor do all of them combined give the reader a complete picture of the events in China or the social and economic forces underlying them. They are, however, in our conception, the best books available on the subject.

• • •

Communist International for December 30. Contains a study of rural conditions and peasant organization, by R. Miff.

The Awakening of China, by James Dolsen. Probably the best analysis of the nationalist movement that has yet been published. Omits the peasantry and under-estimates the role of the middle classes, however.

Foreign Financial Control in China, by T. W. Overlach. The story of imperialist aggression in China.

China's Place in the Sun, by Stanley High. Material for historical background, and student movement.

Western Civilization and the Far East, by Stephen Hall-King. Historical background, the Revolution of 1911, the industrialization of China.

China Yesterday and Today, by E. T. Williams. Valuable summary of events since the Boxer rebellion.

British Foreign Office: Report on Labor Conditions in China. Contains report of Shanghai Labor Commission; conditions in Shanghai mills, hours, wages, etc.

Why China Sees Red, by Putnam Weale. A Soviet-gold interpretation of the events in China. Record of events 1924-25; the Shanghai massacre.

Decidental Interpretation of the Far Eastern Problem, by Woodhead, Norton. Articles by prominent imperialist writers; contains some good material on industrialization by Julian Arnold, however.

China and the Powers, by H. K. Norton. A history of China's relations with the powers—from an imperialist point of view.

Rural Economy in China, by Prof. Taylor and C. B. Malone. Only reliable survey of rural conditions in China. Farm wages, taxes, size of land holdings, etc.

China at the Conference, by W. W. Willoughby. The Washington Conference and the Shantung question.

China's Awakening, by Tyau. Social results of China's industrialization by a conservative Chinese.

Foreign Rights and Interests in China, by W. W. Willoughby. Imperialist expansion into China; unequal treaties; extraterritorial rights, concessions, leased territories, etc.

China Year Book, Woodhead. Contains valuable statistical data; extent of industrialization, etc.

International Press Corresponding.

British Labour Monthly. Especially articles by R. Page Arnot and Ewer.

• • •

These books should be read with a great deal of care. Many of them, particularly those by Weale, Woodhead and Norton, subscribe to the Soviet-gold interpretation of the nationalist movement, which is delicately intertwined with fact. The reader should be careful to separate fact from imperialist propaganda.

MORE ABOUT "THE NEW MASSES."

"Your reviewer, Sender Garlin," writes Benjamin Weiss, "has said a few things about 'The New Masses' that have been waiting to be said for many months. The complete fatuousness of some of its attempts to be jazzy and up-to-date has been trying the patience of many who, like myself, hopefully greeted the birth of 'The New Masses' and waited in vain for some signs of its emergence from the nipple and diaper stage.

"Your reviewer, however, failed to point out a howling disparity. In the issue in which 'the correct revolutionary proletarian attitude towards sex' is so pompously discussed, there is not a single article about China. I realize, of course, that China has nothing to do with the correct revolutionary proletarian attitude towards sex, but am I cookoo or just a trifle stupid if I venture to suggest that the goings-on in China are vastly more important than any such florid nonsense. Is 'the New Masses' a revolutionary working-class magazine of the arts or is it merely another demanted offspring of Greenwich Village?

"This hasn't been 'The New Masses' first offence. From the very beginning the magazine has seemed to consider it a moral obligation to be smarter than Mr. Mencken and more jazzy than the tabloids. What has been its contribution toward molding a positive working class culture and working class art? Sure the pictures have been funny. But one gets tired of wise-cracks and college-boy cynicism. And in its desire to be 'proletarian' at any cost 'The New Masses' has gone to ludicrous extremes, and printed stuff by Alfred Kreymborg and Waldo Frank that was no more proletarian than Otto Kahn is.

"And where has 'The New Masses' been in the battles of the working class against reaction? What part has it played in the fight that left wing in the needle trades is making against the right wing renegades and stool-pigeons of the A. F. of L.? Why could it not have led the protest against the threatened assassination of Sacco and Vanzatti instead of leaving this job to the sanctimonious old lady of Park Row, the New York World? Yes, I remember it did publish one article on Sacco and Vanzetti, a highly literary interview with them by John Dos Passos. It was very pretty writing.

"Personally I think your reviewer was too easy with 'The New Masses.' The magazine, which is not yet a year old, seems to have definitely entered its dotage."

WORKERS OF MEXICO, CANADA AND GERMANY, WITH YOUTH OF SOVIET UNION, MOURN LOSS OF RUTHENBERG

The militant workers and peasants of Mexico, organized in the Communist Party of that country, have joined with the workers of Canada, Germany and the youth of the Soviet Union, in sending a message to the Workers (Communist) Party of America expressing their sorrow at the death of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg, who was a leader of the oppressed peoples of all countries.

At the present time, when Wall street is looking with greedy eyes on the other side of the Rio Grande, waiting for an opportunity to start another war of aggression against that country, it is indeed fitting that a message of comradeship should be sent from the workers of one country to those of the other.

One of Comrade Ruthenberg's main tasks was combatting Imperialism which includes a struggle against the tendency in favor of war between America and Mexico, in which workers of both countries will be mutually murdered to enhance the profits of Wall Street.

The message from Mexico, signed by Rafael Carrillo, General Secretary, is as follows:

"The Mexican Communist Party mourns with brother party the loss of Comrade Ruthenberg, a true and brave fighter of the proletarian vanguard.

"Central Committee, Communist Party of Mexico."

Another message was received from the Communist Party of Canada as follows:

"The Communist Party of Canada in behalf of the revolutionary workers of this country sends its sincere condolences to our sister party of the American workers in their great loss of our courageous and leading comrade, Chas. E. Ruthenberg. The workers of the American continent can ill afford such a loss. We are confident, however, that despite this great loss to the labor movement the revolutionary workers of America will close their ranks and in the last words of our dead comrade 'fight on' to final victory.

"Central Executive Committee, J. McDonald, secretary."

The Young Communist League of the Soviet Union has cabled as follows:

"Central Committee, Lenin Young Communist League Soviet Union mourns together with you untimely death of Comrade Ruthenberg. Close the Communist ranks, make closer connection with working masses.

"Central Committee Lenin Young Communist League."

The Communist Party of Germany cables:

"The eleventh convention of the Communist Party of Germany expresses its heartfelt sorrow in the face of the most serious loss which your party sustained by the death of your great leader, Ruthenberg, the pioneer of American Communism. On the grave of Ruthenberg mourns the proletariat of the whole world. Forward in his spirit on the road of the proletarian revolution.—Eleventh Convention of Communist Party of Germany."

CURRENT EVENTS

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

THE United States government will take steps to block gun running into Nicaragua. Which is equal to saying that the United States insists on having the gun running monopoly with the reactionary puppet Diaz at the receiving end. This raid on Nicaragua by the United States government is one of the most brazen acts of imperialism in modern times. The state department has not even gone to the extent of clothing the attack in the mantle of high moral purpose, outside of some cursory lying and an attempt to people the political jungles of Latin America with Bolsheviks for the edification and horrification of the native sons and the grand spectators of the American revolution.

THIS man Diaz must not have enough forces at his back to give him an osteopathic treatment. Despite the presence of a large section of the American navy in Nicaraguan waters and quite a considerable force of marines on Nicaraguan soil the liberals seem to have no trouble in chasing Diaz's tin soldiers over the landscape and if the American admiral, Latimer, did not declare neutral zones just as soon as the liberals relieved chunks of territory of the presence of reactionary troops, Diaz by now would be selling pencils at 42nd Street and 6th Avenue or running errands for the president of the National City Bank.

"WHEREVER you see a head, hit it," seems to be the motto of the New York police force as well as of old Donnybrook Fair, where rodent workers are concerned. One of the most disgraceful exhibitions of brutality seen in this city in many years was witnessed last Wednesday evening at Carnegie Hall on the occasion of the Ruthenberg memorial services. It was a solemn occasion and the demeanor of those who came to pay a last tribute to comrade Ruthenberg was entirely in harmony with the solemnity of the moment.

Police Brutality.

Police brutality was one of the features of the Ruthenberg memorial meetings held Wednesday night. Especially at Carnegie Hall was it noticeable.

Police Officer 11600 was the chief offender with police officer 15127 the second best. Stationed at the 56th St. stage entrance they prevented the speakers, committee members and the singers of the Freiheit Gesange Frein from entering for a period of over one hour. All those who attempted to gain admittance or ask either of the policemen why they were barred, were without any ceremony made to move.

Wolfe Handled Roughly.

When Bertram D. Wolfe, director of the New York Workers School and one of the speakers, was denied admittance, and tried to explain that he was one of the speakers, he was grabbed by the scruff of the neck and shoved into the gutter.

Frank Miller, a member of the literature committee who was bringing copies of The DAILY WORKER to the meeting, fared even worse at the hands of officer 11600. The policeman grabbed his head with one hand and used his other hand as a ram to drive him to the gutter where he threw him into the mud. Many other workers whose names were not obtained received the same treatment. The DAILY WORKER reporter was also barred for over an hour and only with the greatest difficulty did he obtain admittance.

Bomb Squad Present.

The "bomb squad" was also present in full force inside the hall but no excitement took place, all of its energy reserved for the street.

Among the other speakers who addressed The Carnegie Hall meeting and whose names were omitted from yesterday's paper due to the lateness of the hour are: H. Linson, editor of the Chinese Nationalist Daily, local organ Kuomintang, who brot a message from the Communist and revolutionary nationalists of China; Lovett Fort Whiteman of the American Negro Labor Congress and Herbert Zam, editor of the Young Worker. Linson was accompanied on the platform by a committee of five from

U. S. Destroyed Liberal Arms In Nicaragua

Kellogg Lied Again According To Senate Committee Witness

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 10.—Stakely W. Morgan, one of Kellogg's aides informed the senate committee on foreign relations that American naval forces were responsible for the destruction of a quantity of arms and ammunition belonging to the Sacasa Liberals—which the state department has persistently denied hitherto. Secretary Kellogg said on several occasions that the Liberals themselves lost the munitions in transporting it across the Rio Grande River, but Morgan admitted Admiral Latimer's forces were responsible, as charged by the Liberals.

Marines Occupy Matagalpa.

MANAGUA NICARAGUA, March 10.—American marines have now occupied Matagalpa and 500 Nicaraguan soldiers have consequently evacuated the town.

The Nicaraguan forces have marched into the interior where a concentration of Diaz troops is in progress in preparation for an attack against General Moncada's Liberal troops.

General Feland and other high marine officers and 1,000 U. S. Marines have arrived in Managua, having disembarked at Corinto on Monday. Three hundred other Marines who disembarked at the same time have been posted on guard duty along the railroad running between Managua and the coast.

President Diaz and United States Minister Eberhardt have conferred relative to the terms for a $700,000 emergency loan submitted in New York firm, but no decision as to the flotation of the loan has been made.

President Diaz stated that Nicaragua will seek a larger loan of from $12,000,000 to $20,000,000 once peace is established, pointing out that the national debt is out $6,500,000.

1,600 More Marines.

BLUEFIELD, Nicaragua, March 10.—The transport Henderson arrived at Corinto today with 1,600 American marines.

One hundred and seventy-five of the marines will be sent to Matagalpa and the balance will replace sailors on shore duty.

El Bequeron, a railroad station eighteen miles west of Managua, is stated officially to be the place where the American marines were fired upon last Friday but there has been no official report of casualties if any.

It is reported here tonight that General Moncada has been formally notified of the neutral zone established in the vicinity of Matagalpa.

AUSTRALIAN FAT BOYS APPOINTING MISSION TO U. S.

Pick "Skates:" Workers Tie Can To Them

SYDNEY, Australia, Jan. 28 (By Mail).—During last year the employers' government in the federal parliament, decided that new methods would have to be introduced for the purpose of exploiting the workers of this country, to a greater degree than they are exploited at the present time. Knowing full well that the employers of Australia use every speed-up method known to them, the government decided to send a delegation to your enlightened country to get full particulars of your co-partnership schemes, bonus and piece-work systems, card systems and the loudly boosted "American Plan."

Realising that the workers of Australia would have more sense than to be impressed with a report given by a delegation of employers, the government decided to include in the delegation four men, whose names were well known to the workers. The labor councils in each state of Australia were asked to nominate three representatives, and the government proposed to choose the most suitable four for their purpose. The labor councils are—by the way—the head of the trade unions in each state.

Favored Militant Delegates.

The labor councils were not to be caught as easy as that. Most of them realised the purpose for which the delegation was being sent, but considered it advisable to send the most militant representatives possible, so that a working class report on the American conditions could be brought back. A ballot of the whole of the councils was held; four representa-

U. S. Planes Delayed

RIO DE JANEIRO, March 10.—The three American army "good will" planes hopped off from Guarantuba, San Paulo State, at 7 o'clock this morning for Santos.

More Airplanes Show Fraud in Peace Talk

England and U. S. Agree to Meet; Both In Air Race

WASHINGTON, March 10.—Although Japan has again unofficially announced that she will participate in the three power arms conference if such an event takes place, and administration leaders here believe that France and Italy will send "observers" who may at times take the status of delegates, pessimism over any real results in the way of disarmament continues.

The conference, if it now takes place, they say, will be more for the sake of bulldozing the enemies of England on the continent, and saving the reputation of Coolidge, than for any other purpose.

More Planes.

All the countries originally invited to send delegates are increasing their armament. It is known that the British air minister, Sir Samuel Hoare, announced in the house of commons this afternoon that Great Britain is building two airships, each capable of carrying more than 200 fully armed men, and a complete squadron of smaller airplanes. Planes would probably not be limited, even if some agreement was reached on naval strength.

Big Contracts.

The U. S. army is continuing its five year building program, and has just allotted a million and a half dollars worth of contracts for three different types of planes.

American airplanes, training at the France field, in the canal zone, participated in maneuvers by squadrons of the navy, ostensibly designated a "practice defense against an Asiatic power," the implications resulting from the official descriptions of the maneuvers have not healed any mistrust.

Labor Party Fights Increase.

Perhaps the only hopeful sign came from sources the present administration in Washington does not care to be alliance with. Laborite members of the English parliament denounced the cabinet's plan to create a navy for India, as merely an underhanded attempt to increase armaments under the fraudulent guise of greater autonomy to a colony.

Offer of Shingle Mill Owners to Eventually Pay Old Wage Rejected

HOQUIAM, Wash., March 10.—An offer on the part of the shingle mill operators to promise to restore the old scale of wages to their striking workers when the price of shingles reaches a certain stated price level if the men would only return to work, has been refused by the strikers. Following this action negotiations between the two groups have been suspended.

Dupont Powder Flare At 'Continuous Dryer' Mortally Injures Man

WILMINGTON, Del., March 10. —Two men were seriously injured, one probably fatally, in a flare-up of 3,000 pounds of powder today in the Dupont powder factory at Carney's Point, N. J., according to reports. The men were unloading the powder from a "continuous dryer," on the second floor of the "dry house" when the explosives became ignited.

The injured were: Howard Whitesell, 51, of Pennsville, N. J., his cousin, Gilbert Whitesell, 41, also of Pennsville.

Howard was badly burned about the head. He is reported dying in the plant hospital. Gilbert is in the same hospital seriously burned about the body. He is expected to recover.

SENATOR BLOCKS REED COMMITTEE BALLOT SEIZURE

Won't Sign For Expense —Stops Graft Probe

WASHINGTON, March 10.—Seizure of the ballot boxes containing primary votes in four Pennsylvania counties by the Reed Committee of the senate was indefinitely postponed today.

Refusal of Senator Keyes (R) of New Hampshire, chairman of the senate committee on audit and control, to "O. K." a voucher for the expense of obtaining the boxes, acted as a barrier. Sergeant-at-arms David Barry also tried to get funds from the senate's emergency fund but Secretary Edwin A. Thayer refused them.

Nothing further will be attempted until Senator Reed (D) of Missouri, again calls the committee together, probably March 25.

Committeemen Resign

Threatened with court action to prevent the seizure of any additional ballots in the Pennsylvania election inquiry, the committee faced a partial disintegration by the resignation of two members. With but five senators constituting its membership it was reported Senators Goff (R), of West Virginia, and McNary (R) of Oregon, would resign before the committee takes any further action.

The resignations of Goff and McNary would leave the regular Republican organization in the senate without representation on the committee, thus leaving the committee a "Democratic-insurgent bloc."

Cleveland Meeting to Flay Anti-Alien Laws; Judge Silbert Speaks

CLEVELAND, March 10.—In an attempt to fight alien registration laws, a mass meeting has been arranged by the Cleveland Council for the Protection of Foreign Born Workers for Sunday afternoon, March 13, at the Bamster Hall, West 120th and Lorain Streets.

Speeches by Judge S. H. Silbert, Mrs. E. C. Miller, Peter Witt, Conrad Kruck, John Brahtin and Jeannette D. Pearl, as well as folk songs by the Banaterhannercher will feature the program.

Interest in the proposed legislation to register aliens has not abated with the adjournment of congress. The Cleveland Council is organizing a campaign to fight the anti-alien legislation which is sure to be introduced when congress reconvenes.

General Strike Over High Taxes In Athens; People Demand a Cut

LONDON, March 10.—A general strike was begun in Athens today, according to a dispatch from there. The purpose of the strike is to compel the government to accede to the demands of the populace for reduced taxes.

Soviet Citizens Held by Chang; Fate in Doubt

Rumors of Their Execution Are Discounted

PEKING, March 10 — Both the Soviet embassy here and the Peking foreign office today were ignorant of the fates of Madame Borodin, wife of the Russian adviser of the Nationalist government, and the three Russian diplomatic couriers recently captured aboard the Soviet steamer Panaiu, Lenina on the Yangtse River by Northern soldiers.

Unconfirmed reports from Chinese sources said the three couriers had been executed, but these reports were generally discounted.

General Yang Yu-Ting, Marshal Chang Tso-Lin's chief of staff declared emphatically that the execution of the Soviet officials was not ordered.

The imperialists are sending out hundreds of thousands of words about alleged riots in territory recently conquered by the Nationalists. This is the prelude to a more aggressive intervention policy on the part of the foreign powers.

British Fear Consequences.

Reports that Owen O'Malley, British representative intervened with Chang Tso-Lin on behalf of Mme. Borodin were not confirmed. It is believed that the British are convinced that the execution of Soviet officials by the northern militarists would be injurious to British interests since it is well known that England is financing the militarists and would be held responsible for the execution.

The Soviet government has sent two notes to the Peking government demanding the immediate release of the arrested Russians and the safeguarding of the staff.

There is a lull in hostilities for the moment.

Says Killed Wife.

BARDSTOWN, Ky., March 10 — A squad of men under Deputy Sheriff H. H. Haviland, today were digging into the one-year-old ruins of the former home of Lang Higdin, near here, in the hope of finding the body of Hogan's missing wife.

Hogan, who is being held in Charleston, Mo., on a house charge, has confessed to officials there that he killed his wife and buried her in the cellar, then burned the house, according to reports received by Haviland from Charleston authorities.

Organize the Traction Workers!

ARTICLE III. THE COMPANY UNION—WHAT IT IS

By ROBERT MITCHELL.

No exploitation is secure without a company union. The realization of this truth is now rapidly spreading over the whole field of labor exploitation. The deplorable conditions under which the traction workers of New York labor, a picture of which has been presented in the last two articles, obviously called for some "advanced" method of dealing with them. Accordingly, one of the first groups to grasp at the principle of the company union was the Interborough Rapid Transit Company. This was as early as the year 1916. Since that time the company union everywhere has developed into a full grown black sheep of the labor movement—an illegitimate son, in the true sense of the term; resulting from the ugly alliance between the bosses and their enslaved and deluded workers. That this vicious parasite goes practically unchallenged by the organized labor movement, and, in its more disguised forms, is often blessed by the American Federation of Labor, makes the company union all the more dangerous to the workers.

I. R. T. Foresees Company Union's Value.

Ask Bob Dunn for a word about the great menace of this offspring whose activities threaten to usurp not only the large field of the unorganized but is now encroaching on the fields of the organized workers as well.

But in 1916 only a few far seeing employers were able to perceive the faint shadow which the coming of the company union was casting before it. As has been said, one of these far seeing souls was the Interborough Rapid Transit Company. A word of correction. Corporations are proverbially without souls! Accordingly, we may be perplexed at this evidence of extended insight into the future. The explanation, however, is very simple.

"Poison Ivy" Lee.

On the pay roll of the Interborough at that time was a certain gentleman by the name of Ivy Lee. Who is this Mr. Ivy Lee? A complete answer to this question would make an eloquent chapter in the history of the art of bunkoing the American people. He is the capitalist propagandist and publicity faker par excellence. At present he is doing trick for the Standard Oil Company. He has already played a sort of left handed part in agitating for recogni-

Kollontay Raps Kellogg Yarn About Plot

Mexicans Discover New Arms Smuggling From U. S.

MEXICO CITY, March 10.—Alexandra Kollontay, ambassador here of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, has added her voice to the denials of Mexican government officials who all repudiate the story started by the state department of the United States that "the Bolsheviki are back of the anti-American feeling in Latin America."

Comrade Kollontay was able to show that she did not have the huge staff of propagandists, working in her legation, which all good anti-Bolsheviks ascribe to the U. S. S. R. foreign legations.

Small Staff.

"I have five employes here," she asserted, "my private secretary, one secretary, two typists and an office man who devotes his time to opening the legation door and cutting clippings from trade reports."

Charges that the legation had tried to introduce Soviet propaganda into Nicaragua were greeted humorously by the woman diplomat.

"I repeat that we diplomats are forbidden to take part in anything but real diplomatic work, for we are trying to establish diplomatic relations with all countries.

Would Trade With U. S.

"So far as the United States is concerned, what the Soviet desires is the development of relations. Russia is a great market for machinery and the United States, an industrial nation, can supply it. The United States ranks first in sales to Russia, Germany second and England third."

Friendship Grows.

The general feeling here against the arguments of Wall Street imperialism that Mexico is following the diplomacy of the Soviet Union makes for friendship between Latin America and the U. S. S. R., rather than the reverse, as was evidently intended in Washington.

MESSAGES FROM WORKERS OF MEXICO, CANADA, AND GERMANY AND YOUTH OF SOVIET UNION

the local organization of the Kuomintang.

Rest of Speech.

In addition to what was published in yesterday's issue of the DAILY WORKER, the rest of Jay Lovestone's speech was as follows: "On his death bed Ruthenberg said to me, 'Tell the comrades to fight on.' Then he breathed his last and died."

"As I sat by his dead body I thot of China where the nationalist revolutionary struggle is now taking place, of India where the oppressed natives are working for their freedom, of Russia where the workers have already been victorious and of America, where we are fighting an uphill struggle.

Worked For A Labor Party.

"Ruthenberg gave his all for the founding of our party. No man has done more to enhance the formation of a labor party than he has.

"He was a Leninist, a realist in the true Bolshevist sense of the word.

"Comrade Ruthenberg is to me the symbol of the better day that is to come as the workers follow in his footsteps.

"The leadership that he gave us will be an inspiration for the victory of the American proletariat.

Lovestone ended his speech by turning to the ashes and saying: "We will fight on until we score a victory for what you gave your life."

Present At Death.

Max Bedacht, the next speaker, was introduced as one who was also present when Ruthenberg died. He spoke in part, as follows:

"At no time," said the telegram we have received from the Communist International, "since Comrade Ruthenberg raised the banner against war in 1917 was he more needed than today."

"In 1917 we were told that the world was going to be made safe for democracy, but Comrade Ruthenberg knew that it was a lie. Today, when we are assembled here for our farewell to Comrade Ruthenberg we see the fruits of the struggle for democracy.

Mentions Nicaragua.

"In Nicaragua without your consent your brothers and your sons are again sent to make the world safe for democracy and to fight for self-determination.

"Comrade Ruthenberg, a clear leader and Marxist, saw thru the lies in 1917.

"Today when we again face a situation very much the same we have lost his counsel. However, on what he has left us, we must follow, we must heed his advice."

"Needed Today."

"When the Communist International says that he was never more needed than today that means that loyalty to the working class was never more necessary than now.

"Comrade Ruthenberg spent years behind prison bars. He was strung up by his wrists, but nothing could take him away from the working class. He was sent from one jail to another but that did not stop his fighting for the workers' interests.

Gitlow Speaks.

Benjamin Gitlow, the next speaker, was presented as one who had served two years in Sing Sing with Ruthenberg.

"Comrade Ruthenberg is dead," said Gitlow. "We mourn the loss of our comrade who was a great leader of the working class, who came into prominence in the working class struggle at a time when it took courage to do so.

"He is one of those who in 1917 raised their voice against the world slaughter, one who was hated and feared by the ruling class of this country.

"He was sent to prison many times, always being in the hands of the law, always a victim of the ruling class.

Dictatorship of the Proletariat.

"He realized very clearly that the only way to overthrow capitalism with its military power was by the dictatorship of the proletariat. That it was necessary to have an organization of steel for the workers.

"He gave up his energy, gave up his life that such an organization could be formed—The Communist Party.

Formed Party.

To him in a great extent we can thank for having a Communist Party fighting for the working class, struggling for the suppressed farmers and factory workers, for all creeds and nationalities for the great American working class.

"He realized that the struggle must be part of an international movement and the call for the formation of the Communist International found him aligned with those which issued the call.

"Comrade Ruthenberg was a party man. He realized that before the working class could free itself it must have a political party.

"It is no accident that when he died that his last words should be: 'Build the party.'"

"A Splendid Fighter."

Nucleus No. 103 of the Workers Party District 4.—"We regret the severe loss sustained by the party thru the untimely death of our general secretary comrade Ruthenberg.

"He was a splendid fighter and leader of the working class and his presence will be greatly missed from our ranks. His loyalty to the cause of the working class, to the party and to the Communist movement coupled with the great work he achieved will live long in the annals of the struggle of the history of the working class of America.

"Let us follow along the path of Leninism, of revolutionary working class action with a real Leninist organization that he fought so hard to give us."

PLAGUE FEARED AMONG REFUGEES OF JAPAN QUAKE

Situation Acute; Trains Running Badly

TOKIO, March 10. The situation in the areas devastated by the recent earthquakes and subsequent fires was still extremely acute today. The death list is now stated as 5,000.

With transportation still badly crippled the task of getting supplies to the affected areas is surrounded with many difficulties.

The menace of starvation is still prevalent.

Fear Epidemics.

The most danger, most feared, is that plague will break out in the groups of homeless refugees, necessarily herded together in temporary quarters, and without much resistance to disease because of the hardships they undergo.

The government is rushing to the aid of the survivors of the catastrophe. Money, food, clothing and medical supplies have been concentrated at various points and are awaiting transportation minimums.

Relief Arriving.

The Sanin railroad has been repaired and relief trains today were arriving from Miyazu.

Dr. Ito of the sixteenth army division, in charge of three groups of nurses and doctors, was speeding to Kyoto today from this city. Another special train leaving here carried 50,000 blankets and 4,000 sacks of rice.

Hundreds of injured refugees are still without medical aid. With storms raging in the Sanin district, their plight is made even more miserable.

Sex Play Barred When Injunction Is Denied

"The Captive" has been barred. A decision of Supreme Court Justice Jeremiah T. Mahoney denies an injunction to restrain District Attorney Banton and the police from interfering with the proposed Horace B. Liveright production of the play.

"The Captive" thus becomes the first victim in the crusade for censorship of the stage. The play, which was written by the Frenchman, Edouard Bourdet, and deals with a problem of sexual pathology, was originally produced by Charles Frohman, Inc. Charles Frohman, Inc., withdrew the play two weeks ago, and Horace B. Liveright took over the production rights.

Faints In Altitude Race

SCOTT FIELD, Belleville, Ill., Mar. 10.—Falling in his first attempt to break the free balloon altitude record in a thrilling experience in the air, Hawthorne Gray declared today he would make another attempt early this spring to exceed the mark 35,433 feet.

Capt. Gray landed at Ashley, Ill., about 40 miles southeast of here after he had been in the air about two hours. The balloonist fainted at a high altitude due to the rare atmospheric condition and descended for several minutes at the rate of more than 1,000 feet a minute.

German Minister Insists Foreign Troops Will Be Asked to Quit Rhineland

Geneva, March 10.—"Germany will demand evacuation of the occupational forces from the Rhineland, when she is confident that article 431 of the Versailles treaty, relating to German disarmament, has been fulfilled", declared Herr Stresemann, German foreign minister, in a statement to the press here today.

"I am confident that we will soon be prepared to demand the withdrawal of the army of occupation", the German minister continued.

"Otherwise people won't understand why in time of peace, when peace guarantees have been given, our country is still occupied by a foreign force of 75,000 men.

If Raise Lusitania, Germans Expect Proof Ship Carried Amunition

BERLIN, March 10.—If efforts to raise the Lusitania, the British liner torpedoed by a German submarine in 1915, are successful, Germany will likely demand that German experts be admitted to investigate the real cause for the sudden sinking of the ship.

The Germans have contended always that the explosion of the torpedo alone would have left plenty of time for all passengers and crew to save themselves. The real cause of the sudden sinking, and with it the loss of 1,517 lives, including 120 Americans, was caused, the Germans contend, by the explosion of the 4,200,000 shells which the Lusitania carried. This, was contrary to international, and especially American law, which forbids passenger ships and trains to carry explosives.

Comrades and Fellow Workers:

After a year's heroic struggle of the Passaic textile workers, the mill barons were forced to submit to a union in the textile industry of Passaic. They are however putting obstacles in the way of maintaining such an organization. Although the strike is almost over, they are taking the workers back very slowly, with the result that thousands of families are without means of existence. Their children are hungry.

There are many families whose sole supporters were sent to jail for long periods because of their activities in the strike. You must come to their rescue. Relief must go on with full speed!

The General Relief Committee, who is maintaining a few food stores in Passaic, appeals to all those who have taken milk coupons to send in their money as soon as possible, no matter how much you have collected. Send the money immediately to the General Relief Committee, 799 Broadway, Room 225, also ask for more coupons to sell.

The office is open from 9 a. m. to 7 p. m. daily.

CAPELLINI AIDS IN GRABBING PAY OF COAL DIGGERS

Tells 'Em to Dig Up for Merchants

(Special to The DAILY WORKER)

WILKES-BARRE, Pa., March 10. —Co-operation between the working man and the business man was the sweet song piped by President Rinaldo Capellini Wednesday evening at a meeting of Wyoming Valley retail merchants. The occasion of the love feast was the affort of the distressed merchants to get back some of the money on bills arising from the 1925-26 strike.

Pay When They Can.

Coal diggers up and down the anthracite feel that the codfish aristocracy of the villages has minted plenty of money out of their needs. Some of them consequently have paid when they could on strike debts and told the storekeepers to chalk up the rest against the time when the bosses give the miners a raise—if ever.

The merchants appealed to the president of District 1, and he ran to the rescue although he has been too busy in the past months to hear the legitimate grievances of miners themselves who have had wage cuts imposed on them without protest by the district.

Delaware and Hudson, after being idle more than a week, has opened again, sending about 22,000 men back into the pits. D. & H. has been operating very irregularly recently and may shut down again.

Production Falling Off.

The board of conciliation will consider the claims of four mine workers, entombed Nov. 16 in a mine flood, to pay for 24 eight-hour shifts. The company was going to pay them $56 apiece for the eight days of stark agony.

Anthracite production has fallen off sharply as compared with 1926. The last February week showed only 1,368,000 tons mined, against 1,600,000 tons in the same week of 1926. Production fell off 200,000 tons as compared with the third week of February and is continuing to drop.

DETROIT, March 10.— Fourteen alleged rum runners, who were arrested with a 42,000 cargo of liquor after four of them had been shot were held by police today. Their wounds are not serious. Seven others escaped.

Big Mines Gaining In Their Share of Annual Production

The biggest is the fittest to survive, and therefore the best. This seems to be the explanation for Bureau of Mines figures on the growth of big mines contrasted with the decline of small ones.

Have patience with the writer as he hurls another batch of figures at your head. For example: Mines of more than 200,000 tons annual capacity produced 40 per cent of total tonnage in 1905, and 54 per cent in 1926.

Mines in the 100,000-200,000 ton class dropped 5 per cent; in the 50,000-100,000 ton class, 6 per cent and so forth. Only the big mines gained in percentage of total production.

Illinois has carried this development to its highest pitch. There 82 per cent of total production comes from the big pits. Huge minas with average tonnage of 500,000 and over produced 60 per cent of all Illinois coal. Mine mechanization and efficiency have been carried to their apex in Illinois.

LEDEBOUR AT BRUSSELS CONGRESS DESCRIBES FIGHT ON COLONIALISM

The article printed below is part of a series written by the delegate of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League to the Brussells Congress Against Colonial Oppression and Imperialism. The congress was made up of delegates from anti-imperialist organizations, peace societies and labor unions in the European, American and other imperialist nations, from labor bodies and nationalist organizations in the colonial countries, and from subjugated races even in countries with full sovereignty.

Important resolutions were passed, for the practical carrying on of the work of freeing conquered peoples from their slavery. A survey of the work of the congress and the personalities attending, which have made it one of the great events of this era, will be found in these articles.

By MANUEL GOMEZ.

BRUSSELS, Feb. 12 (By mail, delayed)—Brilliant speeches by George Ledebour, one of the famous "old men" of the German socialist movement, and Harry Pollitt, leader of the minority movement in the British trade unions, featured the second day of the world congress against imperialism. The Senegalese Negro, Lamine Senghor, representative of the committee for the defense of the black race, also contributed valuable information in a colorful, graphic picture of the crimes of French imperialism in Central Africa.

Reporting on Imperialism and its Consequences for the Colonial and Semi-Colonial Peoples, Ledebour answered certain charges that the congress was Communist. He declared that he had fought against imperialism in Germany when it was at its height, before and during the war.

Ledebour Tells of Stuttgart Conference.

"Twenty years ago at Stuttgart," he said, "we discussed much the same things as we are discussing now. There were two opinions represented among the leaders of the Second International assembled there. One was that we should elaborate a socialist imperial policy. Then there were also revolutionists who put forward much the same ideas as we have here. The Revolutionists, who held the imperial view, were led by a well-known Dutch leader. I reported for the opposition. After a bitter struggle we succeeded in convincing the majority (127 to 108) that socialism and colonial policy have nothing more to do with each other than fire and water. Afterwards all national sections except the Dutch voted for us.

MacDonald's Imperialist Drbut.

"One on the English side who voted against our amendment was J. Ramsay MacDonald. But he lifted his hand later in favor of the general resolution against colonial policy. I feel like asking now: Ramsay MacDonald, have you forgotten your vote of 1907? MacDonald had a splendid chance to apply the socialist position but he completely failed.

"At Stuttgart only one delegate from the Far East was present. He was Katayama, from Japan, no imperialist country. Katayama has fought Japanese imperialism consistently from that day to this, and I say to you that as a man of character, as a socialist, as a fighter, he is far superior to MacDonald.

Oppressed Nations' Delegates in Majority.

"There at Brussels the delegates from the oppressed nations are in the majority. This represents a tremendous advance. Only by the closest cooperation of all elements can our goals be attained. We are for independence of all countries, including independent from 'mandates,' old and new. (This last refers to Germany's bid for a League of Nations mandate). But it is not enough to pass resolutions. We must act.

"I was glad to have heard Brockway's words yesterday. I hope they express the present attitude of the Independent Labor party, and I hope also that the entire British Labor party can be won for it.

Transport Workers in Struggle.

"I am glad that we have in our midst Tom Tinsmer, the most important figure of the International Federation of Transport Workers—for the transport workers are a vital point in the struggle against imperialism. We must popularize the idea of strikes against imperialist aggressions. We must prepare to go forward with them. The resolution which I shall present to you later asks the congress to approve of the general strike against imperialism.

"In England great strides have been made in the workers' actions against imperialism. The American workers cannot be expected to do very much at the present stage. Europe offers better possibilities. Here we have a long tradition of working class political education under the Second International. Brother secretary, Friedrich Adler, unfortunately attacks this congress as 'Communist.' I can only answer that I am sorry to see you, Friedrich Adler, in your present company.

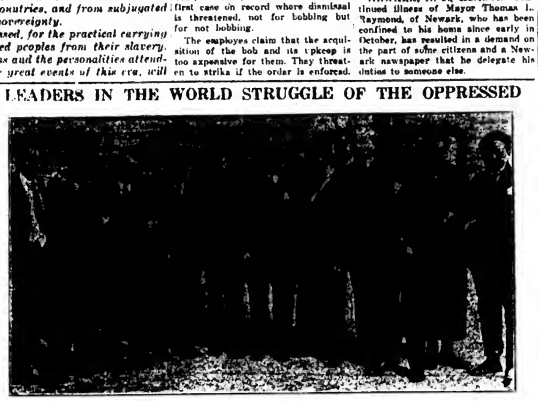
Will Fight Alongside Communists.

"Now you know that I am not a Communist, but I say that I shall fight side by side with the Communists wherever and wherever they take up revolutionary work. We can all be prepared to have labels put upon us. It does not matter. No one can afford to ignore the powerful groups represented here. No one, least of all the imperialists, can afford to dismiss this congress as of little importance for the liberation of down-trodden humanity. The basis of the congress is broad enough, its roots are deep enough, and its striking power impressive enough for us to go about our serious business confident of what we are doing."

Hafiz Raumadan Bey, member of the Egyptian Parliament and president of the Egyptian Nationalist party, who followed Ledebour, said that he believed more in evolution than in revolution, but that some joint action is nevertheless necessary. He pointed out that although Egypt is nominally an independent country the British army of occupation is still there. He put forward the idea of the internationalization of the Suez canal, a measure which, he said, would cripple the British empire in its Indian policy.

Scores French Imperialism.

Senghor declared that we cannot make war with phrases. "French imperialism," he said, "as we know it in Africa, recognizes no arguments but might. I am sure that before we leave this congress we shall work out a concrete program of operations."



Pollitt told the congress that what we have heard here of oppression in the colonies is also true of the British working class. He told of the unemployment and other fruits of capitalist-imperialism in Britain. "Imperialism today," he said, "has to have in capitalists the British workers are beginning to realize this more and more."

Must Fight British Imperialism.

"We cannot, however, be satisfied with declarations that when labor is again in power it will treat India differently than in the past. We must come out four-square for the right of India and any other British colony to separate from the empire at will and we must help all struggles in the colonies to that purpose. We cannot be satisfied with Hyde Park demonstrations against the sending of British troops to China, excellent enough as those demonstrations are. We must take steps to prevent the sending of troops. We may not succeed. But our fight will have important consequences."

Pollitt, whose speech was frequently interrupted by applause, then presented a concrete program of work for Great Britain. It is embodied in a resolution which, it is understood, will be presented to the congress jointly by the British, Chinese and Indian delegations.

LEADERS IN THE WORLD STRUGGLE OF THE OPPRESSED

Every Worker Who Attended the Ruthenberg Memorial Meetings Is a Potential Supporter of the Daily Worker

The Chicago and New York Ruthenberg memorial meetings have shown that the Communist Party of America has support among the working class far out of proportion to its numerical strength.

The tragic and unexpected death of Comrade Ruthenberg, the executive secretary of the party, has brought a great outpouring of sympathy for our party in its bereavement.

Two characteristics of these great meetings are of great importance for the work of our party in the immediate future. They are:

1.—A survey of the crowds attending these demonstrations shows that they were composed of WORKERS. The liberal and lower middle class elements were in a great minority.

2.—These huge meetings occurred at a time when the drive against our party in the unions is at its height and in spite of the fact that Comrade Ruthenberg was known far more as a Communist Party leader than as a mass leader.

We can conclude therefore that there is a substantial reservoir of sympathy among the American working class for our party as a Communist Party and that its program has a wider appeal even in the present period of rising capitalism than we have estimated.

Thousands of workers have attended the memorial meetings to express their support of our party. This support may at present be of a somewhat sentimental character but it exists and we must see that it is not dissipated. It does not mean that these workers are ready at once to take up the cudgels for our party or even openly incur the wrath and reprisals of union officialdom in the present struggle in support of the left wing.

It does mean, however, that these masses can be mobilized for struggle for partial demands, that there is an opportunity for our party to broaden its base, extend the circulation of its press and lay its foundations firmly in the American labor movement.

It is our conviction that the best of all approaches to these sympathetic workers is through The DAILY WORKER. With a circulation of 25,000 within the next six months, or even within a year, our party will be able to say truthfully that it has turned from its grief to action and is building and extending the party of the American working class for which Comrade Ruthenberg lived and died.

The objective—25,000 readers of The DAILY WORKER within a year—is an entirely attainable one if the party as a whole will realize its opportunity, its weakness and the way of correcting it. "Without a mass press," said Lenin, "a mass Communist Party is impossible." It is the collective organizer of the party and the masses.

The memorial meetings will soon be over, but every comrade can hold a memorial meeting of his own every day by getting a new reader or subscriber for The DAILY WORKER.

Every worker who attended the memorial meetings will become a supporter of The DAILY WORKER if we make him see the connection between our press and the cause with which he sympathizes.

A CORRECTION

In the first column, next to the last paragraph of the article in the Thursday, March 10th issue by William F. Dunne entitled, "Forming the Imperialist Front Against China," the following words, "But the anti-Chinese propaganda coming from Shanghai and other cities can be explained only by the vagaries of newspapermen," should read: "Can NOT be explained," etc.

Injunctions and Faith in the Impartiality of the Courts.

The DAILY WORKER is in complete sympathy and supports to the best of its ability the fight of the unions against injunctions.

Its program for the struggle against injunctions is the program of the Workers (Communist) Party and it can be stated briefly as disregard of injunction writs and mass violation of their edicts.

This program does not exclude demonstrations such as the labor delegation to Albany the other day, advocacy of anti-injunction legislation, etc., but it does put the emphasis on the struggle of the workers where it belongs—on their organized mass power.

Legislation outlawing injunctions against union activities in general and the right to strike in particular can be forced once the capitalists are convinced that the union membership will continue their struggles for better wages and working conditions in spite of injunctions even if this means filling the jails.

The capitalist system is organized against the workers and for this reason we say that utterances such as those of some labor officials in Albany, wherein they stressed the necessity of anti-injunction legislation—the Lupowicz-Hackenberg bill—to convince the workers that they were not discriminated against and to increase their belief in the impartiality of the courts, is of more danger to the working class than injunctions.

The first task of any labor official is to show the masses by concrete examples of the daily struggle that the judicial system of the United States is a mechanism established for one class, the capitalist class, and that there is no such thing as impartiality.

Injunctions are the expression of this class system—they are one of the weapons of the enemies of the working class. That they have served to create a great skepticism among the masses relative to the impartiality of the courts is the only benefit the workers have derived from them.

We hope that the anti-injunction legislation will be passed at Albany but we warn the labor movement that just as the judicial decision which exempted unions from the provisions of the Clayton anti-trust law has not prevented its use against unions so will the use of injunctions continue as long as labor does not adopt and carry out the policy of resisting them by every means in its power.

To be for anti-injunction laws simply because they will add to the prestige of the courts among the workers is to play the game of the bosses. This attitude accepts the theory of "government of all the people" and shuts its eyes to such plain facts as the domination of local, state and national government by financial and industrial capitalists.

Injunctions are for the purpose of crippling the labor movement and for this reason alone they must be fought. Anyone whose loyalty to the working class comes first will require no other reason for entering the struggle against injunctions and the capitalist class which uses them.

Picking a Restful Spot for Coolidge

THE White House spokesman says that Coolidge is going west for his vacation.

The theory is that the president, residing in some quiet and unpretentious cabin with no more than 25 or 30 rooms, will get close to the soil, sniff the acrid odor of the barnyard, toss the lawn-mower a hay, slop the hogs, drive home the kine in the gloaming and in general soak himself in the atmosphere of the wide, open spaces where Frank Lowden has been husking corn on his million-dollar farm, and getting his pitcher took for the papers, and cultivating a wide circle of acquaintances among farmers who miss the mere mention of Coolidge.

Farmer-Banker—Banker-Farmer

General Dawes is also a farmer, but unfortunately he is a farmer who is known as a banker, whereas Lowden is a banker who is known as a farmer. Governor of Illinois from 1917 to 1921 and a serious contender for the republican nomination in 1920, Lowden has tended the sprig of discontent among the farmers of the middle west with the care of an expert florist.

He speaks with rocking staccato sobs of the need for cooperation in agriculture and unlike Dawes he has had for farm relief, properly managed by the bankers, ever since his mortgage loan companies found it difficult to make farmers pay up.

Lowden, it may be said, has put out the most successful line "friend of the farmer" bunk that has ever been peddled along the tearless of Ohio, Mississippi and Illinois rivers.

The White Headed Lowden.

Like Harding, Lowden has a mop of silvery white hair and exudes an air of substance, gentility and impeccable respectability. The lords of coal, iron, steel, copper and railroads have nothing in particular against him, compared to the drab and uninspiring Cal he is a colorful personality, and in addition to all these qualifications he will probably have the powerful Illinois delegation behind him in the convention.

Lowden, if elected president, will skin the farmers much more gracefully and inflict less pain while the operation is in progress than has the blundering Coolidge and exactly for this reason is more dangerous to their interests.

Dawes will get little support from farmers in spite of his eleventh hour conversion to farm relief.

His connection with Wall Street is too well known.

Coolidge evidently has been advised that the farming districts hold his fate in their hands and his vacation will be anything but a pleasant one. He will be lucky if a posse of enraged farmers armed with pitchforks and other homely instruments does not run him up some arroyo and leave him there.

We would suggest, if a quiet vacation in the middle west is his desire, that he rent the 132nd Regiment's Armory in Chicago and swing his hammock in the cellar.

Fooling the Farmers.

Seriously, there is not the slightest doubt that the united front of bankers, congressmen and senators and the so-called progressives which put over the McFadden bill for the financiers in order to get their votes for the McNary-Haugen bill which was vetoed, has demoralized the farmer revolt in the middle west and west. The farmers, who use the attitude towards farmer relief as a test of loyalty to their interests, have now no real standard to go by. Brookhart has been tamed and practically absorbed in the Iowa republican machine. The field is left open for such fake farmers' friends as Lowden who grows fat on the reaction to Coolidge.

Young LaFollette has not the prestige of his father. Wheeler of Montana in the democrat ranks makes no particular appeal to the middle west. Borah fights Coolidge on foreign affairs but fires no imagination on other questions.

A Farmer-Labor Party.

None of these insurgents has shown any sign of being willing to lead a bolt from the two old capitalist parties and falling this the farmers fall back on the most demagogic of the regulars like Lowden.

The farmers have been whipped around the stump very successfully so far and the insurgents by their compromise with the bankers have applied the lash most effectively of all the groups that want to save the farmers without getting off the farmers' backs.

The officialdom of the trade unions in the states where the farmers' discontent is hottest are linked up solidly with the various state machines of the democrat and republican parties.

If there is any sort of a crystallization of a farmer-labor party in the next election campaign, it will take place, as in Minnesota, without the cooperation and against the opposition of "progressive" congressmen, labor union officials and heads of well-to-do farmers' organizations.

At present the farmers are simply anti-Coolidge.

Farewell, Comrade uthenberg; Farewell Our Leader

By JAY LOVESTONE.

(Editor's note: This is the speech delivered by Jay Lovestone, chosen by the party's political committee to take up Ruthenberg's tasks, at the Chicago Memorial Meeting on Sunday.)

THE severest stroke I have ever had in my life came with the death of my closest guide, leader and friend, Comrade Ruthenberg.

To the Communist Ruthenberg was more than an individual: even more than a Party comrade.

"C. E.," as I called Comrade Ruthenberg, was to me the symbol of our Party, fighting unceasingly an uphill battle against tremendous odds, against the most brutal, the most powerful imperialism the world has known.

Party Suffers Greatest Loss.

In the passing of Comrade Ruthenberg our Party has suffered the greatest loss in its history. Our pain is as great as our loss. Comrade Ruthenberg has been and will remain an important example for our whole Party, for the entire working class to follow. Comrade Ruthenberg's whole life was one of immortal service to the American working class.

Comrade Ruthenberg was the first man in the history of the various left wing movements in the Socialist Party to realize the value of organization. It was Comrade Ruthenberg who first understood that if the Socialist Party was to be a Party of revolutionary Socialism, the left wing forces had to stay within the Party and to organize themselves.

Comrade Ruthenberg was the first one in the United States to be convicted and sent to jail for inspiring and organizing masses of workers to resist the drive of our imperialists to throw the American working class into the death orgy of the great war. For seven months Comrade Ruthenberg spent in the Canton Jail for his courageous anti-war activities are ten months which will forever live as an inspiring sacrifice for the American workers. These ten months will be a powerful force for arousing the American proletariat to turn our near imperialist war into a civil war against the exploiters and oppressors of the workers.

Held Important Post.

Comrade Ruthenberg was the driving force in giving a nationwide organized basis to the sweeping left wing movement of the Socialist Party after the Proletarian Revolution in Russia in November, 1917.

Well do I remember how I was sitting with John Reed and others in our left wing headquarters in West 29th Street, New York City, anxiously awaiting to hear to how decisive a victory Comrade Ruthenberg was leading the left wing in Cleveland. When we learned of the magnificent success in the Cleveland Socialist Party under the able leadership of Comrade Ruthenberg, we felt and we knew now we were assured of a national organized left wing movement.

Takes Lead for Unity.

At the first Communist Party Convention in the Smulky House on Blue Island Avenue, Chicago, in September, 1919. Here he led the struggle for the unity of all Communist forces and against the left sickness of infantile Communism. It was only when Comrade Ruthenberg declared that he would serve as secretary of the Communist Party that our first Communist Central Executive Committee to America felt sure that we were going to lay the foundations for the development of a mass Communist Party in the United States.

The greatest forward step in the history of the American labor movement was the founding of the Communist Party. Comrade Ruthenberg was the leader of this forward step. When we speak of a Communist Party in America, the bulwark, the vanguard of world imperialism, we speak of a Communist Party living and fighting under the most tremendous difficulties. The existence and growth of a Communist Party in America is of paramount international significance. Comrade Ruthenberg's decisive role in the American Communist movement as the founder and leader makes him an outstanding leader of the international working class movement.

No wonder that the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union tells: "We deeply grieve with you at the loss of Comrade Ruthenberg, leader of your party and of the International labor movement, whose ashes will rest beneath the Kremlin together with the heroes of the November Revolution."

Yes, Comrade Ruthenberg died, fighting and working for the victory of the American proletariat and the international working class.

Like the great steel worker, General Wood is leading his cohorts of highly armed, uniformed, strike-breaker American soldiers to smash the ranks of the workers. Comrade Ruthenberg's mighty revolutionary appeal in the slogan "Fight against the government strikebreakers" aroused and inspired the consciousness of steel workers of Gary to the most valiant resistance displayed in the whole strike.

His Courage Was Unbounded.

Comrade Ruthenberg's courage in the class war was unbounded. Some of the best years of his life he spent in jail. There was an imperialist war; Comrade Ruthenberg was the first to go to jail in resisting it. The left wing of the Socialist Party was to be organized; Comrade Ruthenberg went to jail for playing the leading role in organizing the revolutionary forces.

I recall a scene at Bridgeman. Comrade Ruthenberg was directing the organization of the comrades leaving the grounds. I said "Come along". I begged Comrade Ruthenberg to go in our group. He said, "No, I'll stay until all are gone. I must do that". The splendid services Comrade Ruthenberg rendered to the American working class in his exemplary conduct in the Bridgeman jail are invaluable. It was these services of Comrade Ruthenberg that made possible the legalization, at least for the present, of Communism in America.

Then the labor party. Here Comrade Ruthenberg was the pace-setter. The labor party movement in America is of immense importance not only for the American working class but for the workers of the world. They need only look at America's role today to see why this is so. Above all other Comrade Ruthenberg was free from error and was the undisputed leader of our party in its correct policy on this important question which, our party has faced and still is facing.

Marxist and Leninist.

Comrade Ruthenberg was a realist, an honest, Leninist sense of the word. The greatest progress in the history of our party has been made since the 1925 convention. This progress is bringing the isolation in which our party found itself after the 1924 election, of beating back the drive to expel our members from the party, of reorganizing the party on the Bolshevik basis, of penetrating the basic unions of the American Federation of Labor, of leading strikes, of organizing the unorganized workers, in all these activities, in all this progress, Comrade Ruthenberg was the undisputed leader.

Let us listen again to some of his realistic slogans. The bourgeoisie had ordered the war; Comrade Ruthenberg replied "Down with conscription."

There was on election campaign; Comrade Ruthenberg said to the workers, "Make this election count in your fight".

The American army mobilized against Mexico; Comrade Ruthenberg inspired and organized thousands of workers with the slogan: "Stop the invasion of Mexico".

Our imperialists yelled "Make the World Safe for Democracy"; Comrade Ruthenberg mobilized thousands of workers under the slogan "Make the World Safe for the Workers."

Workers were being sent to jail by our war profiteers; Comrade Ruthenberg heroically replied: "We will win even in jail".

Yes, Comrade Ruthenberg was a Leninist. He understood the essence of and possessed the key to Leninism, the science of World Revolution. Comrade Ruthenberg knew how to link up the smallest, immediate, most elementary, everyday need of the workers with the biggest, most fundamental, revolutionary objectives of the whole proletariat.

Builds the Party Press.

Last but not least, the American working class owes primarily to the untiring energies of Comrade Ruthenberg that we today have a militant fighting Communist daily, The DAILY WORKER.

We will consolidate our ranks, for carrying on the revolutionary work in the indomitable spirit of Comrade Ruthenberg. His unbounded revolutionary courage will forever encourage us.

The American working class has never before witnessed so great a devotion to its class interest. This we will remember because Comrade Ruthenberg and remains the undisputed leader of our party—the undisputed and outstanding fighter for the interests of the working class. Comrade Ruthenberg died in overworking himself for the most living cause of the international working class—Communism.

When we feel the pains so unbearable, comrades, we must remember that our responsibilities are increasing of our unfathomable grief. Comrade Ruthenberg is no more. Comrade Ruthenberg has gone from our midst. My consciousness somehow or other refuses to accept his being gone. To me, the death of Comrade Ruthenberg is the most horrible crime of nature.

But let us go forward to battle with unbounded determination to win.

Yes, farewell, Comrade Ruthenberg, farewell our leader.

Let us close our ranks in this

WORKING CLASS PLAYS WANTED BY NEW PLAY-WRIGHTS THEATRE

PLAYS that appeal to working-class audiences "lass jaded in response than the 'cultured' people who have hitherto patronized the arts" are asked for by John Dos Passos, famous novelist, in a letter to the labor press of New York. Dos Passos is one of the five insurgent playwrights directing the New Playwrights Theatre at 52nd Street and Eighth Avenue.

"The aims of the New Playwrights Theatre," writes Dos Passos, "are to work out methods of theatrical presentation that adequately expresses American life. We want to make workers rather than professional people or millionaires the foundation of our audience because we think that we can find in them less jaded response than in the cultured and Europeanized people who have hitherto patronized the arts.

"We want this theatre to be in continual and immediate contact with the mass life of America. For that we have got to have continually fresh plays, plays that deal with work, money, chewing gum, roadbuilding, mines, chemistry, walking delegates, Communism, anything except straw lights and a library set. (Though if anyone can make straw lights and a library set important we are ready to be shown.)

"We want plays to read for next season. We appeal especially to writers whose work is not suitable for Broadway, and who run counter to the present trends of dramatic criticism. We don't want to be used as a launching platform for budding geniuses whose only aim is to make the Roaring Forties roar their praise. We want at least to be able to clear away the rubbish and clutter that has been piled up to divide the theatre from the circus, the ballfield, vaudeville, life. Send us your plays."

The New Playwrights Theatre is now producing John Howard Lawson's "Loud Speaker," a political satire, and Em Jo Basshe's "Earth," a Negro folk play. These two plays are alternating, each playing one week. A reduction of 20% is offered to workers who show union cards at the box office.

BROADWAY BRIEFS

"Heckuva-Hackuba," a new play by Lates N. Egri sponsored by the Provincetown Players in association with Horace Liveright, was placed in rehearsal yesterday under direction of James Light. The American adaptation was done by Charles Recht.

Brandon Tynan will have an important role in "The French Kiss," which opens at the Rita Theatre next Tuesday.

Anne Nichols, author and producer of "Abie's Irish Rose," sails tomorrow for London, where she will supervise the production of "Abie." Later she will visit Budapest to supervise its production there and the translation of the play into Hungarian and German.

THE RUTHENBERG MEMORIAL MEETINGS

Throughout the country, masses of workers are congregating to do honor to the memory of Comrade Ruthenberg.

These meetings must be so arranged as to be of the utmost practical value to the movement for which Comrade Ruthenberg gave his life. Every effort should be made to utilize these gatherings to increase the size of the growing army of DAILY WORKER readers and supporters.

The regular quota of DAILY WORKER Builders should be on hand fully organized and equipped. Signs advertising The DAILY WORKER should be displayed prominently in the meeting hall. DAILY WORKERS should be sold by a special committee chosen for the purpose. Subscription blanks should be placed on every seat.

At least one of the speakers at the meeting should make an address on The DAILY WORKER once stressing upon the appeal for the Ruthenberg DAILY WORKER Sustaining Fund. The memorial meetings are to be the signal for the starting of the campaign. The Sustaining Fund blanks should be carried with the initial pamphlet.

The collection taken at the meeting should be divided between the Ruthenberg Sustaining Fund and whatever collection is taken for other work of the party and the leader, our leader. My conscientiousness somehow or other refuses to accept his being gone. To me, the death of Comrade Ruthenberg is the most horrible crime of nature.

But let us go forward to battle with unbounded determination to win.

Yes, farewell, Comrade Ruthenberg, farewell our leader.

Furriers Gain Control Over Large Shop

Arrest Three Gangsters For Attacking Workers

The union-smashing design of the united forces of racketeers in the International Fur Workers' Union and the American Federation of Labor met with a two-fold defeat yesterday, when the largest fur shop in the world, A. Weckstein & Sons agreed to recognize only the furriers' Joint Board; and when the International's crew of notorious gangsters was utterly routed when they made an attack on a group of fur workers late yesterday afternoon.

It had been planned by the special committee in charge of "reorganizing" the fur workers' Joint Board, that the shop of A. Weckstein should be forced to register in full with the International as soon as its new headquarters opened. Since this is the largest fur shop in the city, and in fact the largest in the world, this would make the enrollment campaign sound successful from the start.

Terror Fails.

Gangsters were brought to the shop last week to terrorize the workers, and the boss also used his influence in behalf of the International. But the result of this persecution was that 35 of the workers came out on strike last week and the others soon followed.

Refusing to go back to work while the gangsters remained in the shop, the workers have remained on strike until yesterday when Harry Weckstein, a member of the firm, met a committee elected by the shop, and agreed to recognize the Joint Board and not to try to force workers to register with the rights or in any other way interfere in the union dispute.

Draw Up Dispute.

The workers then agreed to return to the shop today, after they had drawn up the following resolution which was signed by each of them:

"In view of the fact that Harry Weckstein, of the firm of A. Weckstein & Sons, officially promises to the shop chairmen and to the shop committee that he will no longer interfere in the union politics; that no one in the shop will dare to force the workers to register with the new scab union; and that the Joint Board is recognized by the firm of A. Weckstein & Sons.

"Therefore be it resolved, that we workers agree to return to work with the understanding that as soon as this promise of the firm is broken, the workers of the shop, together with the Joint Board will adopt the necessary measures to preserve the security and the liberty of the workers."

Defeat Gangsters.

Early yesterday morning, 150 members of the Defense Committee marched through the fur district on the watch to protect workers from being terrorized by the sluggers.

About five o'clock when the committee was again on duty to prevent any workers from being forced to register at the ten cent union, they were attacked at Sixth avenue and 29th street by an International gang which included Sam Mintz, who was once charged with murder, has been mixed up in a number of shooting affrays, and was arrested last year for an attempted attack on the Joint Board treasurer.

Murderers in Crowd.

Another member of the group was Harry Korman, known as "Kid Ashey," who was held on a murder charge in 1920; "Ruhy" Levitt who has a notable prison record; and Willie Rosenfield, who not only has a police record but is at present under graft charges in connection with his former union activities.

Two of the gangsters were arrested during the attack. Mintz being discovered with an open knife in his hand. A. Reicher, a leading member of the Furriers' Trade Union Group was also arrested.

Isadore Flaxman and Morris Taubner, two of the fur workers who were attacked, were taken to the hospital for treatment of severe cuts. But the gangsters were so completely routed in the fray that they will probably think twice before they try these terrorist tactics again.

Each morning, noon and evening, the Defense Committee will be in the fur district to protect workers, and to warn the International that it cannot force the workers to register. So far the ten cent union headquarters are deserted except for the famous gangsters.

Two had been nominated by the local branches of their unions, and the other (Mr. Grayndler) had been nominated by the Federal Executive of the Australian Workers' Union, of which he is the Secretary.

Withdrew Delegates

Immediately the personnel of the delegation became known, pandemonium broke loose among the working-class. The one delegate who had been elected by his Council and selected by the Government was withdrawn. The two delegates who had been nominated by the local branches of their Unions, were also withdrawn, but the delegate from the Australian Workers' Union affirmed his intention of accepting the invitation, or, if he was too busy, to send a substitute, and this attitude was endorsed by the Annual Convention of the A. W. U., which was sitting at the time.

The N. S. W. Labor Council appointed a delegate to wait on the A.W.U. Convention to explain to the delegates the reasons, why they should not break the solidarity of the Australian Trade Union Movement, but the delegate was not allowed to enter the Convention. As the matter stands now, the delegation has been referred block by the whole of the trade union movement of Australia and those who took part in it are designated as scabs. If the delegation reaches America, we hope our fellow workers will give them a warm reception.

The Australian Workers' Union's Annual Convention is in session at Katoomba at the present time. Katoomba is one of the most fashionable pleasure resorts in Australia. The Convention is being held there so that the delegates will not come in contact with other unionists, and be influenced against the official bureaucrats. An unnecessary precaution because every delegate is an official of the union, and only three or four of them even pretend to be militant.

Favored Arbitration

One of the first things that the Convention did was to repudiate direct action in favor of Arbitration and Conciliation. Needless to say, this decision met with the unanimous approbation of the Capitalist Press. This satisfaction on the part of the employers' press, should be a warning to the rank and file of the A. W. U., who are not by any means truly represented at the Convention. As a matter of fact, the rank and file of the A. W. U. are as good, if not better, than the rank and file of any union in Australia, but due to the migratory nature of their employment they have very little control over their own unions.

The building construction workers of Brisbane, Queensland, are in the throes of a struggle for a 40-hour week. Up to the beginning of January of this year, the builders were working 44 hours per week; eight hours on five days and four hours on Saturdays. On Saturday, Jan. 15th, the building workers refused to work, maintaining that 40 hours a week was sufficient. The Master Builders then told them that their services were no longer required, and a lock-out was put into operation. This was only to be expected and the men have settled down for a long struggle. One very black spot in the fight is that the Labor Government of Queensland has taken up the fight on the side of the employers, and has locked out these building workers in the service of the Australian troops to China.

Sigman's Thugs Knife Workers But Lose Out

Strong arm men and gangsters, the henchmen of Morris Sigman, president of the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union swooped Garment Workers' Union swooped down upon a picket line at the A. Dress Shop, 361 West 36th street early Wednesday morning, beat up two pressers, slashing them with knives, and fled, six who were arrested by police after they had chased the car were held without bail in the Jefferson Market Court.

Tony Burlo and Angelo Vacca, pressers, were severely cut by the knives of the ruthless gangsters. Burlo received a face wound requiring thirteen stitches. They were rushed to a physician who treated their wounds. Police found two knives in the possession of the gangsters, one of them still wet with blood.

The men arrested were Morris Golonbach, Harry Lisa, Isaac Robin, Sam Schechter, Henry Morrie, and Sam Gold. One of them is said to have served three terms in Sing Sing, and Schechter is known in the garment district as a "scab agent" who has given protection during strikes to scabs, yet is now in the hire of the International.

In view of the serious injuries inflicted by the gangsters upon Burlo and Vacca, as well as their previous records, Judge Flood, held all six for hearing upon a charge of felonious assault on Friday, and without bail.

Hyman Scores Methods.

Louis Hyman, manager of the Joint Board is commenting upon the "use of the methods of the employers by Sigman in his attempt to smash the opposition of the masses of the workers to his control", said:

"Our picket lines have been stronger this week than ever before. An incident such as this brutal assault serves to make it clear that the mass of the workers are standing with the Joint Board while Sigman must depend upon hired thugs for his support."

An appeal to all cloak and dressmakers to give a half day's pay to the Defense Fund for the sixteen imprisoned cloakmakers was decided upon by all the Executive Boards and Officers of locals of the Joint Board, who met last night in Local 22 to consider the present situation in the struggle of the Joint Board against the disrupting influences of Sigmanism.

The general campaign for defense will go forward vigorously during the rest of this week, according to announcements made today.

Government who refuse to work 44 hours per week. This is not so very surprising, however, when we consider the rotten record of this Government. This is the same Government that sent troops to shoot down the strikers at Townsville. The Government, that assisted the farmers to beat up the Bowen waterside workers who were on strike, the Government that compelled the men working on Government Railways to declare a general strike before a fair hearing was granted, and the government that has just enacted a law to fine every railway worker who takes part in a strike the princely sum of £1. Truly a wonderful record!

Worthless Leader.

A lot of manoeuvering has been going on in the Australian labor party recently. Mr. Charlton, the federal leader, has proved his worthlessness, from a working class point of view, to everybody. Even the right wingers are sick of him. A new hero is about to enter federal politics—Mr. Theodore—who is sure to step into Charlton's shoes. Mr. Theodore is a one-time Premier of Queensland, and his record is on a par with the record of that government. Mr. Mahoney obligingly vacated a safe federal seat, and Theodore was endorsed for it by the A. L. P. executive. The rank and file members of the A. L. P. in the electorate were not consulted on the matter, although according to the rules they have a right to select their own candidate.

The federal arbitration court, which is deliberating on the question of the 44-hour week for the workers of the whole of Australia is expected to give its decision in the second week in February. You will have probably heard of the decision before this letter reaches you.

Against War With China.

The N. S. W. labor council, has been carrying on a campaign of "Hands off China". We realize that we will now have to redouble efforts, and to that end, we have called a special meeting of the council for next Thursday night, when delegates from other parts of the state will attend. It is also intended to have a gigantic demonstration in the Town Hall very shortly. The Seamen's Union has decided not to man ships loaded with troops, munitions, or foodstuffs intended for troops for China, and the N. S. W. branch of the Australian Railway Union has decided not to allow similar freight to be carried on the railway. The A. W. U., has also decided to carry on a campaign against sending Australian troops to China.

ORGANIZE THE TRACTION WORKERS!

tion of Soviet Russia and with equal dexterity he will, at the proper moment, play a right handed role in creating a public sentiment for intervention against the workers' republic.

Quackenbush, Strong-arm Exponent.

In the fertile mind of this gentleman, now known to oily fame, is said to have been born the inspiration of the "Brotherhood of Interborough Rapid Transit Employes," the Interborough Company Union. There is a rumor of certain differences of opinion which at the time arose between Mr. Ivy Lee and Mr. Quackenbush, chief legal light of the Interborough, over the advisability of introducing any form of mass organization. Mr. Quackenbush was then and is no less now, an advocate of less benevolent methods in dealing with employes. The company union together with a special form af "yellow-dog" contract was installed, however, and even Mr. Quackenbush has had no reason to complain because of any lack of its affectiveness. In fact so effectively has it operated that on several occasions, as will be shown later, it has very nearly defeated its own purposes.

Intolerable Conditions Under Brotherhood.

If you are an employer and are making a study of how best to exploit and suppress your workers, in which case, though, you are making a great mistake in coming to The DAILY WORKER for your information, your study will never be complete nor up to the minute unless you have made a detailed examination of the Brotherhood of Interborough Rapid Transit Employes. Here you will find a company union after your own exploiters' heart! Here you will find developed to the extreme the fine art of American Industrial Democracy: suppression, intimidation, spying, provocation, suspicion, mistrust, petty graft and thievery, autocratic methods, intolerable hours, speed-up systems, starvation wages, flagrantly unjust discharges for petty reasons or none at all, gangsterism and coercion, open discrimination, favoritism, black-listing, all covered over with a thin veneer of fake labor democracy, a pretence which even the company officials, except in times of crisis, do not consistently maintain. These coercive methods are possible only where a company union has been established. Where no company union is in existence, the fear of a strike and the possibility of the spontaneous formation of a union will always act as a "check" to an employer's use of the most extreme forms of suppression. The company union is an instrument of security and sooner or later when the fear of workers' revolt no longer restrains the employer's hand he will begin to let it fall more and more heavily 'on the backs of his employes.

Worst Instrument in Class War.

This fact is worthy of the most careful attention. The great danger of the company union is not only that it prevents legitimate labor organization and thus retards workers' progress, but that it affords the employer the security under the use of which an almost unlimited measure of coercion and exploitation may be exerted.

This further reveals the company union in its true light, as the most dangerous instrument of the class war. Along with it must be included all its dilutes forms of class war instruments, plans for negotiation and arbitration, welfare devices, insurance schemes, plans for profit sharing, stock ownership, etc. These instruments have all the same purpose; the company unionization of labor and the strengthening of the effectiveness of class war power.

A Unique Company Union.

The plan under which the Brotherhood of Interborough Rapid Transit Company Employes was instituted in many respects is unique among company union schemes. It has all the strength of industrial unionism—operated in the interest of the company, and all the weakness of craft organization—for the workers. It can operate as a unit in suppression, but its effects the most complete kind of division and isolation as regards workers' interests and control.

Workers Flock to Enroll in Ruthenberg Sustaining Fund

ONE of the features of the huge Ruthenberg Memorial Meetings held on Wednesday evening in New York City, was the large number of workers who immediately enrolled themselves as members of the Ruthenberg DAILY WORKER Sustaining Fund. This is a remarkable tribute to the practical idealism of the workers who have thus proven their ability to combine their token of respect for Ruthenberg's memory and achievements with a realization of the best way to insure the continuation of his work.

The amounts contributed run till the way from $50 to fifty cents and from weekly to monthly pledges. It is estimated that several thousand such pledges coming from the workers in various parts of the country will go a long way toward solving the financial problems of The DAILY WORKER. The present response indicates that this estimate will be realized in the course of a few months. A list of the contributors to the Ruthenberg Sustaining Fund to The DAILY WORKER will be published in these columns in the near future.

Ruthenberg Gave His Best Energies to Build and Strengthen Workers' Press

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

MONUMENTS will be built to our fallen Leader, C. E. Ruthenberg. But they will not be shafts of marble or granite. They will not be reproductions in bronze.

These monuments will be the living, active weapons of the [illegible] in the United States of America.

They will be the Communist Party, the Communist Press, the [illegible] (Communist) League, a broad [illegible] left wing in the trade unions and other organizations of the workers, a growing movement of the pioneers.

Today let us take up the special problem of rearing the Communist press as a monument to the fallen leader of our Party, especially the building of the party organ —the DAILY WORKER—that Ruthenberg was instrumental, more than anyone else, in founding and in building.

There is one incident that stands out vividly in my mind, as I review the many years of my close association with Comrade Ruthenberg since the year, 1909, when we both joined the revolutionary movement. It was in June, 1917, that I met him accidentally in the city of Washington, D. C., altho we had both come to the capital city of the American imperialist government on the same errand.

It was the month that the espionage act had been passed and gone into effect, seeking to gag the utterances, printed and spoken, of the nation, attempting to force the masses to walk blindfolded into the slaughter pits of the world war. Conscription had also gone into effect. The lottery of death, at that very moment, was being played under the dome of the capitol, the numbers being selected that would determine which of the youth of the land should make up the army of millions to cross the Atlantic to help fill the trenches of death that had been prepared for them thru the three years that the war had already raged.

It was in this crisis that the post office department, headed by the bourbon reactionary, Albert Burleson, from Texas, set out to crush all opposition thought in the socialist and labor press. Notices were sent broadcast commanding editors to appear before Postmaster General Burleson and state why the mailing privilege should not be withdrawn. It was a polite way of asking why the press that opposed the war should not be crushed. Ruthenberg had been called to defend his publication, the Cleveland Socialist, even as I had been summoned to argue for the American Socialist, published in Chicago.

It was no accident that Ruthenberg, the editor of the Cleveland Socialist, should be among the first, I believe the very first, to be summoned. His statement, made before the post office officialdom, is no doubt still a part of the records of the United States government. It was as clear as the language that he forced into the St. Louis Anti-War Proclamation of the Socialist Party, at the special Socialist convention in the Missouri metropolis, held in the week that war was declared. It was as clear as the speeches he made to the multitudes in the public square of Cleveland, Ohio, calling upon the workers not to register, not to allow themselves to be conscripted for the war.

Ruthenberg was not appalled by the mighty capitalist state that was organizing every atom of strength for the imperialist war at hand, its task in face of its growing struggle. He was to build its place in it. He had not yet been placed on trial and sentenced to a year's imprisonment in Ohio fur opposing the draft; he had not yet been placed on trial and sentenced to serve long years in the prisons of New York for thus helping to frame the manifesto of the left wing of the socialist party; he had not yet been arrested and put on trial in Michigan, charged with assembling with other Communist Party leaders, Mich. But the courage and self-confidence with which he faced the capitalist state in Washington, D. C., in the summer of 1917, fighting for the right of the working class press to exist, were only steeled for all his later experiences.

Through every struggle, Ruthenberg held among the foremost tasks of the forces of revolution, the building of the revolutionary press. In spite of persecution and imprisonment, the "Socialist News," the new name of the "Cleveland Socialist," continued to be published up to the very moment that Ruthenberg [illegible] the socialist party and helped establish the Communist Party in 1919.

While [illegible] within the walls of Sing Sing Prison, in [illegible], Ruthenberg continued to contribute articles to the Communist press that he had helped establish. When he was released from prison he was among those most anxious to enhance the prestige and influence of the Weekly Worker, the first official organ of the Workers (Communist) Party. It was Ruthenberg who led in the effort to establish the firm foundation that has since made the continued existence of THE DAILY WORKER possible these past difficult three years.

When many other very important party activities needed attention badly, something that Ruthenberg knew better than anyone else, he turned a deaf ear, theless, to assure the continued existence of the party organ as a "Daily," going every possible [illegible] struggle to establish it as the mouthpiece of masses of the American working class.

No less than other party activities, The DAILY WORKER will suffer through the loss of our comrade, Ruthenberg.

When finances are needed to keep "Our Daily" going in the face of its daily needs, it will not be possible to draw upon his resourcefulness to overcome each recurring crisis.

To meet this loss new forces must be drawn into action. The [illegible] of workers that is continually seeking new readers for "Our Daily" must win new recruits in large numbers.

• • •

But one plan that is already being urged successfully, especially at the many memorial meetings now being held, is the founding of the Ruthenberg DAILY WORKER'S Sustaining Fund, as a growing monument to our comrade who was taken from us when he was most needed.

The Ruthenberg Sustaining Fund for The DAILY WORKER, as it grows in proportions, should take "Our Daily" out of all danger from being wrecked on the rocks of a new financial crisis.

Here is an opportunity, especially, for those great numbers of non-party members that should be anxious to enroll their support in the fight of The DAILY WORKER against the enemies of the working class. Pledge yourself to contribute a certain amount weekly, or monthly. When a sufficient number of pledges have been made, sufficient to meet the deficit of the paper, then we may all rejoice in saying that The DAILY WORKER is safe, that our monument to our comrade, Ruthenberg, stands secure against every storm. Communicate immediately regarding all the details of this plan with Bert Miller, the business manager of the DAILY WORKER, 33 First street, New York City.

FACTORS BACK OF C. M. T. C.

By P. FRANKFELD.

The first official announcement of the opening of the Citizens' Military Training Camps Campaign is made by Major-Gen. Mcglen, corps commander at Governors Island. This corps area, comprising New York, New Jersey and Delaware, has received an allotment of 5,706, of which 2,175 are to come from New York City.

Letters are again post marked; "Let's go. Citizens' Military Training camps." Ads and announcements have made their reappearance in the subway trains and stations. In large factories, department stores, banks, post-offices, etc, attractive posters will soon be seen displaying in soft, seductive pictures and words the "lure" of the C.M.T.C. Statements will be issued every day by the War Department, the radio has already been utilized for spreading propaganda for the attendance, editorials will appear in the entire capitalist press (New York Times editorial on C.M.T.C., Tuesday, March 1) and every possible means at the disposal of the capitalist class will be used in order to fill up this year's camps. Full pay for young workers will be offered in many factories and many more inducements will be made for the young workers in order to get a bigger turnout of young workers to this military institution.

Started Under Wilson.

In 1916, when the "pacifist" President Wilson was preparing the nation for war, he declared: "All the European powers have been able to mobilize millions as soon as the call for war was issued. We in America are unprepared for any emergency. Our young men must receive a minimum military training. In that way will create the skeleton of our future army."

The Plattsburg camps were established in 1913 and continued until 1916. In 1920, the citizens' military training camp came to be established. The C.M.T.C. was a revival of the military preparedness camps and the first year's attendance numbered 10,000. This figure has grown to 35,000, the goal set for 1927. The desire of the War Department is to have a yearly attendance of 50,000, and this is expressed in the [illegible] issued by C.M.T.C. headquarters. With the growth of the C.M.T.C. its real purpose became more and more obscured and many years and false appeals have been utilized in order to increase the yearly attendance.

Vacation at Hard Labor.

Gen. Mcglen states in his call: "The citizens upon the workers the camps afford a splendid opportunity for a young man to take a month a vacation at the expense of the government. The main object of the camps is to make the young men who take the courses better citizens." In Wednesday's news release this same general declares: "During camps are conducted for the purpose of [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] and

CURRENT EVENTS

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

THE Paris Commune, the first Proletarian State in the history of the human race was established by the workingmen and women of Paris fifty-six years ago, next March 18. In 1871 the German invader was at the gates of Paris and the French bourgeoisie, true to their traitorous history had secretly contracted to betray the city into the hands of the enemy, in order to slaughter their own working class whom they feared more than the legions of Prussia.

* * *

BUT the workers of Paris rose in their wrath, established the Commune and defended the city for two months against the invaders and their treacherous allies, the French bourgeoisie. The Commune was crushed. Over 13,000 workers were slaughtered, men and women. But the heroic deeds of the Communards were not in vain. They will be remembered by the workers forever. The anniversary of the establishment of the Commune will be used in all lands to fire the exploited with new ardor. The International Labor Defense of New York has a Commune commem-

Green Silent While Cuban Terror Rages

A. F. of L. Head Takes Sugar Trust Agent's Word Killings Will Stop; But They Don't

WASHINGTON (FP).—President Machado of Cuba, now seeking re-election, will not stop the persecution and systematic murder of labor union organizers in that island, carried on by his police during the past year and a half.

This is the opinion of observers of the Pan-American Federation of Labor, after a secret visit to Cuba. It appears that when the Cuban workers sent a delegation to the executive council of the American Federation of Labor, at St. Petersburg, Fla., in January, and the council was disposed to direct President Green to appeal to Coolidge and to congress, agents of Machado offered vague promises that if the appeal were withheld Machado would call off his killers. The Cuban ambassador in Washington is reported to have denied, on the one hand, that his government had had any part in the murder of 100 union leaders and the disappearance of over 200 rail strikers, and on the other hand he was confident that the persecution would cease.

Green and his associates, not wishing to have on their hands the blood of any more labor men who might meet death if the appeal were publicly made to Coolidge and Borah, sat silent. Congress has now adjourned. Coolidge has his arch-hoiled ambassador, Gen. Crowder, in Havana. Crowder's word, when he cares to give it to Machado, is law. American sugar companies and railroad companies dominate Cuba, and can overturn the government at any time that Crowder winks. Crowder is satisfied with Machado's regime. And it is noted that the anti-labor terror began after American corporations had complained to Machado at the rail strike of 1925.

If Machado calls off his killers, it will be because the American corporations are satisfied that the labor movement has been crushed or because public opinion in other Latin-American countries has begun to shame him and to undermine his political position.

American Labor Will Rescue The Cuban Workers From Wall Street Murderers

The highest body of the American Federation of Labor, its executive council headed by William Green, has allowed an agent of the National City Bank to gag it and prevent a protest to congress against the campaign of wholesale assassination and extermination that President Machado of Cuba has been carrying on against labor officials and the whole labor movement.

American workers cannot read the story of the intimidation of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor by a proven murderer of hundreds of labor unionists, acting as the open agent of American imperialism, without bowing their heads in shame.

Since the rail strike of 1925 in Cuba, which was followed by mass deportations of strikers, the sugar trust and the National City Bank, with Major-General Crowder of the United States army giving American dictatorship the proper military character, have been backing Machado and the Pearl of the Antilles has been redeemed with the blood of the working class.

Why did the A. F. of L. executive council remain silent?

The excuse that they were afraid that Machado would answer a protest with more secret murders by night will not hold water. The murders have continued and Machado has lost what little fear of the American labor movement he ever had.

The conclusion is irrecapable that the National City Bank and the sugar trust has more power to prevent action by labor officialdom than the death-cries of Cuban workers have to arouse it.

The question arises:

Is the Pan-American Federation of Labor, dominated by the A. F. of L., an instrument for the defense and protection of the workers of Latin America or is it an organ for the furtherance of the interests of American imperialism?

Unless the executive council of the American Federation of Labor now takes the lead in organizing mass protest against the murder of the Cuban working class by Wall Street's butcher every worker in the world will be justified in saying yes to the above question.

Action is needed. At this very hour some Cuban worker is being murdered for his loyalty to his countrymen and his class.

Congress has adjourned but Cuba is not so far away that the angry voice of the American labor movement cannot be heard if it makes its protest strong enough and its determination to fight for the Cuban labor movement unmistakably apparent.

The Machado murder regime can be smashed. It must be smashed and American labor will do the job either with or without the leadership of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor.

American workers, in the beginning of the American imperialist epoch, wrested Cuba from Spain believing that they were freeing her people. The thousands of workers who died from fever and the other thousand poisoned by "embalmed" beef in the filthy camps of the south, died that the National City Bank and the sugar trust might grow and fatten on their corpses and the corpses of the Cuban workers murdered to make Cuba safe for American capitalists.

The labor movement, once it knows the truth, will rebuke the officials who remain silent in the face of these atrocities, will act to end Machado's rule and help the Cuban labor movement in every way necessary to make it the ruling power in the island.

Specifically in Cuba, but in all of Latin-America as well, this is the mighty role that American labor must play if it too is not one day to be confronted with exactly the same murderous attack that the Cuban movement suffers under today.

PRIMO DE RIVERA WITH U.S. AGAINST CENTRAL AMERICA

Stop Spanish People to Speak for Nicaragua

By J.I.R.

(Special to the Daily Worker).

MADRID, (By Mail) - Since 1923, Primo de Rivera has been the representative of Spanish self-determination. He aims Spain being economically smashed since the 1898 war with the United States, it was impossible to develop the imperialist aims which characterize the Spanish monarchy under King Alfonso XIII. Spanish international policy was constrained to confine itself to defense of its interests in Morocco although this has always been affected by the interests of more powerful nations like England, France and Germany.

Spanish nationalists made good use of the world war in order to obtain a better position in Morocco. From the very beginning, the Spanish nationalists were enthusiastically in favor of Germany. They hoped that in case of a German victory, this country would give Spain all the northern part of Morocco, including Tangier.

All those dreams ended when they realized the end of the had come. Since then, Spain, in order to obtain a better position in Morocco, has followed a policy of alliance towards France or England, depending on the moment's possibilities.

Spanish-Latin-Ameria Union.

King Alfonso XIII does not aim to extend his monarchy's power only on Spanish territory. His desire is to emulate the "past heroic deeds of his ancestors" by extending his influence

Police Kill Strikers In Athens; Crowds in Demand for Lower Tax

ATHENS, Greece, March 11.—Two persons have been murdered and fifteen injured here in an attack by the police on a crowd of strikers demonstrating against the high taxes and increased rentals. The strike started day before yesterday, and is participated in by the working class, and by small shopkeepers.

Greetings Sent Women Of America by Editor Of Canadian Magazine

TORONTO, Canada.—S. Custance, editor of Women Workers, on International Women's Day sent the following message to the workers celebrating it in America.

"Greetings to our sisters, the worker women of the cities and farms of the United States. With you this day we pledge ourselves anew to the cause of our class.

"Let us join hands more firmly and unite our efforts more closely to end the tyranny of the rich masters. We have nothing to lose but our chains, and a world to gain."

Green Tries To Forget Charge Of Bribery

"Matty" Woll Also Suffers Loss of Memory

Denying that they ever had made any charges of graft against members of the New York police department in connection with the fur strike of last year, William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and Matthew Woll, a vice-president and acting president of the National Civic Federation, emerged from a visit to Mayor Walker late yesterday afternoon with the announcement that they had only called on His Honor to present information which had been given to them by members of the Furriers' Joint Board during their investigation.

Green Forgets Charges.

According to President Green's written statement, the representatives of the American Federation of Labor make no charges against the police.

When questioned by a DAILY WORKER reporter concerning the inconsistency of this stand after the charges which Matthew Woll made to members of the Federation's Executive Committee, and to the press, last January in Florida, President

WORKERS AND FARMERS THRONG TO RUTHENBERG MEMORIAL MEETINGS

Tribute to the memory of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg, founder and leader of the Communist movement of this country who died last week, is being paid by tens of thousands of workers thruout the country.

Following closely after Wednesday's memorial meetings in New York, where thousands of workers filled three large halls — Carnegie Hall, Central Opera House and Star Casino, reports are coming in of large meetings being held thruout the country where multitudes of workers and farmers who knew Ruthenberg and had participated with him in the working class struggle gather to pay him their final tribute.

Thursday, March 10, a large memorial meeting was held in Boston at the Scenic Auditorium; last night meetings were held in Philadelphia, New Haven, and several other cities. Tonight thousands of workers will gather in meetings in Pittsburgh, while tomorrow large gatherings will be held in Buffalo, Los Angeles and St. Paul. Among the cities that will hold meetings next week are Washington, D. C.; Duluth, Minn.; Superior, Wisconsin; Milwaukee, Wisconsin; Stamford, Conn.; Niagara Falls and scores of other places.

At all these meetings appeals are made to join the Workers (Communist) Party as part of a Ruthenberg Membership Drive. At the New York meetings 300 new members were obtained.

Britain Builds Warships To Schedule

Three Power Meet to Make Only "Elastic" Bargain

WASHINGTON, March 11. — Interest in the three power conference on naval reduction continues unabated, with, however, no real prospects of a reduction.

Naval experts here point out that the statement of Mr. Bridgeman, First Lord of the Admiralty, that Great Britain will not build new ships until after the Geneva meeting and whatever other conferences are arranged during 1927, is not a concession, but is merely a statement of the usual British procedure, for which the British government now claims special recognition as a pacifist move. Britain lays new keels towards the end of her fiscal year.

It is also a matter of attention here, that the British naval appropriations call for a million pounds for new construction. The apparent cut in appropriations is brought about by the discharge of part of the man power of the fleet, now not needed because of the greatest efficiency of the latest style fighting machines.

Many New Ships.

The total appropriation asked for is 58,000,000 pounds.

The following new ships are provided for. One class A cruiser, two class B cruisers, one flotilla leader, eight destroyers, six submarines and two mine sweepers. The big new battleships Nelson and Rodney will be completed this year.

At present Britain has under construction sixteen 10,000-ton light cruisers. The three to be laid down in the immediate future, appropriated for last year, include two of 10,000 tons and one of 8,000 tons. In cruisers, both building and appropriated for Britain has 58, aggregating 322,000 tons. This does not include the three of the 1927 program.

Building More.

The fact is remembered by all conversators on the forthcoming conference, that President Coolidge asked the full preceding for three additional cruisers for the United States, and consented to the authorization of ten more. Congress did not authorize them, but can do so at any time.

Can't Do Much.

The difficulty of handling the conference is expected to be great. During the five power conferences, Secretary Hughes was able to lay down the law to his conferees, and set the pace.

Nothing like that is expected from the three power meeting still to be arranged. Diplomats here point out that the decisions arrived at will be tentative, and elastic in phraseology, to allow for increase in strength of English, Japanese and American navies if France or Italy increases theirs.

Jugoslavia Refuses to Recognize Bessarabian Treaty Before U. S. S. R.

BELGRADE, March 11.—More complications in European politics are seen as a result of Italy's ratification of the Bessarabian treaty that gives that country to Roumania.

According to statements issued by Yugoslav leaders they will not recognize the treaty. One of them went further and said that "Yugoslavia will not recognize Roumania's annexation of Bessarabia until Russia does." As it is a known fact that the Soviet Union has no intentions of recognizing the treaty the position taken by Yugoslavia is of great importance.

Yugoslavia is convinced that Italy, as a necessary preliminary to occupying Albania, is trying to isolate her and thinks that Rome has won over Roumania by ratifying the Bessarabian annexation.

All signs point to a break of the Roumanian-Yugoslav alliance and with it the breakdown of the little entente.

Nationalists In New Battle For Shanghai

Soviet Union Warns Chang-Tso-Lin Citizens Be Freed

SHANGHAI, March 11.—The Nationalists have opened a drive against Sunkiang.

The long expected battle in the Yishing sector of Sunkiang and also in the Taiping Chen region of Anhwei now appears to be in full progress.

Heavy fighting continues in the Chusan Yishing sector, where the nationalists are receiving reinforcements, including many Russian soldier detachments. A motor transport loaded with these men passed through Soochow on its way to the front.

Tomorrow is the second anniversary of the death of Sun Yat Sen and it promises to be an eventful day. Chinese workers have laid plans for a one day general strike.

Another Soviet Protest.

PEKING, March 11.—The Peking government today received a second note from the Soviet government declaring that any violations of the safety of Madame Borodin or the three couriers arrested by Chang Tso-Lin's mercenaries might bring about serious consequences. The Soviet charge d'affaires held a lengthy discussion with the Peking minister of foreign affairs today. The foreign minister assured the Soviet charge that all the prisoners are alive, at Teiman.

Wounded Soldiers.

Wounded Fengtien soldiers began arriving in Peking today from the Honan border, where General Chin Yi-Poo's forces attempted to prevent the entry of the Fentienites into Honan Province en route to attempt the recapture of Hankow from the Cantonese.

Marshal Wu Pei-Fu, who nominally governs Honan, appears to be helpless at the hands of Chin, who, a former subordinate of Wu's, recently seized command of all Wu Pei-Fu troops in Honan. Although Chin is definitely opposing the advance of the Feingtien forces, he is not openly an ally of the Cantonese.

Acquit Striker Who Claimed Innocence

The Third Degree On Regan Failed; So Did the Trial

By ESTHER LOWELL.

(Federated Press).

HACKENSACK, New Jersey. — Tom Regan, young picket marshal of the long Passaic textile strike, is free. After five months in jail, Regan was acquittal on police charges that he was involved in "bombings."

Policeman after policeman testified before Judge Seufert that Regan was a leader of Forstmann-Huffmann mill strikers. He was a delegate to the union. But not a policeman nor detective could prove that Regan had ever had explosives "with intent to injure persons" or "with intent to damage property."

Five men and seven women constituting the jury refused to believe that the young strike leader had had anything more dangerous than "giant salutes." The jurors seemed to know that these big noisy fire-crackers couldn't do anything more than scare a seah, as Regan's third degree statement told.

Harmless "Bombs."

That statement, beaten out of the 21-year old striker, was the only direct evidence against him. Assistant Prosecutor John Breslin didn't produce any of the "bombs" for the jury's view. The police didn't say that they had found any "bombs" on Regan.

Burly Garfield and Clifton townsmen police solemnly disclaimed on the witness stand with crooked faces, that they had beaten and tortured Regan into signing a statement. They admitted that they had carried him from station to station, trying to pin some sort of indictment on him. Detective William Hindenburg got all bowled up under cross-examination by defense attorney Arthur Garfield Hays.

Regan Maltreated.

Attorney John A. McKenna of Newark and other defense witnesses testified how badly beaten Regan looked a day or two after his arrest, and a week later. Regan said he had been kept in a cell on one side of his mouth for months. But the pale young man himself, prison doctor couldn't recognize Regan as one of the prisoners he had treated. Nor would he admit that the ungan doctor had been barred from the jail.

"Red Jew" Norman Thomas, fiery open enemy and devoted defender of Forstmann-Huffmann, poked his gimlet jaw into the court proceedings repeatedly. He tried to bar Bolshevik Rusnelli, secretary, Passaic Joint Defense Committee, from the courtroom, and eyed her like a hawk when defense witnesses took the stand.

Fellow Workers Testify.

But under-sheriff Donaldson, spectacles perched above bulging cheeks and pursed mouth, presided when Nimmo sat back on the benches. And the courtroom was filled with former strikers and other friends of Regan, many of whom testified to the young strike leader's excellent character and reputation, as they knew him during his seven years' mill work, mostly at Forstmann-Huffmann.

Regan is the first of the strike victims held in the so-called "bomb" cases to be acquitted. One other young striker, Joseph Toth, remains to be tried. Of the others, the four tried in Paterson are now in state's prison, the fifth received suspended sentence; and the four others tried at Hackensack are awaiting sentence. Regan's acquittal should help shorten their possible terms, since they had the same sort of fire-crackers and not "bombs" as police declared.

The union intends to appeal the cases of those who have been con-

KUOMINTANG GENERAL PROMISES THE BRUSSELS CONGRESS HIS LOYALTY

THE RED FRONT FIGHTERS

By MANUEL GOMEZ.

FRANKFORT, Germany.—Delegates to the world congress against Imperialism who were invited to address meetings in Germany following the close of the sessions at Brussels, are impressed by the uniformed, well-drilled proletarian battalions which stand guard at revolutionary working class gatherings thruout the country. These are the Red Front Fighters ("Rote Front Kaempfer"), 100,000 strong, formed to protect the labor movement from fascism and other forms of reaction on the heels of the setbacks of October, 1923.

Made up principally of non-party workers, left wing Social Democrats and Communists, the Red Front Fighters have earned the respect of all class-conscious workers. They are organized upon military lines, altho they are of course without weapons. Their discipline and pride of organization are the envy of the fast-waning reactionary detachments. It is admitted on all sides that the Red Front Fighters may be destined to play an important role in the future struggles of the German working class.

Welcome Delegations.

A demonstration led by Red Front Fighters met Chung Ling Fu, of the general staff of the Cantonese army; B. Gumede, of the South African National Negro Congress, and myself upon our arrival at Frankfort. The huge crowds at our meetings here, and in Hannau, Berlin and Dresden, are indicative of the tremendous interest which the Brussels congress has awakened. The European press, with the exception of the English press (which apparently has its own reasons), devotes considerable space to the affairs of the congress—even today, nearly two weeks after the sessions are closed.

Altogether I have addressed seven meetings in Germany—together with Gumede, Chung and others, including General Lin, second in command under Feng Yu Hsiang in north China; El Bekri, outstanding chief of the fighting nationalists in Syria; Metin, of the Riffian nationalists, and Daniel Colraine, vice president of the Trade Union Congress of South Africa. Other delegates have taken part in meetings at Hamburg, Cologne and other cities of northeastern Germany.

The article printed below is part of a series written by the delegate of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League to the Brussels Congress Against Colonial Oppression and Imperialism. The congress was made up of delegates from anti-imperialist organizations, peace societies and labor unions in the European, American and other imperialist nations, from labor bodies and nationalist organizations in the colonial countries, and from subjugated races even in countries with full sovereignty.

Important resolutions were passed, for the practical carrying out of the work of freeing conquered peoples from their slavery. A survey of the work of the congress and the personalities attending, which have made it one of the great events of this era, will be found in these articles.

III

Real Warriors There.

BRUSSELS, Feb. 13.—That the Brussels congress is no mere gathering of talkers was dramatically expressed yesterday with the arrival of two revolutionary nationalist leaders who have been facing the armies of imperialism on the field of battle. These are General Lu Chung Lin, who commanded the Kuominchun forces of the north during Feng Yu Hsiang's absence in Russia, and Mazhar Bey El-Bekri of Syria, foremost chief of the Syrian Nassel Assembly. Both will return to the battle-front at the conclusion of the congress.

Remarkable Soldier.

General Lu, greeted with tumultuous applause, immediately took the floor. He talked in slow, measured tones for about fifteen minutes. He spoke without oratory and almost without gestures, but his speech was the most remarkable address that Europe has ever heard from the lips of a soldier.

"Comrades," he began, "while you are gathered here a war is going on in China which involves the whole future of the human race. Peace is a great thing. I hate war. I am fighting to make it impossible. But it is childish to assume that there can be any peace under imperialism. I am a soldier and must remain one. I shall remain faithful to my conception of the tasks of a soldier, which is to fight against imperialist oppression, to combat militarism and to defend at all times and against all enemies, the interests of the workers and poor peasants.

"Military leaders here learn the sustaining force of reaction. But I pledge my word here that, altho a soldier, I shall never sell myself to the enemy of the workers and peasants, nor lend myself to the schemes of the imperialists. You are my leaders, you here in this congress. I endorse, without qualification all the actions you have taken. I shall try to carry out your decisions in the future."

After tracing the progress of the Chinese revolution, addressing special words of greeting to the working class representatives from the imperialist countries, to the other nationalist movements, and to the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, he concluded with the words: "Long live the world revolution!"

Yesterday's arrivals included W. J. Brown, secretary of the (Amsterdam) International Federation of Trade Unions, who addressed the congress in his own name, urging the union of all the forces of labor against imperialism and capitalism. The British delegation was enlarged by the addition of Ellen Wilkinson, M. P., John Beckett, M. P., Helen Crawford of the International Workers' Relief, and John Williams of the Young Communist League. George Lansbury, vice-president of the British Labor party, will be here tomorrow.

Edo Fimmen led the discussion on the fourth point of the agenda. Fimmen, besides being the leader of the International Federation of Transport Workers, has a credential from the Mexican Federation of Labor (C. R. O. M.). He called attention to the fact, revealed in the special trade union committee of the congress, that seventeen trade union organizations with 7,992,000 members of all races are officially represented and participating here.

These include such organizations as the Unitarian General Confederation of Labor of France (C. G. T. U.), the Minority Movement of Great Britain, the South African Trade Union Congress, the All-China Federation of Trade Unions and the C. R. O. M. of Mexico.

Fimmen was followed by Herclet, of the C. G. T. U.; Daniel Colraine, vice-president of the South African Trade Union Congress; Chen Kuen, of the Chinese Canton-Hongkong strike committee; Mohammed Hatta, of the Dutch East Indies, and Mamel Gomez, secretary of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League (United States Section).

Grain Fraud Charged To Armour Company Being Investigated

CHICAGO, March 11. — The board of trade today completed preparations for the opening of the investigation tomorrow into the grain deal charges, filed by Arbitrator Edward E. Bevers to have been guilty of "fraud and corruption" in its dealing with the defunct Grain Marketing Company.

The investigation by a committee was expected to require several weeks. It will go into all details of the asserted "deliberate" changing of samples to indicate a higher quality of wheat was in the Armour elevator than was actually on hand, preliminary to the merger with the $250,000,000 cooperative organization.

HOOVER PLANTS TRAPS FOR TEN BILLION TRADE

Government Establishes Network of Agents

WASHINGTON, March 11.—A drive to boost American foreign trade over the $10,000,000,000 mark annually has been launched by Secretary of Commerce Hoover.

Forecasting exports of close to $5,000,000,000 and imports of about $4,400,000,000 in 1927, the commerce department today announced details of an expansion program to further stimulate both foreign and domestic business.

New Posts Abroad.

New foreign trade posts were announced tentatively in the following cities:

Oslo, Norway, Berne, Switzerland, Winnipeg, Canada, Caracas, Venezuela, and Wellington, N. Z.

New domestic district offices will be established in Los Angeles, Norfolk, Va., Wilmington, Del., Mobile, Ala., Jacksonville, Fla., and Kansas City.

Hoover's Net Work.

With establishment of the new posts and others in the Far East, Latin America and Europe, now under consideration, the United States will have a network of foreign trade offices extending to virtually every quarter of the globe. These "outposts of trade" are charged with keeping American manufacturers and exporters in touch with the demands of every market, thus furnishing outlets for surplus goods to form a general prosperity stabilizer.

In addition to the new posts the department plans an increase in the commercial staffs in the important offices at London, Berlin, Rome, Buenos Aires and other capitals. Where the posts are located in national capitals the appointees will rank as commercial attaches; otherwise as trade commissioners.

Anti-Militarist Out Of Jail After Fast Of Thirty-eight Days

LOS ANGELES, March 11.—Karl Robinson, jailed for selling peace literature in a Los Angeles park in violation of a city ordinance when he discovered that the army was using the park for "militaristic propaganda," has been released. He is now recovering in a Hollywood sanitarium from his 38 days of fasting.

The Southern California Committee of the Civil Liberties Union protested against the application of the law and demanded either the right to sell peace pamphlets in the park or the removal of the army recruiting station. The Park Commission has informed the union that the permit for the recruiting station expires April 1 and will not be renewed.

General Combines Red-Baiting Speech With a Plea for Larger Army

WASHINGTON (FP.) March 11.—Maj.-Gen. Douglas MacArthur, commanding the third corps area, has delivered a "red scare" talk to the high school cadets in the national capital, where school talks by meinbers of the army are frequently protested by the American legion and D. A. R. groups.

MacArthur told the school boys that "With the red nation in Russia and turmoil and disorder in other parts of the world, there is little doubt that some day our streets will once more be filled with marching men."

Therefore he urged the boys to beware of "heretical teachings" of need for disarming the red nation. He said it was as wrong to propose getting along without the army and navy, as to propose getting along without the police and fire departments.

SINCLAIR CLAIMS HAD RIGHT TO BE SILENT IN QUIZ

Would Upset Powers of Senate Committees

WASHINGTON, March 11.—The defense counsel of Harry F. Sinclair, oil operator on trial for contempt because he refused to answer questions asked in connection with the frauds charged in the Teapot Dome oil lease, is trying to set up the principle that senate investigation committees cannot compel answers to "non-pertinent" queries.

The inquisitorial authority of congressional committees is attacked in the principal contention of the defense—that no witness summoned before a senate or house committee may be compelled to testify relative to matters he deems to be beyond the scope of the legislative question before the investigating body.

Trial Hits Excuse.

Sinclair's refusal to answer seven questions centered upon the Teapot Dome leasing negotiations with former secretary of the interior, Albert B. Fall, in 1922, are justified, in the defense argument, by the fact that the Sinclair leases already were under fire in the Wyoming federal courts when he last appeared before the senate committee. The unanswered questions, the defense contends, involved matters directly concerned in the court proceedings then under way.

Jury Not To Decide.

The government won a major if not a decisive victory in the ruling of Justice William Hitz, presiding, that the issue of "pertinence arising in connection with the unanswered questions was one of law, to be decided by the court in his instructions to the jury, rather than one of fact, to be determined by the jurors themselves from the evidence. This question has never before been determined in the federal courts. It was the foundation stone of the Sinclair defense.

Elizabeth Gurley Flynn Seriously Ill at Home Of Friends in Portland

The DAILY WORKER has received word from Portland, Oregon, that Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, champion of the cause of the workers for the past twenty-one years, has been seriously ill at the home of friends there.

Although she is not well enough to answer the letters of her friends, she is anxious to know what is going on in the movement in New York, according to the word received. Letters should be addressed to her care of Dr. Marie D. Equi, Lafayette Building, Portland, Oregon.

Moors "Friendly" To Spain; Won't Release Airmen Unless Paid

CAPE JUBY, March 11.—Negotiations were proceeding slowly but satisfactorily today between the Spanish authorities and the friendly Moorish tribe which rescued Major Larre-Borges and his three companion aviators from the ransoming of the Uruguayan fliers. The Uruguayans have been in the custody of the Moorish tribesmen since their hydroplane fell into the sea more than a week ago while attempting a trans-Atlantic flight.

Bill to End Capital Punishment Beaten In Mass. Legislature

BOSTON, March 11.—Capital punishment will continue in Massachusetts.

On a voice vote the house of representatives today refused to substitute a bill calling for abolition of the mode of punishment for an adverse report by the legislative judiciary committee.

The adverse committee report was then accepted by the house without a record vote.

Picket Loses Appeal To Appellate Court

WASHINGTON (FP.) March 11.—Dorothy Ferguson, convicted two years ago in police court for picketing a clothing store which was fighting the retail clerks' union, has lost her case in the appellate court of the District of Columbia.

The appellate judges held that police regulations against picketing of stores were not nullified by the Clayton law.

The American Federation of Labor assisted in the defense, after Mrs. Ferguson had been sentenced in the police court to pay a fine.

Governor Orders Bets Off.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., March 11.—Ordering every sheriff in Florida to stop any and all forms of gambling at any race track that may be open, either dog or horse, Governor John W. Martin today said that he would see that the State Supreme Court decision in reference to race tracks was strictly enforced.

Treasury Investigates Charge Big Companies Violating Revenue Law

WASHINGTON, March 11.—An investigation has been started by the treasury to determine whether or not big corporations are violating the revenue laws by placing unauthorized funds in their accumulative surpluses for the purpose of defrauding the government.

So far a number of cases have been discovered that "approached the danger line of law violation", it was said at the treasury today.

Secretary Mellon takes the position that the law does not mean that corporations shall distribute all of their earnings, but that some funds may be placed for the credit of surplus.

A fifty percent penalty is provided in the revenue laws against corporations which place money in surplus funds for the purpose of evading the income tax.

PRIMO DE RIVERA WITH U.S. AGAINST CENTRAL AMERICA

Stop Spanish People to Speak for Nicaragua

to other countries. The actual military government, therefore imperialist, has been aligned since 1923 favoring King Alfonso's wishes.

The Directory has concentrated its international policy in one direction—the formation of a Spanish-Latin-American Union. Major Franco's raid across the Atlantic (Palos to Buenos Aires) was only carried out in order to start propaganda to enhance the prestige of Spain in Latin America. When King Alfonso went to Huelva to welcome the airmen on their return to Spain, he said in his speech that Latin-American republics should form a new League of Nations with Spain.

The Aeronautic Congress.

Some weeks ago a Spanish-Latin-America Aeronautic Conference was held in Madrid. In spite of the scientific and industrial purposes that were discussed, the conference had only political aims. This was one more step in Primo de Rivera's policy of influencing Latin-America; and in this instance in the Aeronautic Conference establishing the basis for an international organization including Spain and Latin-American countries to work against U. S. A.

The plans of Alfonso XIII and Primo de Rivera failed because Uruguay's delegation said its government would not sign any proposal contrary to the resolutions established by the C. L. N. A. of Paris. Uruguay's attitude followed immediately by other countries, was caused by the influence of some European diplomats.

Another fact that shows the Spanish government's policy toward Latin-America is the position given to the coming Spanish-American exposition in Sevilla. Still another indication, is the big official subscription given to help the victims of Cuba's last catastrophe. King Alfonso XIII wants to be popular in all Latin-American countries.

Against Mexico.

Spanish Catholics, helped by the government, have started an active campaign against the Mexican government. Catholic priests expelled from Mexico have come to Spain, and they are very active in giving lectures and publishing pamphlets in which they relate the "Communistic horrors" of the Calles government. Money is being collected everywhere to help their comrades still living in Mexico.

All this propaganda has of course brought protests from all over Spain. But Primo de Rivera has immediately found a way to keep this quiet. Censorship does not allow the press to publish any article approving the Calles government, nor even to censure Spanish catholics for campaigning against Mexico.

Last Sunday a group of intellectuals organized and secretly issued a manifesto, which as an expression of sympathy toward Mexico they took to the Mexican embassy in Madrid. The police were mobilized, and the professors and students who had organized this move were sent to prison, notwithstanding the fact that thousands of people were present to watch the proceedings at the embassy.

Sympathy for Nicaragua.

The greatest part of Spanish public opinion watches with enormous interest President Coolidge's policy of attack upon Nicaragua. The Spanish government is against Nicaragua, side by side with Wall Street.

No Spaniard is allowed to publish anything against the United States intervention in Nicaragua. The United States ambassador in Madrid has succeeded in convincing Primo de Rivera and he will not permit any criticism of the Coolidge policy. Primo de Rivera is clever in dealing on this question a policy similar to the one followed with Mussolini.

King Alfonso XIII and Primo de Rivera, whose aims are to establish a Latin-American Union, join with the United States when it is crushing countries struggling against imperialism and for political and economic independence.

COAL MINED IS FAR AHEAD OF USUAL DEMANDS

100,000,000 Tons More Than Last 12 Months

Coal production keeps galloping ahead of all reasonable demand. Despite just middling industrial activity and very mild weather for the late winter months, production is still the highest on record in the last seven years. Production last week was 2,000,000 tons over the similar week of 1926. Nevertheless there is a slow and steady decline from 12,500,000 tons in the mid-February week to 12,750,000 last week. The nervous line on the Bureau of Mines chart will sag down badly within a few more weeks as the situation ahead of the industry becomes clearer.

Production in the coal year March 1, 1926, to February 28, 1927, is 100,000,000 tons ahead of the similar period for the previous twelfthmonth. This surplus represents in good measure the extra coal dug to help break the British strike and to lay up reserves against the prospective American strike. To visualize the figures, note they are for the "coal years" ending with February, as explained above:

	Net tons
1919-20	415,488,000
1920-21	500,357,440
1921-22	395,405,000
1922-23	568,885,000
1923-24	516,229,00
1925-26	526,587,00
1926-27	510,000,000

West Virginia Gains 57,000,000 Tons Since 1923; Still Increasing

One millions tons of coal a week is an immense figure. That is four times as much as all New England consumes each week. Only four states produce that much or more.

But West Virginia has increased that much in the last four years. Actually, West Virginia produced last week 1,150,000 more tons of coal than in the corresponding week of 1923. Look at the respective figures:

1924	1,780,000 tons
1927	2,940,000 tons

That means 57,000,000 tons a year increase, or one tenth of the entire annual production of the United States. Compare West Virginia with the other three million ton a week states, in average February weekly production:

	1923	1927
Pennsylvania	2,900,000	3,375,000
West Virginia	1,780,000	3,150,000
Illinois	1,975,000	2,000,000
Kentucky	775,000	1,400,000

Pennsylvania, half union and half non-union, has increased but little, considering the heavy national production figures. West Virginia, entirely non-union, has leaped ahead 1,370,000 a week in four years, or 70 per cent. Illinois has barely held her own, while non-union Kentucky has almost doubled production.

What an indictment of the boom figures of the union-wrecker Lewis and the corrupt officialdom of the United Mine Workers!

SHIP SINKS IN NEW YORK BAY; ONE LIFE LOST

Heroism of Satertender Saves Most of Crew

One man was reported missing this afternoon following a head-on collision between the Southern Pacific freighter El Sol and the American Diamond freight ship Sac City in New York Bay during a danse fog. The El Sol was sunk in 60 feet of water not far from Governor's Island. The Sac City was badly damaged.

It had been reported that 20 men from the El Sol's crew of 45 were missing, but all were accounted for except John Brown, ship's carpenter on the El Sol, who is believed to have been drowned. He was seen hanging to a life boat davit when the El Sol went down.

An outstanding feat of heroism was performed by Enrique Torres, a water tender on the El Sol. Realizing that the ship was fast settling and that an oil explosion was threatened, which might burn many men to death, Torres risked his own life by sticking at his own post until he could turn off the oil and air pressure leading to the boilers. When Torres finally arrived on deck all the life boats had been launched. He grabbed a life belt and jumped overboard just as the El Sol disappeared.

May Close Channel.

The Southern Pacific freighter sank in sixty feet of water near Staten Island with only the tips of her spars showing.

The wreck is being investigated to see whether it blocks the channel.

Mass Movement Gains Strength in Oakland; Bishop Brown to Talk

OAKLAND, Calif., March 11.—The militant working-class movement is gaining in numbers and strength. Mass meetings and I. L. D. socials have been attended by large crowds of enthusiastic workers.

Large crowds of workers have turned out for the Friday noon mass meetings held on a street corner near the California Cotton Mill and have heard men like Albert Weisbord and Edgar Owen. A reception given in honor of Anna C. Porter, Secretary for the I. L. D. of Santa Clara County, aroused a great deal of interest.

Bishop William Montgomery Brown, the "heretic bishop," who speaks at the Ashmes Temple, March 13 is expected to draw an overflow crowd.

Civil Liberties Union Ask That Charge of Overt Acts Be Proved

Forrest Bailey, a director of the American Civil Liberties Union, has challenged Congressman Sosnowski of Michigan to prove charges of "inserting ignorant people to overt acts" made against the union on the house of representatives floor. Mr. Bailey denied the statement of Congressman Sosnowski that the union was engaged in subversive acts against the government and was interfering with the government's foreign policy.

victed and sees in the acquittal of Pegan a good chance for securing a reversal of the verdicts in the other cases.

There are also several hundred other workers, who were arrested on one pretext or another during the strike and are at present out on bail, whose cases are to come up soon and who must be defended by the union and those organizations helping in the defense of the Passaic strike prisoners. For this purpose, a large sum of money will be necessary, and accordingly, the union and its friends plan to launch a defense drive in the very near future to acquaint organized labor with the cases of these strikers, many of whom face years in prison if convicted, in order to enlist the support of every worker in the task of defending these textile workers.

Irving Berlin Reveals His Chief Adviser; His Name Is Tony Curto

Wilson had his Colonel House, baseball has its Landis, the movies its Hays, and Irving Berlin, reputed to be America's foremost jazz composer, has his Tony Curto.

Tony Curto is a barber, and Irving Berlin's chief advisor, it was revealed today.

When Irving is in doubt, so the story goes, he discovers he needs a shave or haircut and hurries to Tony's place. There he hums his stuff, and—if Tony gives his "O K," the stuff is a hit. If Tony disapproves, Berlin looks for flaws.

Thus, as Tony modestly admits, Tony is the man behind the man behind American jazz.

Organize the Traction Workers!

ARTICLE IV. THE COMPANY UNION—HOW IT WORKS

By ROBERT MITCHELL.

The great menace of the company union to which attention was drawn in the last section was illustrated in the case of The Interborough by the fact that the Interborough "Brotherhood" has all the advantage of the industrial union operated in the interests of the company and all the weaknesses of the craft form of organization dividing workers.

Never Meet.

The Interborough "Brotherhood" embraces some thirteen thousand men but is divided into thirty-three separate locals which do not meet under any conditions. Representation is provided for on the basis of one delegate to every 250 men, making a total of about 55 delegates to a general committee, which, with a president, is the governing body of the company union.

The rank and file are kept in complete ignorance of all activities outside of their respective locals. The delegates of the general committee meet as a joint board, a body of unique coercive power, as the last July strike so clearly portrayed.

Elections to the general committee are held on company property under the supervision of either company officials or the delegates themselves. Ask John Lewis, for instance, what may always be depended upon to hannen under such circumstances. John was recently defeated for the presidency of The United Mine Workers.

Nevertheless, he is still in office and will be the infamous misleader of the next fake settlement with the bosses or of an equally fake strike call due next April.

Company Runs Union.

Accordingly it is safe to assume that the Interborough officials have had no difficulty in managing the general committee.

The president of the "Brotherhood" is a genial Irishman by the name of Patrick J. Connolly. Pat's early history is, as the books say, altogether shrouded in mystery. There are in existence various troublesome rumors reporting him to have been one of a crew of strikebreakers imported from Chicago during the 1905 strike. He has never chosen to "brand" this rumor for the file that it still might not be. But the question as to the historical accuracy of this fact loses its importance in the light of Pat's more recent and more clear-cut claim to the role of strike breaker.

Pat's Queer Friendship.

"Paddy" Connolly began his career very definitely as a thick-headed, domineering company tool, but under the skillful tutorship of Mr. Quackenbush and his legal lights, Paddy has developed into a shrewd, genial, sensitive, cunning and deceitful hypocrite. In the staccato of his very marked Irish brogue you will hear the ring of warm friendship.

You are sure to believe that beneath that breast there beats a heart overflowing with the milk of human kindness. But this gentleman, more than other single agency, is responsible for the exploitation, suppression and peculiar forms of outrages practised on the men.

By such methods as will presently be described he has been the means in some instances of compelling the workers to vote themselves a decrease in pay at times when the rising cost of living had left them a wage hardly above the subsistence level.

Keeps Pay Low.

On other occasions he has utilized the company union "machine" of the general committee to turn back any rising demand for increases in pay or changes in hours. The method which he adopts to carry out his attacks is a study in itself. A complete tirade of abuse is launched, first by one of his ready henchmen, usually Mr. Mangan. Immediately the attack is taken up by one, then another of the "gang." No insult or slander is left unused in order to beat down the opposition of an aggressive delegate. Ask Lavin, Bark, Phelan or Walsh for testimony as to this fact. But of them, later.

Pat Gets Rich.

In characteristic condemnation of any such rising minority, Paddy is wont to hurl the thunderbolt of his inevitable formula: "Remember, the dog can wag the tail; the tail can't wag the dog!" To appreciate this remark it is necessary to hear it with the brogue! To understand its economic basis it is necessary to know that Paddy Connolly has already acquired considerable real estate.

The company union has an elaborate and carefully worded constitution. Even though you read it with one eye closed and the other half open, you will have no difficulty in distinguishing behind the screen of "legally" worded fakeriana, the form of the author; the "Quack-in-the bush," as the men say. A pun for which the workers will surely be pardoned.

Your Job or Your Office!

You notice for instance such provisions as that for the election of delegates to the general committee, free and unconditioned as you please. But read a little further. This innocent paragraph, apparently so unimportant, really means that the final say as to the qualifications for the delegates is reserved for the general committee itself. Quite like The Central Trades and Mr. William Green!

In the last "Brotherhood" election, for instance, delegates who had been nominated were summoned before "Paddy" Connolly, questioned as to their "loyalty" to the brotherhood and either approved of or disqualified. In the case of the particular delegate who presumed to run against Paddy himself, he was asked which he preferred, his job or the office. He preferred the job!

Concessions—Not Exactly!

You will notice other provisions containing the embodiment of long fought for demands on the part of the men. Reading these provisions you may again be impressed with the liberality and justice of the principles laid down. But turn to the sections referred to which are to provide for the method by which the concessions made are to be carried out. You will not find these sections and articles at all! It is quite like having prohibition without the provision for an enforcement act, guarantees of justice with capitalist judges on the bench, the right of labor to organize with the equal privilege of the injunction typical and inevitable examples of the hypocrisy of a class society the principles of which are directed against the exploited but leave the exploiters free to continue their purposes.

UNIONISTS WAR ON INJUNCTION AT ALBANY N. Y.

Argue Against Court's Unlimited Powers

A delegation of 500 labor men furnished atmosphere for workers' rights as the Lipowics-Hackenburg bill limiting the use of injunctions in labor disputes came before the Joint General Law Committee of the state legislature.

"Through the injunction organized labor is being stripped of its legal right of collective bargaining," President Sullivan of the State Federation of Labor told the committee.

In the labor delegation that flanked Sullivan as he appeared before the committee were such leading New York labor figures as President Joseph P. Ryan, of the Central Trades and Labor Council of New York City; Daniel J. Ahearns, president of the Allied Printing Trades Council; Jerome Keating, president of the State Metal Trades Workers; Alex Kelso and Otto Nichols, representing the building trades; Philip Umstadter, president of the printing pressmen of New York and John M. O'Hanlon, secretary of the State Labor Federation.

To Prevent Injunctions.

Injunctions have mercilessly torn away constitutional rights from New York unions in the last year—notably during the railway workers and cloakmakers' strikes. The present bill forbids the courts to issue injunctions against peaceable picketing and other legal forms of conducting strikes. It declares that injunctions must not be used against any but criminal acts. The bill further declares that contract violations shall not be a cause for injunctions.

Claim Stakers Rush Into Weepah; Hurry Dance Hall Building

TONOPAH, Nev., March 11.—Frank Horton, father of one of the youths who unearthed the rich gold strike at Weepah, was back in Tonopah today after a trip to Los Angeles. He said development of the section where his son and Leonard Traynor found the ore would be started at once. He will leave here today for Weepah, the scene of the strike.

Claims have been staked out for miles around the original strike, but whether or not the discovery will "pan out" log is still a matter of conjecture.

Experienced mining men declare there is no question concerning richness of the ore brought out by Horton and Traynor. Their specimens assayed $78,000 to the ton.

Weepah was fairly humming today as prospectors continued to pour in. Many tents have been erected and wooden shacks are being hastily thrown together.

No mining camp would be complete without a dance hall, therefore one is being built.

Claims have been staked out for miles around the original strike, but whether or not the discovery will "pan out" log is still a matter of conjecture.

Experienced mining men declare there is no question concerning the richness of the ore brought out by Horton and Traynor. Their specimens assayed $78,000 to the ton.

The lad hanged himself in a shed at the rear of his parents' home here late yesterday, shortly after a truant officer had called and warned his father the boy would be taken into Juvenile Court if he did not attend school regularly. The father scolded Clyde, and a few hours later found his body hanging in the shed.

The boy had previously told his mother he would kill himself rather than go to school.

TELLEZ REPORTS SECRET MESSAGE BRINGING PEACE

Solution of Mystery In Land Law Amendment?

MEXICO CITY, March 11.—Manuel Tellez, ambassador to the United States, was quoted today as stating that relations between the United States and Mexico were clearing.

The ambassador was reported to have stated that the situation was much better than last December, but he declined to go further and explain why, although it was understood he based his optimism on the recent exchange of notes, the subject matter of which has not been disclosed.

May Relax Law.

Following several conferences between President Calles and Ambassador Tellez there were unconfirmed reports today that the Mexican government has decided to appease the United States by offering certain amendments to its oil and land laws. The nature of these amendments is not disclosed but it is reported there will be a relaxation of some of the provisions to which Wall Street's diplomats have objected most strenuously.

"Penn" Gets Control Over Smaller Road

WASHINGTON, March 11.—Application was made to the Interstate Commerce Commission today by the Pennsylvania and Detroit Railroad for authority to issue $22,000,000 of mortgage gold bonds. They will be delivered to the Pennsylvania Railroad, which will guarantee them.

This is regarded as a move by the Pennsylvania Railroad to gain control of smaller roads and to incorporate them with the larger body. It is also in harmony with the policy of the present political administration, as President Coolidge has been advocating consolidation of railroads.

Green and Woll Try to Forget About Charge In Fight On Furriers

Green could not recollect that any charges had been made.

Turning to Woll, he asked:

"Matty" Also Forgets.

"Did you remember any charges, Matty?" And Woll could not remember any charges either.

In response to further questions, President Green said that the committee which had visited the Mayor—including Green, Woll, Edward J. Metlrigly, Huge Frayne, John Sullivan and Joseph P. Ryan—had merely submitted a report of what had been given at the St. Petersburg, Florida, meeting in January.

"No charges were submitted", said Green, "inasmuch as we have no evidence of any charges. Nothing specific was discussed. We simply talked over the report of the Joint Board of the Furriers, who themselves claim to have given out money to the police."

If Mr. Green and Mr. Woll's memories were not so poor, they might be able to recollect that in a statement issued January 6th it was announced that the A. F. of L. Furriers Joint Board Cloak Operating Committee charged that the police had been bribed by officers of the New York Joint Board.

Ryan Protests.

January 15th, Joseph P. Ryan, one of the members of the committee and president of the New York Central Trades and Labor Council, telegraphed Green protesting this charges and in answer to this message, Green stated that "the A. F. of L. is a responsible body and they stand by the report."

Charges Buried.

They went on to state that "the evidence" of this graft was contained in the testimony of fur workers, but members of the Joint Board immediately denied that any one of them had made such statements, and charged that the report of the Investigating committee had been made public without ever being submitted to the Joint Board members for correction as had been promised.

"The statement issued today by Green is absolutely contradictory to the statements of the 14th and 18th of January," said Ben Gold, manager of the Furriers' Joint Board when informed of the DAILY WORKER'S interview yesterday.

Awful Memory.

"It is strange that at this time President Green should turn around and deny that he made these charges. This proves, more than anything else, that the charge against the Joint Board is false and constitutes a frame-up.

"We deny every other charge in the statement which President Green issued today. And just as this police bribe statement is false, so are all other statements made against the members of the Joint Board."

Did Not Like School So He Hangs Himself

MARIETTA, O., March 11.—Another name was added to the roster of student suicides here today, as preparations were made for the funeral of Clyde Seevers, 14, a student in Marietta Junior High School.

The lad hanged himself in a shed at the rear of his parents' home here late yesterday, shortly after a truant officer had called and warned his father the boy would be taken into Juvenile Court if he did not attend school regularly. The father scolded Clyde, and a few hours later found his body hanging in the shed.

The boy had previously told his mother he would kill himself rather than go to school.

Fascism and the Amsterdam International.

So disgraceful and disastrous has been the surrender to Mussolini of D'Arragona and his followers in the Italian Confederation of Labor to the workers of Italy and the international labor movement that even the reformist leaders of the International Federation of Labor (Amsterdam) have been moved to protest.

The strength of the protest is weakened, however, by the fact that Amsterdam utilizes the incident to take a crack at the Communists. This is accomplished by the simple method of denouncing the tactic of boring from within the fascist "unions" as if this was the mistake made by D'Arragona and other reformist Italian trade union leaders.

The difference between the Communist workers who became members of the fascist unions and D'Arragona is that the Communists joined to work for the destruction of fascism while the reformist leaders capitulated to fascist dictatorship.

Today the leadership of the struggle against fascism is in the hands of the Communist Party of Italy and the struggle itself is carried on by the Communist workers and the wide masses of the Italian working class that endorse and support the Communist program.

It is not because the reformist leaders advised their followers to join the fascist union that they betrayed the whole labor movement but because they abandoned the struggle against fascism—gave no program and leadership to the workers who were and are ready to fight Mussolini and the black reaction he represents.

The Amsterdam statement lauds the Italian labor leaders (reformists) who have gone into exile but it does not mention the hundreds of Communist workers who have been jailed and tortured and murdered and the others who stay in Italy in spite of the daily danger to life and liberty and carry on the fight.

The workers and peasants of Italy will free themselves from fascism by supporting the Communist program and by no other means.

Truth in the Chicago Tribune.

The Chicago Tribune is a policy paper—that is, all its material from news stories to editorials, health department, advice to the lovelorn and the "colyum" are made to conform to the viewpoint of the industrial lords of the middle west in whose interest The Triture is published.

But occasionally a slip up occurs as on March 10 when the Tribune published the following, headed "Strong Government Seen Developing in China War," without comment:

Spurred by a new national patriotism which the rest of the world has considered impossible, China promises to develop a strong central government out of the present civil war, Lieut. Col. C. C. Haffner told members of the Military Intelligence association at a meeting yesterday in the Hotel La Salle. Organization of ignorant coolies and farmers into unions based on the soviet system, capable of political action, has given the southern government the real nationalistic impulse which probably will establish a strong national government in southern and central China and then spread north. Col. Haffner said.

Those who understand the technique of newspaper production will realize at once how this happened. The copy reader's eye went no farther than the sixth and seventh lines, caught the name of the speaker and that of the organization he was addressing and concluded quite naturally that nothing said by such an individual to such an audience could be otherwise than 100 per cent against anything and everything not 100 per cent American.

Even the Military Intelligence association will be suspected for a time by the Tribune and a copy reader will probably be looking for a job. Truth and The Tribune are bitter foes.

CAPITALIST statesmen continue to babble about peace at Geneva while their governments continue to build battleships. The British government plans an addition of twenty new warcraft to its naval flotillas and cordially accepts Coolidge's proposal for a naval partial disarmament conference with the proviso that nothing should be discussed that would weaken British sea power. Coolidge has it known that unless the powers accept his policy the United States will embark on a naval-building program that will make the rest of the world pop-eyed. Just as we said. The proposal was a fake put forward to justify such a program.

SIR SAMUEL HOARE boasted of the success achieved by a squadron of British aeroplanes in suppressing a revolt of Indian tribesmen last year. In addition to the effectiveness of bombs, Hoare informed the house of commons that when the tribesmen were driven into caves by the bombs they were driven out again by fleas. Even the lowly flea recognizes the value of British imperialism to civilization! Yet we are decidedly of the opinion that subject peoples will free themselves despite all the bombs, fleas and Hoares at the disposition of imperialism.

FOREIGN Minister Stresemann of Germany is lording it over the League of Nations at this session. He speaks German and does not give a darn whose ears are offended. The polite diplomacy of the former allied nations no longer suits the "Hun"; in other do mestic neighbors quite frankly. The Germans are now respectable because they have not turned "red" and because they have guns, men and some money. Here is a chance for a good row! (Not good in the Quincy Shaw sense) someone to nurture the indignation of an allied soldier now in hell or in some equally agreeable place, who died to save the world from German militarism, so hearing from a new arrival that Stresemann of Germany was defending the ancient aims of Great Britain at the league session.

ONE brief glance at any capitalist paper today should convince even an addict of the kind of liberalism that is purveyed by The Nation that nothing is more certain than another world war within a comparatively short period of time. The poison gas experts of all imperialist powers are working day and night, perfecting the most deadly gases for the next world carnage. The nerves of all governments are exceedingly jumpy. All this talk of peace and peace conferences, disarmaments, is so much eye wash to cover up the aims of the governments from the masses.

THE next world war will be more deadly than the last. For every person killed in that debacle ten lives will be wiped out in the next. The slaughter will be for the purpose of saving civilization perhaps from one or more hostile powers or perhaps from Communism, which means from the rule of the workers and farmers. The two deadliest indictments of imperialism are war and unemployment.

Ruthenberg and the Labor Party

By WILLIAM Z. FOSTER.

THE death of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg, who was cut down in the prime of life and in the fullness of his service to the workers, comes as a great shock to our party. It is a direct loss which we can ill afford to sustain. The American working class is profoundly weak in leadership. Hence the [illegible] leader is the cause for [illegible] interest over the death of [illegible] Ruthenberg. He did a [illegible] service. Many times in a gap in our ranks, that we could [illegible] against the enemy.

He Was Trained Leninist.

Comrade Ruthenberg devoted the best years of his life to the education and organization of the masses of workers for their struggle against capitalism. He was a trained Leninist. No one did he understand the necessity of educating and uniting the workers for the final overthrow of capitalism and the establishment of Communism, but also that this can be done effectively only by the most conscious participation actively in the every day struggles of the workers in order to give them practical leadership, organization and inspiration in these battles.

Comrade Ruthenberg had a really keen appreciation of the role of the labor party in the great task of the class struggle and organizationally organized the masses of workers against capitalism and paving the way for the eventual mass Communist Party. The affiliation of the vast masses of workers to the capitalist parties stands as a tremendous barrier to the progress of the working class. It keeps open the very arteries of the workers for an influx of poisonous and demoralizing propaganda from the capitalists. It strikes from the hands of the workers the weapon of the powerful political organization they should have.

The formation of a mass labor party will represent a great step forward for the working class. The labor party will emphasize class lines on the political field and will give an organizational impulse to the development of class consciousness and class organization.

The working class, thus cutting many of the treacherous class collaboration entanglements which now ramesh it and keep it helpless in the grip of capitalism will begin to tread faster than ever the road of class struggle which leads finally to a Communist mass party and the overthrow of capitalism.

This was one of the many great lessons which Comrade Ruthenberg never ceased in pressing upon our party. He was an untiring advocate of the labor party.

Sees Mistakes Liquidated.

The problem of finding the best way for the building of a labor party in the United States is a difficult one. Many factors conspire to make it complicated. And in working it out we have made many mistakes. At first we tended to ignore the importance of the labor party movement; later, awakening to it and suddenly, we tended to push the progressives faster than they would go in forming a party. Then, reaching hard for mass contacts, we almost drifted into an opportunist policy in the LaFollette campaigns; and finally, we reacted somewhat to minimize the applicability of the labor party slogan.

Sometimes these errors were made by the party as a whole, sometimes only by sections of it. But finally, by dint of rich experience and the guidance of the Comintern, we have liquidated these mistakes and have arrived at a correct united front labor party policy. Our party is awake to the importance of the issue and we understand how best to struggle for its realization under the given conditions.

In all these labor party developments, which rank among the most vital experiences in the life of our Workers (Communist) Party, Comrade Ruthenberg played a central role. His influence in solving the many complex problems confronting us was invaluable. And in the application of the labor party policy he was indefatigable. Never an occasion was allowed to pass but what he pressed upon the workers the vital necessity of organizing the labor party and he gave them practical guidance in this task through our party. Whoever speaks of the labor party in America must acknowledge the work of Comrade Ruthenberg.

Comrade Ruthenberg is gone. The great cause for which he labored so loyally must continue. The masses of workers must be educated and organized for their final emancipation. Let us, therefore, apply ourselves to the work with renewed determination, drawing fresh rourage and inspiration from the rich life work of Comrade Ruthenberg.

Workers in Pledge to "Carry On"

A Severe Blow.

STREET NUCLEUS 1, Woodlawn, Pa.—"We mourn the death of our gallant and brave leader, Comrade Charles E. Ruthenberg. His sudden death came as a severe blow to us as well as to the militant working class movement, and especially to the party that represents the vanguard of the American working class. He is dead, but his memory and career will inspire us on to the achievement of our goal."

• • •

Will Live On.

GREEK FRACTION, New York.—"We mourn the sudden death of our comrade, C. E. Ruthenberg, one of our most militant leaders, at the prime of his life.

"Ruthenberg was the uncompromising champion of the working class. He will always live in our hearts and serve as an inspiration and example to every worker in the fight against the exploiting class."

Build the Ranks of the Communist Party.

The Central Nucleus of the Workers Party of Minneapolis:—"We received with deep sorrow the sad news of Comrade Ruthenberg's death this morning.

"Comrade Ruthenberg's untimely death is a severe blow to the party, to the international revolutionary movement and to the working class everywhere. We declare that this will be felt throughout the entire working class movement—and therefore will be hailed with joy by the master class.

"We resolve that the best method of commemorating the revolutionary deeds of Comrade Ruthenberg is to build more solidly the ranks of the Workers (Communist) Party, of which Comrade Ruthenberg was executive secretary and to which he had devoted his life since the organization of the Communist Party in Amerika."

"Build Communist Party and Free Working class."

"The City Executive Committee of the Workers Party Elizabeth, N. J, in behalf of its members, mourns the untimely death of our beloved leader, Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg. And at his grave we close our ranks and pledge to build the Communist Party of America and liberate the working class of Amerika."

"Realize His Ideals."

LITHUANIAN WOMEN'S ALLIANCE, Pittsburgh, Pa.—"The Lithuanian Women's Progressive Alliance, No. 60, expresses its deep regret at the death of C. E. Ruthenberg, which was a great loss to the revolutionary vanguard of the American working class. We call upon all working women to follow the ideals of Comrade Ruthenberg, which are the ideals of Lenin and the Communist International."

Pioneers Pledge to Carry on Fight.

Young Pioneers, Stamford, Conn.—"The Stamford, Conn., section of the Young Pioneers wishes to express its deepest sorrow and heartfelt grief over the news of the death of our beloved leader and dear comrade, Ruthenberg.

"The loss of such a fearless and rourageous fighter and devoted comrade to our cause will be deeply felt thruout and within the ranks of our Pioneer organization.

"We promise faithfully and loyally to stand by and recruit more Pioneers into our organization in order to produce such brave and able leaders as Comrade Ruthenberg."

FOOTNOTES TO THE NEWS

By EUGENE LYONS

A report has it that Texas Guinan and Aimee McPherson will tour the country together. If true it marks a great advance in the technique of soul-saving and one that is quite in line with general industrial tendencies. Under the old system people sinned in one place and were saved in another. But with Texas and Aimee setting up shop together one could save as fast as the other turns them out. Business should improve at both ends through such concentration of supply and demand.

Among the more interesting recent developments has been the united front of the godly. Protestants, Catholics, Jews are contributing to each other's charities, chipping in for each other's churches, issuing united-front reports on strikes two years after they are over, etc. We have had railroad mergers, bread mergers, bank mergers. Is a religious merger in sight? It might be one way to stave off bankruptcy for that obsolete industry a little longer.

A constant reader (yes, there is one! and it isn't nice of you!) advises thusly: "At Temple Emanu-el, where the rich Jews do their duty by a reformed Jehovah, the choir includes a Negro basso and a German Protestant alto. The organist is an American Protestant. There is a rumor that there are also Jews, but that is not as yet verified."

DUMB—BELLES—LETTRES

(FORMERLY "LETTERS TO A LUNATIC")

Dear Lester:

Hello Lester darling. Here I am sitting down to write again though really and truly there is not much new to tell you. Because mostly everybody is busy explaining the student suicides and hasn't time for nothing else. I mean the way boys have been killing theirselves on account of life being so useless and futile. My brother Percy says it's all a put-up job for publicity for the ministers and Fannie Hurst and Otto Kahn so they can write into the papers about it. But Percy was always a great kidder.

He also says that Dr. Fishbein is very optimistic. I mean when he said the other day that ten years from now there will be ten million imbeciles if something isn't done about quack doctors. Personally I think that's pessimistic, don't you? But Percy says that there are twenty million imbeciles in the country now, so we should be thankful to the quacks if they reduce the number. I also want to tell you some of the news as best I can.

In the first place you will be glad to learn that Coolidge moved to a nice new house in Washington. It belongs to a man named Schlesinger so everybody is afraid Coolidge will lose the Ku Klux Klan vote but he is going to move soon to the west where men are men and women aren't. (That's one of Percy's wisecracks. Everybody in the Green Cat in Greenwich Village laughed at it, though I don't see anything funny.) Coolidge will take twelve weeks vacation to watch the farmers work and the farmers will be so pleased they won't mind his not signing some bill or other. Also congress closed for the spring and summer and winter after they passed the filibuster.

A Russian by the name of Kerensky arrived in town on a secret mission to raise money for himself. Also William Green, the labor leader, is in town to tell the mayor all about how Moscow tried to corrupt the New York police. They shoot people over there for bribery, in Moscow I mean, then they do such a thing to us, which all goes to show, doesn't it. Harry Daugherty, by the way, was freed again from the charge that he conspired with Miller to skin the government and Miller got eighteen months in prison for it. Isn't it wonderful how many innocent people there are in our country? You'd never think it from the looks of things.

You will also be glad to learn that this government has decided not to take over Nicaragua. The president of that country and the congress too have been begging us to take them over but Coolidge said nothing doing. So we are sending more and more marines into Nicaragua to stay there and prevent them from joining the U. S. A. by force. That's about all for now, Lester darling, because I can't find a razor to sharpen my pencil. So long dear.

Your own MYRTLE.

FROM A GALLERY OF FUTILITIES.

2. Nearly a Hero.

Manifestly Percy was born to play a romantic role in life, but in a piece, alas! which has never come off. There is about him a persistent sense of imminent adventure. He moves through an atmosphere charged with drama, tangy with the aromas of new excitements. You feel that it needs just the smallest spark to touch it off. . . . But nothing ever happens.

He is keyed-up for something big, impetuous, perhaps cyclonic . . . poised for action . . . the great gesture, the stirring speech hovering on the very brink of realization. . . . Once you become aware of this arrested drama in Percy, this quivering unreleased adventure, you are uncomfortable in his presence, waiting nervously for the thing to happen. . . . The signs of heaven's foiled intentions are upon him, even as he sits there in the cafe, a little bored, a little high-strung, a little nervous . . . a hero in the fetters of common circumstance.

And somehow Percy blunders into more and more of these fetters. At thirty he has a shrewish wife, three children, cumulative debts. . . . And each additional restraint makes the spectacle of dangerously suspended heroics more excruciating to look upon . . . a dam about to give way . . . a mountain about to topple over . . . the sizzle of a bomb about to go off. . . .

No wonder everybody runs.

DRAMA

The Peep-Show is Doomed

Faragoh, author of "Pinwheel," wants more life, less black magic in theatre

Francis Edwards Faragoh was born in Hungary and came to the United States when he was 14. He has written many short stories and reviewed plays for Pearson's under the editorship of Frank Harris. His play "Pinwheel" at the Neighborhood Playhouse is a dynamic sketch of New York "in which New York plays all the parts." Mr. Faragoh is one of the five directors of the New Playwrights Theatre on 52nd street.

By FRANCIS EDWARDS FARAGOH.

THIS, which they tell you is theatre, is old. Too old. Old theatre for old people. You don't belong in it, and it does not belong to you.

Perhaps it is dead. Possibly it died so long ago that all memory of its death has passed out of our minds—and the mummy is being taken for the real thing. The stinking corpse is always being dressed in new clothes and palmed off on you for your nickels or dimes.

Let's forget about it! After all, it is nothing but a stage, a painted platform with painted dummies moving on it. What have we—you and I, who are one—got to do with with something that is not ours, not of us, not because of us?

The new theatre is coming. Help us build it. We don't know what it will look like, what it will sound like, we have not yet found the voice for it. But we know that this theatre is going to be young and virile and mighty and life.

The peep-show, portraying with delicate movement and hushed sound the lives of people whose lives are never important, is going. That stingy little space which they say is the stage, is disappearing. No more curtains. No more tricks. No more black magic. No more incense and lecherous music.

Of course we need new plays as well. And new actors. Above all, new audiences. Although even the word "audience" is wrong. The new theatre must unite all of us. You, the audience, shall act the parts.

And this theatre demands writers who are able to give voice to multitudes, who are able to show not puny individuals but masses, who will work not through your intellect but through the emotions. Writers who are not artists but workers—they are the ones we need. Poets who are not commentators but participants.

Let's clean out the theatre. We don't want paper drawing-rooms, we don't want gilded altars, nor velvet curtains, nor the false-face of phantasy.

The new theatre must not merely show and explain, but do. The real thing must come to the stage and the counterfeit must go—which means that you'll have to stand up and play your own life for us—and let us play it with you.

And bring your machines into the theatre. Your hammers and electric wires—every pulsation, rhythm, hunger, color and sound of your work. When you get into the theatre, raise your voice. Don't come on tiptoes, don't whisper, don't feel that you're a guest. Hell—the place is yours. You are expected to do the work. Let's hear you sing! The theatre is not a temple, not a lecture-room, not the rich man's parlor. The man who "wrote" the "play" is not a divine genius, unerring and sacred and divinely inspired. The actors are just so many dummies. Why are you so timid, then? Why so awed in the presence of your brothers, who should remain your brothers even on the other side of the footlights?

Come to the playhouse and bring your own theatre with you! Act your own play! Speak your own words! Join in the singing—that's the only way you'll ever have theatre!

BROADWAY BRIEFS

Charles Hopkins has no less than four plays that he expects to produce next season. The most important on the list is by A. A. Milne, well remembered for his "The Dover Road," and called "The Ivory Door." The other plays listed are: "A Hen Upon a Steeple" by a young Englishwoman, Joan Temple; "Man-Factory," by Daniel L. James and "Maid Errant," by Robert Housum.

Maurice Schwartz is now rehearsing at the Yiddish Art Theatre a new play called "Human Dust," described as "un expressionistic comedy founded on the jazz era." Ossip Dymow, the author of "The Bronx Express," is responsible for the opus.

SATURDAY, MARCH 12, 1927 — ALEX BITTELMAN, Editor

Charles E. Ruthenberg

By ALEX BITTELMAN

AS time passes on, and as the American working class acquires more class consciousness and revolutionary spirit, the life and experiences of Ruthenberg, founder and foremost leader of our party, will become in ever increasing measure an organic and vital part of the life and struggles of the American working class. For Ruthenberg stood for a great ideal. He symbolized the aspirations of the oppressed and exploited the world over. He was leader in the struggles of the workers against capitalism. He was builder of a party which is destined to lead the working class to victory.

The loss sustained by our party and the labor movement generally is great indeed. The dynamic power of his personality, his prestige, the long years of his experience as leader and organizer of workers' struggles—these constituted tremendous assets for our party and our movement. Revolutionary leaders of his type and strength were never needed more badly than now. But Ruthenberg is gone and out went of our midst one of our best, most valuable and indispensable comrades. We shall feel the loss for a long, long time.

Ruthenberg was a Bolshevik. He was a true disciple and follower of the principles of Leninism. He was the pioneer in the United States of the cause of the proletarian revolution and international Communism. His opposition to capitalism was uncompromising, militant and courageous. Every bit of it loved and respected by large masses of workers.

His stand against the late imperialist war and the lead he took in the anti-war struggles of the masses will forever remain a source of inspiration for revolutionists and enemies of capitalism the world over. In the midst of war hysteria and asphyxiating capitalist propaganda; despite the regime of naked terror instituted by the "democracy" loving Wilson administration; deserted by most of the official leaders of the socialist party and of the trade unions who had openly or secretly gone over to the capitalists, Ruthenberg, like the true proletarian fighter that he was, bravely raised the banner of active opposition to the imperialist war rallying the working masses for struggle against it.

At this time, particularly, when American imperialism is running mad with its victories, when American military forces are steadily crushing the national independence of the peoples of South and Central America, the Caribbean, China, etc., when the danger of a new world war is being made increasingly inevitable by the imperialist rivalries of the capitalist power—at this time more than ever are Ruthenberg's experiences as leadar in the struggle against imperialist wars a lesson and inspiration to the oppressed and exploited.

him was in the fight against the enemies of the working class. And for this he was hated and persecuted by the capitalists and their government;

True, consistent and genuine working class internationalism were the very essence of Ruthenberg's life and struggles. In the United States, where the working class is composed of so many nationalities, languages and colors; where divisions of birth, background and training are so varied and run in so many directions; where the capitalist class persistently cultivates and artificially inflames these divisions and prejudices within the working class—it is in this country that Ruthenberg's life and struggles became symbolic of the so much needed unity of the American working class, Unity between the foreign born and native. Unity between white and Negro. Unity of all workers, regardless of race, color or place of birth, against their class enemy—the capitalists!

One of the greatest contributions of Comrade Ruthenberg to the revolutionary struggles of the working class was his masterly exposure and unrelenting attack against the sham and hypocrisy of American democracy. Applying the theory and method of Marxism-Leninism to the present phase in the development of American capitalism, Ruthenberg was able to penetrate into the most hidden corners of the governmental machinery or the raptalist rlass, demonstrate to the masses the real nature of this machinery as the organ of power by which the capitalist class holds in subjection the overwhelming majority of the population in this country—the workers and poor farmers. Ilia flaming hatred of this capitalist government knew no bounds.

His was the rlarion call to the workers and poor farmers of America to organize and wage a political struggle against this government. His was the consistent advocacy of the burning need of independent political artion of the Amerlran working class as a class through the formation of a Labor Party. His was the untiring effort for the crystallization of an alliance between the workers and farmers for a common political struggle against the exploiters of the toiling masses and for the establishment of a Workers' and Farmers' government in the United States.

Ruthenberg was a proletarian revolutionist. He was a firm believer in the inevitability of the social revolution in America and in the victory of the working class. For the achievement of this goal he had given his whole self. Without break or interruption, except when confined to jail by the enemies of the workers, without wavering or hesitation, optimistic, courageous, determined and with solid faith in the working class, Ruthenberg proceeded along ever forward, educating, organizing and mobilizing the masses for the victory of the revolution and the establishment of Communism.

He was one of the first to raise the banner of the Communist International in the United States. This banner he held aloft till the last day of his life. All his force and power and ability, all his energy and leadership were devoted towards rallying the masses to the banner and struggles of the Communist International.

His road to Communism and to the leading ranks of the general staff of the world revolution—the Communist International—was the road of persistent struggle in the socialist party of America against opportunism and petty-bourgeois reformism and for revolutionary socialism and proletarian struggle. Like the revolutionary Marxian that he was, he combatted mercilessly the influences of Bergerism and Hillquitism, influences which were pushing the socialist party of America away from class struggle and toward class collaboration. He was struggling steadfastly to maintain the socialist party as a working class party. And in 1919, when the right wing initiated the campaign of wholesale expulsions from the party of the revolutionary left wing elements, and when the open betrayal by this right wing of the most basic interests of the working class made no longer possible the existence in one party of the left and right wings, Comrade Ruthenberg led the way to the organizational solidification of the left wing and the formation of the Communist Party.

His ideological affinity to the revolutionary Marxian elments of the world socialist movement was nearly always close and intimate. It is for this reason that he was one of the very few in the United States who were quick to realize the meaning of the Bolshevist revolution in Rusala and its significance for the labor movement of the world. With boundless energy he proceeded to rally the revolutionary workers of America to the support of the

A Sailor Drifts in Red Russia

By T. H. M.

Sunday, August 8.

We arrived in Leningrad last night. Everywhere around us in the port we see the work of reconstruction and socialist construction going apace. Huge new warehouses and other buildings are to be seen on both banks of the river. This morning a fellow came aboard to invite us to the International Seamen's Club. We were doubtful about the invitation owing to our previous knowledge of Seamen's Missions in other countries where we are handed an alleged "coffee and" after prayers. But as he proved to be an ex-wobbly who had been deported from the "land of the free" to the Land of the Free, we accepted.

We found the club, once the palatial residence of a Tsarist officer, to be a place where we could learn how to organize, and where we could gain the knowledge that is the weapon of workers in their fight for emancipation. A large bunch of seamen were gathered there and we went on an excursion to the Peter and Paul fortress. This was formerly a prison in which many revolutionaries were incarcerated by the Tsars. It was built in the middle of the 18th century and stands on the bank of the Neva.

The prison is now in the hands of the Revolutionary Museum Committee. At the gate is posted a declaration of thanks to the people of Leningrad from the British Trade Union Delegation, 1924. We went through most of the cells. Those above ground were quite large and had electric lights. The electric lights were installed because when the Tsar's prisoners had kerosene lamps the prisoners would soak their beds with the oil, burn the bed and then coat themselves on the flames, and so put themselves out of their misery.

In one dark cell the last three occupants had spent 28, 27 and 26 years respectively.

After going through the prison we went to the Field of Wars. Here lie the martyrs of the March Revolution. A thousand Red Guards lying in their red coffins. Surrounding the graves is a circular wall in four segments. This wall is made from the the blocks of marble which formerly made the wall around the winter palace. From here we went to the Alexander II Memorial Church. This is one of the most beautiful buildings imaginable, being built in colored mosaic. The church is built on the spot where Alexander was killed by revolutionaries in 1881. Poor Alex never had a chance. Twenty-five of the boys were lined up with bombs but only two were used.

From here we went to the Kazanski Cathedral. This is a splendid building in the Nevsky Prospect and is built after the style of the church of Corinth. We went inside. The priests and other officials were armed as about fifty seamen of different nationalities hopped in.

Monday, August 9.

Decided this morning that this country is too interesting to miss seeing. I'll take a holiday and if possible go to Moscow. Made inquiries and was told that as a foreigner I would need a police permit. Trotted up to the police office dragging an interpreter with me. They were very polite, they couldn't give me a pass today, would I come back on Wednesday. So I wandered around sightseeing Leningrad, Red Petrograd of 1917 is full of interest to the foreign worker who is class conscious. One can almost visualize the Red Guards on the streets, armed, untrained, but burning with revolutionary enthusiasm. Leningrad appears to be a city of churches. Religion still has a strong grip on many of these people. Everytime some of the fanatics pass a church they cross themselves (see, king, queens, jack, prayer fashion) and mutter a little prayer. Wandered down the famous Nevski Prospect (now October Street) full of stores displaying their goods. One can be amused at the puny efforts of the Nepmen trying to compete with the powerful Co-operatives. Drifted into Palace Square. In front of me was the Winter Palace. It was here, in 1905, that the workers were shot down in hundreds when they were led by the agent-provocateur priest Gapon.

The palace is a magnificent building, the walls of which are still spattered with bullet holes. The palace is being renovated so I couldn't get inside. Walked around to the banks of the Neva, and saw the Palace Bridge. Here was where the revolution started. As the workers came pouring over this bridge, going to the palace, the police and soldiers opened fire. A minister, looking out of a palace window said, "There goes the Russian Revolution—and it will be crushed in fifteen minutes." That was in 1917. The workers are still pouring over the bridge, on their way to enjoy themselves in the cafes and theatres, and the revolution has not been crushed. West back to October Street and into the Bar Cafe. This is a huge restaurant and contains three orchestras, plenty of beer, and many pretty girls.

Tuesday, August 10.

According to the English newspapers there is a revolt here against the Soviet. They say that in Leningrad there is street fighting, thousands of arrests made, and Smolny is in the hands of the rebels. These English newspaper people must have wonderful eyesights (or imaginations). We are right here on the spot and have not seen or heard anything. The "rebels" must be fine [illegible]

Wandering around the town all day. There seems to be an epidemic of renovation in Leningrad. Most of the streets are being repaired and most of the building are having a birthday. Everywhere the scars of the revolution are being obliterated. Went into the Kommomoles (Y. C. L.) Club. This building was once a huge cafe and cabaret. Now it is used for the education and pleasure of the young workers, every facility being provided. In the library are thousands of books and the slogan, "We must be 100 per cent students." Went through the various rooms. One room is used for the study of science, another for aviation, another for agriculture and so on.

Wednesday, August 11.

To the police office this morning. They were still very polite, would I come back on Friday for the permit. This was no use to me, I determined to go without a permit and chance it. Went down to the October Station. In front of the station is October Square. In the middle of the square stands a colossal monument of Alexander III. Cut in the base of this monument is the following:

SCARECROW

My son and father have met their fate
But I who have deserved immortal dog nor Am here as a cast iron scarecrow
To remind the people of absolute monarchy.

Caught the 9.50 p. m. train for Moscow. No one pulled me up for a pass or permit. One can travel as free as in England or the U. S. In the same carriage was part of a German delegation. As soon as the train started I lay down in my berth so that no one will try to talk to me and ask awkward questions.

Thursday, August 12.

"Moscow!" As the word went around the carriage everyone clamored to get to the windows and view the distant city. Very little could be seen however, except the golden domes of many churches. As the train rattled along the last few miles every one got busy packing. I only had a clean handkerchief so that didn't take me long. Arrived in Moscow 9.20 a. m. Gave my ticket up at the barrier and got clear through. Mentally I shook hands with myself and said, "Bo, you're in a free country. Passes are non est." I stood on the steps of the station and looked across the square, wondering which way to go.

I pictured the map of Europe in my mind and then got a bit scared. Here I was in the heart of Red Russia and I didn't know enough of the language to ask for the train back. One of our fellows had written me an address of his brother here but I didn't want to use it. Wandered around for a while, but didn't seem to get anywhere. Hopped on a drosky and went to this address. At the house I was saved. There was a fellow there who could speak a little English. After telling my pathetic little story we had dinner and I was taken out to see the sights.

The Boulevards were bright with lovely flower gardens, most of the big buildings were covered with scaffolding. Over 400 new buildings are being erected. Went through Petrovsko into Sverdlov Square. At one end, in front of the Opera House, is a large mound of earth in which are growing flowers. The plants have been placed so that they show the head of Dzerjinsky who died a fortnight ago. The huge open house is hidden behind a shield of scaffolding. We crossed over into Revolution Square and into Red Square.

On our right was the inner wall of the Kremlin. Ahead was the tomb of Lenin, and further behind was the fantastic church of Vasili Blazhenny. Along this wall of the Kremlin is the Brotherhood Grave where 400 Red Guards were buried. Here also is the grave of John Reed, marked by a block of stone, rough and unfinished. The tomb of Lenin stands in the middle of Red Square. Soldiers stand guard over the comrade who led them along the path of freedom. At the back of this tomb is the grave of Dzerjinsky. One can only look at these graves and surrender to what one feels. It has roused me and it makes one determined to carry on the life work of these comrades who have gone. Went back through the arcades full of splendid shops. In the evening walked through the boulevards which were crowded with workers enjoying an evening stroll.

Friday, August 13.

This afternoon went to the Moscow River. Passed the Church of Jesus, a magnificent building from the outside. A priest wouldn't let us inside for a look around. Near the church is a mausoleum where one of the Tsars was buried. The caravan has been taken out and it is to be made into a revolutionary monument. From the river one gets a splendid vista of all the big buildings. The white building of the Comintern and the churches in the Kremlin. Away in the distance the golden domes of many churches can be seen gleaming in the sun. There are over 700 large churches in Moscow. Walked through the Alexander Park. Here is an obelisk with the names of all the great revolutionaries from Marx to Plekhanov. Then to October Square. Here is the former palace of the governor-general is the office of the Moscow Soviet. In the centre of the square is the October Monument erected in memory of the Red Guards. At the other end of the square a large technical institute is being built. In the evening we went to see the revolutionary film "Potemkin." It's a great film. After I had seen it I hated to fight the world.

Saturday, August 14.

Taking the last look around today. Into the Red Square by the Iberian Gate. At this gate is the small church of the Iberian Virgin (whoever she was). At the entrance to the gate are these words:

"Religion is the Opium of the People."

Nearby was a queue of the dope fiends waiting their turn to be blessed by some hairy priest. Passed the Brotherhood Grave and Lenin's tomb, atheists all, and into the church of Vasili Blazhenny, now a museum. This fantastic old church was built in 1554-60 at the order of Ivan the Terrible after his victory over the Tartars. When it was finished Ivan put the architect's eyes out. The church is just a bundle of cupolas. Every inch of the walls inside have been painted. One can imagine the archbishop like a Nosun) lining the priests up one morning and giving each a pot of paint and a brush and saying "Go on boys, whip it on." And apparently the boys did so. They have painted Mary and Jesus and baskets of fruit and themselves everywhere until there wasn't an inch to spare. In the afternoon through Ekaterina Park, the scene of some desperate fighting in 1917, and to the Soviet Employes Club. Tomorrow is a big sports day and all the members were in the ground. Football, basket ball, cycling, running, swimming—the whole show full of energy and anxious to expend it. They looked a fine healthy crowd. At 11.15 p. m. I hopped on the rattler and retreated from Moscow.

Sunday, August 15

Arrived in Leningrad 11.30 a. m. Marching down the Nevsky was a demonstration of the Y. C. L. in their sports outfits. Went aboard and told the boys all about it. In the afternoon went on an excursion from the club to the Hermitage Art Gallery of the Winter Palace. Here is a wonderful collection of old and valuable art treasures, their value being lost to the 50 odd Philistines of the Fascists who would only stand enraptured before pictures of naked females. This wonderful collection of various forms of art was once the exclusive property of the Tsar and his little playmates. Now it is the inclusive property of the Revolution. Workers of the Soviet Union. This evening I coop my money and then searched the stores to buy green turban. I've been to Mecca. Tomorrow I back to work.

AMERICA

DAVID GORDAN

America is a land of censored opportunity
Lick spit; eat dirt.
There's your opportunity;
Then you become a big man of business.
And people take off their hats
To you.
Because you're a great man;
A man
Who robs other men by licking spit and eating dirt
The land is lined with mountains of gold.
But we who need
Can't even get a chip of it.
The damned gold taunts us
Because
We always see it shining before us
(We polish it).
But we know we're prevented from taking it
America's too goddam big.
And you can't have a friend here.
Of course
It's because the lousy place is just a huge city with too many bugs of people crawling in it:
America!
Holy Christ! You feel lonely in America.
America [illegible]
Wrecks a cock-eyed laugh at New York harbor.
Statue of Liberty: Strong satire
On the real America.
Too much noise,
America—
Hot air
From your state and national legislators
You just stink up the atmosphere.
Hell,
America,
You can't be liked, spreading hot-air stink
You're everything, aren't you, America
Of course,
You're even a neat whore house
Standing on the sidewalk of the world
Two dollars a woman:
Nice bed
Warm room,
But most important:
A fleshy woman
To make you feel you're giving away your life water
For a healthy bastard.
Why not?

DRAMA

Humanity Cannot Accept Absolute Truth, Says Pirandello

JOSEPHINE HUTCHINSON

Has the principal role in the Civic Repertory production, "Inheritors," at the 14th Street Theatre.

THE recent visit of Luigi Pirandello and his company to Budapest did not turn out as successful as expected. The players drew only moderate audiences to the City Theatre. Following the last performance Pirandello announced his willingness to answer any questions put to him by members of the audience, and when asked to explain the inner meaning of his play, "Clothing the Naked," exhibited his powers as a "conférencier" for over half an hour, while he developed the theme that humanity cannot accept absolute truth, for the simple reason that acceptance of truth would mean the cessation of life as we know it; for life can only be lived through the adaption of truth to the needs of the individual.

At present Pirandello is at work upon five new plays, and is allowing a need to mature in his mind.

Film Entitled "Lenin" On Screen, All Nations Church, Sat., March 26

A motion picture entitled "Lenin" will be shown Saturday, March 26 in the auditorium of the Church of All Nations, First Street and Second Avenue. On the same program will be the original version of "Michael Strogoff," by the celebrated French author, Jules Verne. Jacob P. Adler, the late dean of Jewish actors portrays the title role in this motion picture.

Lenin's complete life and various incidents during the prime of his career are well depicted, showing the actual scenes of the great Comrade before, during and after the October Revolution, right up to the time of his death.

In addition there will be a popular Russian balalaika orchestra, and a comedy.

Admission will be 30 cents for the afternoon and 40 cents for the evening. Performances will be continuous, from 1 till 11.

BROADWAY BRIEFS

The Shuberts sent out a notice of a $1,800 prize contest yesterday. Cash awards aggregating that sum will be paid to the authors of the best three revue sketches, of from three to fifteen minutes duration, submitted to the Shubert office before May 15.

The judges who will select the winners are William A. Brady, J. Lawrence Weber and Bide Dudley. The first prize is $1,000, the second $500 and the third $200. From the manuscript selected the producers reserve the right to purchase as many sketches as they regard available for $100 apiece.

Francine Larrimore, star of "Chicago," at the Music Box Theatre, will appear in the annual benefit of the Theatrical Press Representatives of American to be held Sunday evening. Miss Larrimore will be seen in an original skit written by Wells Hawkes.

Donald Meek and Aline MacMahon are late additions to the cast of "Spread Eagle," the new melodrama by George S. Brooks and Walter B. Lister, which Jed Harris has put into rehearsal and which is scheduled for opening here April 4. Hitherto in the cast are Fritz Williams, Osgood Perkins, Felix Krembs and Malcolm Duncan.

"Savages Under the Skin," a play by Harry L. Foster and Wyman Proctor, is announced to open at the Greenwich Village Theatre on March 21.

THE WORKERS AND BOSSES
By BRUCE EWANA.

I'll bet the boss
Is afraid of him now,
Because soon he will
Beat the plow.

2.

But the workers will arise
And pound him till he's flat
He thinks he is the whole cheese
The great big democrat.

3.

The boss knows it is outrageous
He says he will rob us for ages,
And not give us any wages,
For he is trying it now.

4.

When the workers get their wages,
And it won't be outrageous
The boss will wait to rob us for ages more
Just as he did before.

FUNNY

WHO GOT THE JOB?—By L. STANKUS

It was a very cold morning. Two friend workers set off for work. Suddenly they came to a place where they needed only one man. Pat and Mike started to quarrel. Both of them wanted a job. The boss said that whoever jumped over a mountain would get a job. Both jumped the mountain. Who got the job? The UNDERTAKER got the job because when Pat and Mike jumped the mountain both got killed.

PUZZLE

The answer to last week's puzzle No. 4 is UNION. The organization all workers should join to fight against the bosses together and win victory.

The following have answered correctly:

Lillian Cohen, New York City; Rebecca Resnick, New York City; Vera Rosinsky, New York City; William Gershick, New York City; Lulu Morris, New York City; William Krondrat, New York City; Michael Nichiporuk, Endicott, N. OUR PENNSYLVANIA REPORTER

YES! WE'LL FIGHT THE BOSSES.

Dear Comrades: Here is some news of what happened in the No. 1 mine of the Ocean Coal Company in Hornside, Pa. One afternoon a father and his son of 16 years finished the work they were doing and wanted to go home. But they saw that the gage elevator was loaded with coal so they started to walk up the air shaft steps which are 360 feet high. All of a sudden when they were 150 feet up, they were surrounded by deadly gas, and both were choked to death. Whose fault is it that these two workers died? It was the fault of the company. The company cares more for its mules than for its workers because the mules cost money and the workers don't. We must fight against bosses and companies that kill workers and we'll soon have the workers of Soviet Russia won their fight. Long live the workers revolution of the United States!

Your Comrade,
BILLY TAPOLCSANJ.

YOUNG COMRADE CORNER
PIONEERS WILL CARRY ON.

Comrade Ruthenberg's death is a great blow to the American working class. The children of the American working class realize that Comrade Ruthenberg was one of their best fighters.

Comrade Ruthenberg's life as a leader of the working class and of the American Workers (Communist) Party and his sacrifices and endless devotion to the working class will serve as an inspiration to the Young Pioneers of America (the children's section of the Communist movement) to carry on the work of our dear comrade and leader, until we have realized that for which he was bravely fighting.

We, the Young Pioneers of America, pledge ourselves to be ALWAYS READY to fight as children for the emancipation of our class.

YOUNG PIONEERS OF AMERICA.

THE LITTLE GREY DOG
From Fairy Tales for Workers' Children.

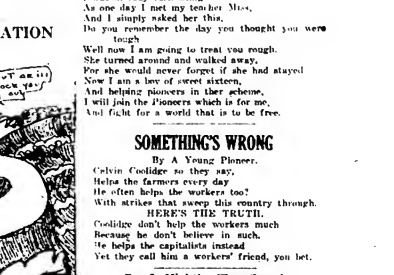
He considered for a moment, then cried happily, "Now I know, Hannah is just the right one for you. How could I forget her? Of course, she has a little boy. . . ."

"I don't want him," the daughter interrupted. "My dear little son must not play with a dirty Negro child. You can keep Hannah's son here."

"You are a good mother, my beloved child," said the rich man, moved. "You always think of your son. Good, Benjamin shall remain here and when you go back to the city tomorrow, I will give you Hannah to take along. I will immediately tell the overseer, so that he may tell her to be ready."



And the rich man called a servant and bade him bring the overseer.

Ah, what a sad night that was in the little hut of the Negroes. Poor Hannah hugged her little son close in her arms and cried as though her heart would break. Her husband Tom gazed at her with worried eyes and was so miserable that he could not say a word. Hannah kept looking anxiously toward the little window, trembling with the fear of seeing the first ray of light that meant that day was near, when she would leave her loved ones.

The little grey dog seemed to understand the grief of his friends, he nestled quite close to Hannah's coat, looking up at them with loving, clever eyes. Then Hannah cried loudly, "If they sell you, too, Tom, what will become of our poor child?" The little dog laid his paw on little Benjamin as though to say, "Don't fear, poor mother, I will take care of him."

(To be continued.)

THE CHINESE SITUATION

WE MOURN OUR LOSS
IRVING SHAVELSON.

On March 2, 1927, the working class of America lost one of its best friends, Comrade Ruthenberg, the fearless fighter for the working class. Comrade Ruthenberg gave his life like Lenin, Liebknecht, Gene Debs, while fighting for the working class. When the socialists misled and betrayed the working class, Comrade Ruthenberg was one of the first to point it out. He was one of the first to organize the Workers (Communist) Party, the only party that fights for the freedom of the working class in America. He was the National Secretary of the Party.

Because Comrade Ruthenberg was active in organizing the workers to fight against the bosses for more wages and better conditions in the shops, mines and fields the bosses arrested him and sent him to prison. When Comrade Ruthenberg came out of jail he continued the fight against the bosses. His aim was to establish a Workers' and Farmers' government in the United States. Comrade Ruthenberg's last words were that all workers should help build a strong Workers Party in the United States.

Comrade Ruthenberg, we the children of the working class miss you, and we promise to carry on the fight where you left it. You told us to build a strong Workers Party before you died. Well, we will start to do this by joining the Young Pioneers and building a strong Pioneer League.

OUR HERO
MAX KARP.

Let us pause to mourn,
For with the coming of the dawn
A COMMUNIST LEADER has died
Who fought for the workers, and the capitalists defied.

2.

His life did he lend
His life did he spend
For the workers' cause
Therefore we mourn Comrade Ruthenberg's loss.

3.

Till the last did he fight
For the workers and their right
And before he did die
FIGHT ON was his cry.

4.

We will carry on his work in fields and factories
On the ocean, the lands and on the seas
The work that he has begun
Will by all of us be done.

OUR LETTER BOX
THAT'S THE SPIRIT.

Dear Comrade: I bought a picture button of Lenin in Warren, Ohio. The next day I went to school. The teacher told me to take it off. I told him not until the boys will take the boy scout badges off. He sent me to the office where the principal took it from me and was going to throw it out the window. I said, "Listen here, I paid for that and if you want it 50 cents will pay for it. He gave me the money. The next day I bought another one from our neighbor. I am wearing it every day, he does not say a thing. Now he is wearing the one he bought from me.—MICHAEL BARTIC

POEM OF SCHOOL DAYS
ALFRED KASPER.

When I was going to public school,
My father said I was a fool,
And at the age of thirteen,
I was already cultivating
As one day I met my teacher Miss,
And I simply asked her this,
Do you remember the day you thought you were tough
Well now I am going to treat you rough.
She turned around and walked away,
For she would never forget if she had stayed
Now I am a boy of sweet sixteen,
And helping pioneers in their scheme,
I will join the Pioneers which is for me,
And fight for a world that is to be free.

SOMETHING'S WRONG
By A Young Pioneer.

Calvin Coolidge so they say,
Helps the farmers every day
He often helps the workers too?
With strikes that sweep this country through.

HERE'S THE TRUTH.

Coolidge don't help the workers much
Because he don't believe in such.
He helps the capitalists instead
Yet they call him a workers' friend, you bet.

Pen Is Mightier Than Sword.

Dear Comrade: Mr. Dumond of the Grand Rapids Museum told us in a lecture that the pen is mightier than the sword. This is very true as all workers must know. Workers should write and be a worker correspondent and the Young Pioneers should also write. ABRAHAM BARKEN.

The Gong Struck Three

By ALEX JACKINSON

DAVIE was almost eleven years old. He was rather small for his age and lived in a world of adolescent fancy. His region did not extend very far. He liked his father, his mother too, but his father a little more, especially when he unfolded a thing and let Davie light it for him.

Davie was happy. He read Dickens, rode his bicycle, and drew crayon pictures. He was exceedingly glad when busy drawing, then curious ideas would form in his head which he later tried to depict upon paper. Davie aspired to be an artist. His teacher he was also fond of, especially when she showed his creations to other teachers.

Suddenly the pillars of his imaginary world collapsed and left him groveling in the dark ruins of childish impressions. This happened when his father, one of the fourteen striking cloakmakers, was sentenced by Judge Rosalsky to serve from two and a half to five years in prison. The unheard of cruelty of the sentences evoked strong protests from the entire labor movement. Davie was in the courtroom when his father was found guilty, but did not realize the seriousness of the situation until he reached home. The court room fascinated him greatly. His eyes dilated about the large room, first resting upon the judge and then shifted to other localities. He enjoyed listening to the lawyers plead before the bar. The whole situation pleased him, if only his father weren't there, he would have been happy.

It was at first difficult for him to grow accustomed to the new conditions. Home seemed minus something he couldn't live without. Whenever the door bell rang, Davie ran to the door, expecting to see his father enter. His disappointment showed itself in many ways. He no longer had the same desire to play, or draw pictures. Instead he listened to his mother explain the fundamentals of the class struggle of which his father was another victim. Some things Dave readily understood, on other points he pressed her for more information. She told him of other men who have made sacrifices for the cause, and Davie listened. Soon he was no longer ashamed of having his father in prison. This new found information toppled over his entire social structure. New visions opened before him. He began dreaming of some day being a great labor leader. Visionary expectations of becoming like Lenin whose picture hung on the wall occupied his attention. It was pleasant day dreaming to have such thoughts.

One of the things that puzzled him was the word "intimidation," of which his father was accused. He looked it up in the dictionary, "to frighten" was the answer he received. This explanation rendered him still more. A precocious intuition informed him that his father was innocent. He felt certain of it, and began hating society for taking away his father.

Last week Davie, along with his mother and uncle, payed his father a visit. And today he sat in his classroom trying to concentrate on his lessons. Somehow the drab prison and his father living in it kept circling around in his thoughts. In his dream version he pieced together the many events differently, sometimes adding things which never occurred and at other times he racked his head trying to recall some incident which he had forgotten.

First walked the prison guard. That Davie remembered, but he couldn't recall whether he was tall or short, having taken no particular notice of him. All that impressed him was that his face seemed unfriendly and that in his right hand shook a chain of keys. Behind him came Uncle Mednick holding on to his hat as though he were afraid of losing it. His bare head was slightly bowed and his right arm interlocked with that of Davie's mother, stepping beside him. Davie followed them several paces away.

He once more pictured the grey clad guard leading them through a wide corridor lined on both sides by rows of cells. It was the first time that he saw the interior of a prison and the direct contrast with a thing that was hitherto something mysterious completely overwhelmed him. Davie felt ill at ease and seemed to frighten when his eyes discerned faces behind the bars. He hurredly shifted his gaze elsewhere and continued walking, feeling as though he were treading upon a forbidden path.

Before long he remembered seeing the guide pause in front of a cell and insert one of the keys into a large lock. Davie heard a familiar voice call "Sonia." It was his mother's name and he turned around to see her step through the open door. Davie remembered gasping, "Its papa." Then he felt his father's lips press warmly to his cheeks. The sight of him, dressed in the regulation prison uniform horrified him, but only for an instant. He smiled sheepishly and replied, "I'm all right," in reply to his father's, "How do you feel, Dave?" The rest of the conversation which he had no inclination to join was carried on in Jewish. He sat on a corner of the cot and listened attentively, sometimes missing words which he later tried to fit into sentences. It was a distressing moment for Davie, one which he was destined to remember. Somehow he was glad when the allotted interview was over, and they once more boarded a train to the city.

This wasn't the first time he thought of it, nor the second. The same episodes returned constantly. Sometimes they crept into his thoughts while he was in the midst of a lesson. At such times he would completely forget what he was doing. Then the teacher would catch his gaze and call him to task for not paying attention. Always the eyes of his classmates would focus upon him like so many piercing searchlights. Davie would feel uneasy for their eyes unwillingly betrayed—"Your father's in prison! Your father's in prison!" Davie would then lower his eyelids and re-direct his attention to his books. He felt conscious of something he couldn't define and it distressed him greatly.

Even his dreams were not immune from that odious vision which was with him constantly. He once dreamt of seeing the judge who sentenced his father dressed like a hangman he read about in a fairy tale. And he, Davie, was the prison guard who led his father to the scaffold. The faces assumed grotesque proportions in his dream. His own body grew to a gigantic size, overtopping both executioner and prisoner. Davie squirmed deliriously under his bed coverings, and when morning came he pieced together the emotions he experienced during his sleep. The gruesome nightmare haunted him for many days.

It was now two-thirty. Davie shuffled about on his seat, waiting anxiously for the remaining half hour to elapse. He had a new drawing he intended to show his teacher. It was a prison scene. He wanted to tell her that he was there and the circumstances of his father's imprisonment. He knew she would understand, and sympathize with him. After that he would once more be out on the street, life wanted to be out of doors, there the freedom was greater. It afforded him an opportunity to escape when people molested him, but in the classroom he felt as though he were chained onto the stake of an undesired doom.

At times the more mischievous of his playmates would gossip about him and maliciously inquire, "Where's your father, Dave?" Davie had no answer for them. He detected the innuendo hidden in those remarks. It was maddening to him. His little fists clenched as he stood in the midst of his heartless tormentors. Defiantly he would reply "none of your business" and walk away. Sometimes he had to engage in a fist fight before he was freed.

Davie glanced at his watch. It was almost time for the gong to ring. It was near the first of the month, and the teacher began to collect report-cards. Nodses were called, a "5" in response pupils arose and brought the naked for object to her desk. Davie paid no attention to what was going on. There was something else, something more important preying on his mind. A stern "David" brought him out of his reverie. It was his teacher calling him. His eyelids lifted. For a few seconds he stared blankly at her before he collected his thoughts. "Bring me your report-card," she demanded. Davie withdrew an envelope from one of his books and placed it on her desk. Returning to his seat he again opened his geography book and made an effort to read.

When the teacher collected all the cards she began scanning them for their signatures. After looking through a number of them, Davie again heard her call his name. He arose. "Who signed this report-card," she asked. Davie blushed slightly, "My mother," he replied. "Why didn't your father sign it," she pressed on. Davie grew embarrassed. The question came like a bolt from the skies. He shuffled from foot to foot. "He couldn't," he finally gasped. "Why couldn't he?" Davie saw black shadows dance before his eyes. "He's not home," he finally blurted out, not knowing what else to say. He felt conscious that all eyes were trained upon him. It added to his embarrassment.

The teacher had read in the papers about his father, but purposely wanted to use him as an example in a lesson on Americanism. "Where is he," she inquired. Davie was overpowered by confusion. He had no answer for her. What could he say before hostile faces? Besides they wouldn't understand anyhow. Yet he wanted to rebel against a pressing weight that was tormenting him. Sentences of defiance formed in his head but remained unuttered. He felt as though his mouth was tightly glued together.

"Teacher," cried one of the pupils raising his hand, "I know where Davie's father is. He's in prison." The words "he's in prison" had a strange echo for Davie. He grew red and angry. What right had they to speak of his father like that, anyhow? "I'll get him after school," flashed through his thoughts. There was a hush in the large room. David felt this world roll from under him. Giggles of other pupils added to his discomfiture. He was still standing.

"Sit down," she ordered. Then clearing her throat, his tortarer continued, "David, your father is in prison because he was not a good citizen. Honest people are never put in prison," she thundered. "He was a striker and it served him right.' Let this be a lesson to you boys when you grow up.

David resumed his seat, inwardly shaking with rage. A bitter smile flickered across his lips. He interrupted her by saying, "My father was a worker," and received a rebuke for his impudency.

"He was a Communist," she flung at him as though that in itself constituted a crime. Davie accepted her challenge. "I'm going to be one too, when I grow up," he shouted back. It took all his courage to say that, but he was glad he did. That compensated him for the humiliation he had to endure. "That's enough from you or I'll call you to the principal." Color mounted to her face. She was still scolding him when the awaited gong finally struck three. Davie breathed a sigh of relief and filed out of the room with the other pupils. When he reached the street he withdrew his drawing and tore it to bits.

The cartoonist got the idea of the failure of the peace conference but did not see, perhaps, that Uncle Sam made that door just for the nations to walk out of, so he could build cruisers instead of arks.

Hughes, the Capitalist Legal Tool

By FRED HARRIS

CHARLES EVANS HUGHES, former governor of the state of New York, associate justice of the U. S. Supreme Court, republican candidate for president, secretary of state in the Harding cabinet, and at present senior member of a law firm, has been holding a series of lectures at Columbia University on "The Supreme Court of the United States."

To be sure, Mr. Hughes is considered an authority on the constitution and the law of the country, and yet, while he was reading his prepared manuscript, one could see the elusiveness and the dual character which the term "law" implies.

What is the law of the country? Mr. Hughes gives his own interpretation, admits however, that its application is not always satisfactory. He gave an illustration: "The law condemns a nuisance, and yet a nuisance may be a right thing in the wrong place, like a pig in a parlor."

What is the purpose of the law? According to Mr. Hughes "to protect property and to establish justice." How is this accomplished? "By the due process of the law." This last is Mr. Hughes' stock-in-trade.

It is all very simple, the judge explains. Congress makes the laws and the courts interpret them. If the people don't like the laws then let them make use of the ballot box.

Hughes congratulates the country for being fortunate enough to possess that wonderful document, the U. S. constitution. Our forefathers realized that we might get into legal entanglements and so they gave us a fundamental law of the country to guide ourselves. Nobody makes errors now and justice is given its due! He pities the unfortunate British people for not having a similar document. Truly enough, King John gave them the Magna Charta, but that manuscript is so elastic that every succeeding generation has interpreted it in a different way.

However, after showing how poorly England has provided herself with a legal superstructure, Mr. Hughes admits that jurisprudence is very confusing and that the supreme court during its existence of over a hundred years has not yet been able to define the power of congress to pass laws regulating state affairs and commerce.

Much as the use last questions are attractive the intelligence of the "bench" yet, and matters pertaining to individuals, especially radicals, the [illegible] from a police magistrate to the chief justice of the supreme court, have seen their duty clearly and have interpreted the law so that no one may escape them of vacillation. The "due process clause" is invoked and, presto, justice has been administered.

It was while discussing the freedom of speech and press that the speaker referred to the war period of 1917. Here was a very specific case. A group of radicals were obstructive the government of this country in its conduct of the war. Hence the necessity for the war time sedition bill. The objectors and obstructors were sent to jail and the country won the war. (Radicals and non-radicals will do well to keep an eye on the fact in order to know what will happen in the next war). It never occurred to Mr. Hughes to inform his audience why the "due process clause" was not used against certain statesmen and financiers who, through political intrigues and under false pretenses, maneuvered this country into a needless war which killed a hundred thousand of its citizens and crippled twice that number.

Hughes is a conservative and so his advocacy for freedom of the press is limited. He praised the wisdom of the founders of this republic to have established such freedom but also reminded his hearers that the same men had also founded the supreme court, in order that the frail and delicate sense of freedom should not suffer abuse. Which liberty becomes license it must be stopped. To prove this he quoted the Gitlow case and the supreme court decision in 1925. How, no doubt, was the proverbial pig running around in a judicial parlor. The defendant was charged with having used the freedom of the press to "advocate a policy inimical to the welfare of the people; to incite to do violence; to disturb the peace of the community," etc., etc. (a familiar boy scout) act as it became necessary to invoke the "due process clause," and Gitlow was sent to jail.

Thus speak Mr. Hughes, the lawyer, the exponent of that capitalistic monstrosity called corporation. He is a bell of the property class. Never [illegible] I seen a person who so completely personified the thing which goes by a hundred different names [illegible] justice, legality, lawfulness and so on. I whose all mean the same thing, namely, the right to accumulate private property and to do that to the extent of wage slavery.

Even these about Hughes is judicious, less [illegible] unsuitable white dress shirt, white collar and cuffs, white vest and white whiskers. His very walk, poise and bow are judiciously measured. If it is true as some people would have it, that Hughes has used this opportunity to come back into the public and be a possible candidate from this state for the 1928 presidential election then one must admit that even his entry into the political arena is from a legal standpoint unimpeachable. Well he may stand and say, "I am the law," but strip him of his law and the man collapses. He lives with, by and for the law, the capitalist law, the law of exploiters, the law of legality for corrupt diplomacy and murderous war, the law which is in harmony with the recognition of capitalist dictatorships, but which judiciously taboos a workers' dictatorship.

This law, Mr. Hughes' law, is not a means to establish equity and justice. It is the law of capitalism, the power of a few rich to impose their will and dictates upon a vast majority, who through a legal expropriation system have been made impotent, and who because of their helplessness submit to such dictates.

To permit a continuation of such exploitation legality is to dig our own grave. Laws are written by ruling classes to suppress the subject classes. As soon as the weak gain strength and overthrow their masters they then also overthrow their laws.

Two Chinese Generals

By Our Chinese Correspondent

HANKOW, January (By Mail).—The pomp and circumstance surrounding the reception of Chang Tso-Lin in Peking and his subsequent stay in that city make an interesting contrast with a similar event here in Hankow, when Chiang Kai-Shih, commander-in-chief of the Nationalist armies, arrived from Nanchang to confer with the Nationalist government officials.

In Peking, the ex-bandit chieftain from Mukden had yellow sand (an imperial symbol) strewn along the streets through which he travelled from the railway depot to his fortress-home in the West City. Soldiers lined all the streets through which his motor passed. People stood along the way and stared. They did not, however, cheer. One correspondent said Chang Tso-Lin had everything in the way of a reception—except a welcome.

In Hankow, General Chiang Kai-Shih arrived to be greeted by massed crowds numbering thousands, who cheered themselves hoarse and made all sorts of efforts in order merely to get a glimpse of the man they call "liberator." The Nationalist military chief walked through a cheering crowd lining the landing-place. He had with him his aides and a small body-guard. But there was no yellow sand on his pathway. Nor was there any need for a lane of soldiery. Chiang Kai-Shih, unlike Chang Tso-Lin, is no lover of display.

In Peking Chang Tso-Lin lived in a huge yamen, whose entrance was watched over by a company of soldiers day and night. Throughout all the many courtyards of his residence soldiers were on constant guard duty. Visitors penetrated to his private quarters only after passing the scrutiny of nearly a regiment of soldiers. This was not a method of safeguard adopted merely because he was in Peking. He is equally closely guarded when he is "at home" in Mukden.

In Hankow, the Nationalist military chieftain lived in a small modern building in what is known as the "Model District" in the Chinese city. The guard of two soldiers which had been at its entrance before he arrived remained a guard of two soldiers after he had taken up residence. Some of his personal body-guards, to be sure, were in the main reception room of the building. But the writer, who had business with another official residing in the same building, was not stopped or questioned by them. There was no atmosphere of apprehension.

In Peking the Mukden warlord ever surrounded forth from his yamen unless three motor-loads of guards accompanied his own car, which had six guards hanging on the running-board with drawn revolvers in their hands. And he ventured forth seldom.

In Hankow Chiang Kai-Shih went about in a limousine motor, with one aide inside with him and no body-guards at all. He went about every day. He found time to attend a special theatrical performance in his honor. He smiled, bowed to acquaintances, took a seat democratically in the orchestra section and alongside a minor employe of one of the government ministries. He found time to attend a few dinners given by business men. He made speeches, telling them the aims of the revolution, urging them to try hard to understand the new labor movement developing among the masses. At these functions and elsewhere—he indicated that he chose not to be called "General" or "Marshal" but plain "Mister" (Sien Sheng).

There is no "swank" about Chiang Kai-Shih, nor yet any of the medieval pomp and trappings which the old-style militarists of the north affect. Nor does he write poetry while a campaign is on. He is a man who, while not of the people in his origins, is yet for the people. In all his public utterances, in all his personal contacts, he shows that his interest is for the plain people who make up the great masses of the population of his country. It is for them that he labors over the work of his campaigns.

The streak of idealism in him makes him envisage not only a free and autonomous China, but a China whose people—the millions of laborers and peasants and small merchants—shall be happier and less harrassed in the struggle for existence, better off socially, economically and educationally. That ideal, one gathers from men who know him well, is what strengthens him in his arduous work and gives him that perseverance which has already brought him and his armies so far as the road toward the unification of China.

CHINA IN REVOLT

By EUGENE KREININ

The cradle of ancient culture
Is breaking the shell of servitude.
In its lead of the oppressed,
Towards the dawn of liberation
From the yoke of imperialism.

Imperialism—
The last attempt
Of a dying capitalism,
To hang on
To the hinges of existence . . .

And China aroused
From a slumber of ages,
Breaks the chains of domination.
And the enemy
Degenerated by delicacies—
Wrung
From the mouths of the workers,
Is fed by an awakening people.
With a reception—
Bitter in taste,
And lead in content . . .

And China opens
Its millions of almond eyes;
And the wings of imperialism
Are breaking—
In the storm
Before the advent of the new day . . .

BUILDING POEMS

I watched a building being built. They had to dig the ground quite deep for its foundation. And there was a chaos of deep digging and of laying the foundation.

Cranes and earth and rocks and trucks and stones and bricks and steel and pulleys—all I saw, and many workers at this giant task.

It took time to build the building, but finished, it was beautiful, Clear-cut, precise, without foolish ornament. All that was without use was either thrown away or made over for other use.

And I saw poems built like this. No frills, no posed ornaments, no insincere toys of sentiment, no affected exaltations—only frank as clear-cut steel, as true as finished buildings. Beautiful because they do not sham.

These are the poems of the new United States and England, of Germany and Red China and, mother of them all, of Soviet Russia.

The strength of the mighty poor are in these poems, and what they'll do. These poems herald the poor and in earnest join their fight. These are the new, the youthful offsprings of their father, the poor. They know the low, strong voice of their father and therefore sing with him in solidarity and truth.

These are the building poems, they build the skyscraping future

Letters From Our Readers

Buy Union Coal.

Editor, Daily Worker: We have given support to many labor unions by purchasing their coal; notice through the union label. Isn't there a way of putting a line on the coal dealers in New York City who are handling coal handled by unorganized labor, by knowing which dealers handle union coal, we can help the miners in their struggle. If these men can be reasoned with as through the only power of the workers, it would force it as with a means of aiding the miners.

I wish that you will give information like this to the revolutionary workers of this country. E. Beach, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Another Utopia.

Editor, Daily Worker:—When all is done by machines, the alarm-clock factories will be the first to be closed, because there will no longer be any cause for alarm.

Workers will have a leisurely breakfast at the Knights of Columbus Halls and will then march to the Ingersoll Forum where they will hear a debate on religion and discover, after one thousand nine hundred and twenty-seven years of investigation, whether or not there is a God. - Aconcagua Uutopess, New York City.

Priests and Installment Plans.

Editor, Daily Worker: Detroit has a very fine installment plan arrangement for workers who want homes. Workers, who can't save a few dollars and pay so much down for houses, because apartments won't accept workers with families, find themselves at the mercy of the sheriff in a little while.

I know of a worker, the father of several children, who having been laid off by his boss, was thrown out of his house in mid-winter. When everyone was away from the house, a constable and a few assistants dumped all of the furniture into the street, despite protests from neighbors.

Instead of voting for workers and reading a workers' paper, how-ever, workers go to church and listen to preachers who advise them to vote for capitalists and who take their money. They are so blinded by preachers that they do not know what is going on around them.

Yours for a workers' government,
Agnes Federoff, Detroit, Mich.

Conditions in Detroit.

Editor, Daily Worker:—The conditions in the auto plants of Detroit are worse than jail conditions.

I've worked in auto plants since 1912, and I've talked to a lot of other men about conditions. When I told them that in a few years the auto workers would be in slavery, I was called a dreamer. Some of them made it pretty miserable for me; now that many of them are hard pressed, they admit that I was right, that if they had kept their union cards, there would be different conditions in the auto plants today. I wonder how many of them felt when the foreman came up to me and said, "Get your tools out of here, you're a damned agitator".

I believe that if Detroit had a few Weisbords, the unions here would do some good political and industrial work.

[illegible] that The DAILY WORKER [illegible] out an auto-ite workers' paper out once a week and charge about two dollars a year subscription. That would help a great deal. Till one of these days I hope to see an auto weekly in Detroit that would fight war and the Chamber of Commerce. By the way, could we [illegible] some years by putting posts, music [illegible] capitalists in the front line trenches.—F. V. A., Detroit, Mich.

Dempsey-Tunney Frame-up.

Editor, DAILY WORKER: I read "spectator's" article in yesterday's DAILY WORKER about sure-fire sport-men and I want you to know that there is more than circumstantial evidence on the Dempsey-Tunney fight.

Tunney trained here in Summit and his trainer, Bud Gorson, told all his local friends not to bet on the fight, that it would be "fluky." Gorson's friends told their own friends and soon it was an open secret.

Well, it turned out "fluky" all right. The statement that Dempsey drank coffee with poisoned cream on the morning of the fight is just to pave the way for another fight. Good business for Tunney. He must have paid dear for it.

Sports are about as rotten as politic.—CHARLES P. FLETCHER, Summit, N. J.

March 9, 1927.

Editor, DAILY WORKER: Your splendid editorial in The WORKER of March 8th showed that your paper is not afraid to tell the truth about that notorious fake Irish republican, Eamon DeValera.

He pretends to be an enemy of British imperialism in Ireland, but does so by hands here, he immediately blooches with all the worst political tyrants and grafters that the U. S. A. produces.

This is the same DeValera who is accused by the Soviet Union and who recently stated that he would not uphold any government which "oppressed the priests of the Roman Catholic Church" and in that respect he is in the same boat as the Knights of Columbus, who denounce President Coolidge because he resents the political interference of foreign-born Roman Catholic clerics in the state affairs of Mexico.

But then, that is the trouble with most Irish "republicans" both here and in Ireland.

They are nearly all staunch supporters of their religion, and all the good socialistic theories that it stands for and are also firm believers in that dearly beloved Catholic tradition, "The Church is superior to the State."

Long ago the late R. G. Ingersoll stated that in one of his lectures that Ireland would never be free until the people there ceased to swallow all the dogmas of orthodox theology, and those facts were spoken by a real Republican, and one of the most profound American thinkers that ever lived, but his words will never be ordered by DeValera and his adherents.—F. Curiosities of Nature

HOW MANY LEGS HAS A CENTIPEDE? Both the names "centipede" and "millipede" seem to be hasty guesses made by someone who didn't stop to investigate too closely. Doubtless, anyone who has ever been on a banana ship and had a centipede start to crawl over him would be inclined to credit it with the full hundred legs that its name implies. But actually centipedes have from twenty-six to forty-two. They can run rapidly and are carnivorous. The millipede or "thousand-legger" has as many as 220 legs, but despite this number, drags along slowly like a big invalid. The millipede, unlike his faster relative, is a vegetar an.

DIAMONDS. The South African official diamond rush with its crazy procedure and crazier legality has again focused special interest upon the diamond. The diamond is nothing but carbon—the same material as charcoal, coke, graphite and lampblack—but in a different form. Of these latter materials, graphite—the same stuff that so-called "lead" pencils are made of—is the one that resembles the diamond most. Both graphite and diamond are carbon in crystalline form. But there the resemblance ends. The carbon crystal that we know as diamond has been formed by nature by infinitely slow cooling through the ages under tremendous pressure. The diamond is the hardest substance known, and this is its only useful property. Millions of little diamonds that are unclear or black due to impurities are in use for drilling, glass-cutting, etc. Enormous have been made artificially, but only such little ones that the game wasn't worth the candle.

BAKU AND THE FIRE-WORSHIPPERS. Oil has been known at Baku since the earliest times, and up to the date of the Arabian conquest of the city in the year A. D. 636, Baku was the principal point of pilgrimage of the Persian and Hindu fire-worshippers, being visited every year by thousands. Usually oil is found only by drilling wells deep into the earth. But there are some places where natural gas or oil, or both, have been issuing naturally from fissures in the rock since ages. A stroke of lightning, or a spark, back perhaps at the dawn of history, was needed to turn the fountain of gas into a column of eternal fire. The Greek legend of the fiery monster the "Chimaera" was based on such a column of fire which has been burning for thousands of years in the shores of the Gulf of Adalia, in Asia Minor.

It was not an accident that Persia with its oil and gas fields became the center of the religion of fire-worship, for the inextinguishable pillar of fire leaping up from the bowels of the earth was a miracle that other gods would have to strain themselves considerably to beat.

As late as 1840, the Temple of Surakhani (close to Baku) which had been the seat of the Sacred Fire for centuries, was still visited by priests from India. But machine drilling had already begun in 1871.

THE LAY OF THE GANDY DANCER

Oh, I was doin' a gamly dance, along o' th' Santa Fe
When a gospel stiff with a clabber face said 'e'd sum'mat to say.
"The Lord," 'e says, "was wise," 'e says, "an' the Lord 'e knoweth best—
'E gave the road to the financiers an' th' likes o' you th' rest.
For th' likes o' you 'e saved," 'e says, "as long as the rattler runs
Th' burden 'e took off o' Mary's kin an' laid upon Martha's sons."
"Th' hell," say I, an' "Christ," I says, an' "Pish" an' "Tush", says 'e,
"Yer manners is bad an' yer blasphemous, which shouldn't no wise be."
"But the hell", says I, an' "Christ", I says, "Th' Lord's a crook, b'gee,
If 'e passes his friends a golden spoon an' a number Two to me."
"Yer most uncouth an' to tell th' truth, its very plain to see
The Lord 'e couldn't 'aleft th' road to ever th' likes o' ye."
"Yer rough", 'e says, "an yer tough", 'e says, "an yer fond o' beer an' gin,
An' to give yer more than the grocer takes would steep yer soul in sin.
An' what is more, ye have built the road, for th' Lord is just an' wise—
He moved th' hearts o' his millionaires to let you tamp th' ties."
"Th' hell", says I, an' "Christ", I says, an' "Tush", says 'e.
"Yer a branded soul an' ye don't deserve such god-like charity."
"But th' hell", says I, an' "Christ", I says, "I've conned it over well.
An' if God can stand for a deal like that, why God can go to hell."
Oh, I was doin' a gandy dance along o' th' Santa Fe.
When a friend of God, with a clabber face, said 'e'd summat to say.
I listened to him and I spoke him fair just what seemed right to me
But 'im and God they'd stacked the cards from now to eternity.
So I took 'is lip and I took a griz of my Gandy's golden spoon.
An' I laid God's share o' that number two abaft of 'is rear jib boom.

Soviet Union and for a Soviet government in the United States.

The last ten years of his life were given wholly to the building of a mass Communist Party in America. He knew the importance of the party, its value and meaning to the working class. Foremost in its ranks he was always building and strengthening the Workers (Communist) Party. Our loss is great, indeed. And it is only with the most strenuous efforts of the whole party, supported by the mass of its sympathizing workers, that our movement can in a measure be compensated for the death of Comrade Ruthenberg.

What better tribute can we pay to his memory than to fulfill his last wish which was to fight on and build the party? What better tribute can the class conscious workers of America pay to the memory to the dead revolutionary leader than to join and rally around the party which he had spent his life in founding and building?

Ruthenberg is gone but the Communist movement for which he lived and fought so bravely will go on with redoubled energy and devotion. We will now work harder and struggle more intensely to make up for the loss to carry our movement forward, ever forward till the final victory of the working class.

CURRENT EVENTS

By T. J. O'FLAHERTY.

SINCLAIR LEWIS has written him another book and has set the whole country babbling about his "Emil Gantry," which is the name of the preacher who is set up in the pillory to receive the sneers and jeers that Lewis pours out on his offending head. Some say there is little of art in the book but the we have not read it we are willing to sing the praises of anything that is anathema to the eyes of Dr. (Cock) Roach Stratton and Billy Sunday not to mention the sluggishly moral editorialiers of the New York Times.

* * *

LEWIS is a good propagandist, so far ahead of Upton Sinclair that few people think Lewis is doing anything except telling a story in rigorous language. It is good to see the capitalist press and the clergy and the higher strata of capitalist functionaries shudder over the prospect of impending doom that looms up before them as a consequence of the moral deterioration that follows in the wake of debunking literature. As a matter of fact this debunking literature is an effect rather than a cause, the the kind of an effect that mars deterioration along.

RELIGIOUS fundamentalists claim that "Emil Gantry" is vulgar and obscene. Another reason why intelligent people should read it, because there is so much difference between the conception of decency entertained by a fundamentalist and a civilized person na there is between the favorite smells of a prima donna and a hog. Disanpointed critics moy say it is not art, but art or not necessarily something that cannot be enjoyed, something that cannot be understood except with pain and sorrow and cerebral strain. In our humble opinion if Sinclair Lewis made as good o job of lampooning the clergy as we hope he did, it is the kind of art we like and the kind of art that will live.

IRISHMEN are disgruntled with Henry Ford because he has failed to acknowledge the offer of an LL.D. from Dublin University. Irishmen are supposed to be realists and to be blessed with that sense of the ridiculous without which people are bores and pompous asses.

And yet, if we are correctly informed, they blame Ford for not taking his pen in hand and inditing a letter of thanks for the proffered honor when they might have excused him on the ground that his favorite steno who writes his English was absent Conferring an LL.Dship on the man who said history is hunk, is on a par with giving the Nobel peace prize to Austen Chamberlain. Perhaps the owners of the Dublin University want another flivver factory in Ireland.

DURING a lull in the Illinois civil war, Gov Len Small invited Calvin Coolidge to visit the state, which was described by the governor as the heart of America. Evidently the president thought it came closer to being America's chief burial ground as he put hastily to sea in the May flower. Hardly had the gubernatorial invitation been put on the wires than two rival Chicago gangs called off a two-day truce and again the streets were running red with the blood of the dead and wounded. Things have not improved there since The DAILY WORKER moved to New York the a large number of perfectly good citizens blame the Communists for every social misfortune from suicide epidemics to rum seizures.

THE local socialist weekly advertised a meeting to be held here in honor of Alexander Kerensky, short-lived premier of Russia that was, before the Communists turned it into the heart of the Soviet Union. The editor of the Jewish Daily Forward is one of the prime movers in the meeting. The socialists pretend that their hatred for the Soviet Union is due to the imprisonment and alleged persecution of political dissenters and the execution of alleged socialists who took active part in the machinations of foreign countries against the Workers' Republic. It is a historical fact, however, during the short period Kerensky was in power he sent more workers and peasants to certain slaughter in an offensive against the Germans at the behest of the allies than the sum total of all renegades that were killed and imprisoned by the October revolution from its inception until today.

U. S. BUILDS BIG WAR BALLOON AS CAL TALKS PEACE

One-Fifth Larger Than Monsters of England

WASHINGTON, March 13. — The pious declarations of American capitalism, represented by the Coolidge administration, that it is striving to preserve world peace is given the lie by the announcement just made that the U. S. navy department has received designs and specifications for the largest rigid dirigible ever conceived by neronautic engineers.

Larger Than Any.

The new monarch of the skies, the initial finances for which the congress just adjourned appropriated most generously, will be 730 feet long, with a maximum "sausage" diameter of 130 feet. The cubic volume of its gas chambers will be 6,000,000 feet, against 2,300,000 in the "Los Angeles" the largest dirigible now in service. The latter is but a puny 660 feet from tip to tip and 91 feet through its greatest breadth.

Races England.

Frantic hoste was given to the peace-loving program of the American empire working through the officialdom at Washington by the announcement made the other day by the British Air Ministry that it had completed plans for the building of two new sky monsters of 5,000,000 cubic feet capacity.

Find Another Comet; This One Easy to See

CAMBRIDGE, MASS.,—March 13. —A new comet of the tenth magnitude has been discovered near the star Beta in the constellation libra. It has a daily motion of 16 seconds west and 19 seconds north.

It was discovered by Prof. Sterns at the Van Vleck Observatory at Middleton, Conn., about 5 o'clock on the morning of March 10. Because of its magnitude it is visible with a small telescope.

Chicago's Armored Car To Be Kept In The Labor District

CHICAGO, March 13 (FP).—New equipment for the Chicago police department includes a steel armored car. It is to be assigned to the central district, says chief of police Morgan Collins, to answer emergency and riot calls. The record of the police in charging and clubbing girl pickets in recent needle strikes in Chicago's central district and in brutally breaking up picket lines in other labor disputes indicates that the principal use of the armored car will be to ride down unarmed and defenseless strikers.

"If the first one proves practical we will buy armored cars exclusively hereafter," Collins says.

Bribery Cost for Use of Saw by Murderer In Illinois Jail, $1,500

CHICAGO, March 13. — Robert Torres, one of three Mexicans who escaped from the Will County Jail where they were awaiting execution for murder, confessed today that the escape was an "inside job." He said $1,500 had been paid prison guards to provide saws and pistols that were used in the delivery.

Edward F. Gibbons, one of the guards, was arrested early today. Albert Markgraf, sheriff of Will county, charges that Gibbons handled the $1,500 fund the Mexicans had provided.

Juanita Gallardo, a beautiful Mexican girl whom Bernard Ros, the only one of the three convicts who has not been captured, won, when she visited the jail, steadfastly declared today that she did not carry the saws and the guns to the prisoners.

Robbery Near Pittsburgh.

PITTSBURGH, March 13 (INS) — An express company truck, enroute to Cloverdale, Pa., with a payroll for mines of the Pittsburgh Terminal Coal Company there, was bombed from ambush by bandits on the Pittsburgh-Cloverdale highway near here early after noon today, and robbed part of the $160,000 cash carried.

Bill to Withdraw Jim Crow Law of Maryland Is Before Legislature

ANNAPOLIS, Md., March 13 (FP).—Repeal of the Jim Crow law of Maryland, which requires that white and Negro passengers ride in separate railway cars or compartments of cars and steamships where tickets are sold between two Maryland points, is proposed by a bill offered in the state legislature by Senator McCardell of Frederick county.

Negroes holding tickets for interstate rides cannot be compelled to take Jim Crow cars or seats, federal courts have held.

ANTI-FASCISTI DENOUNCE FLIER SENT BY BENITO

De Pinedo Stunt Flying As Aid to Murder

A call to turn all New York demonstrations in honor of the Italian flyer Marquis De Pinedo into "manifestations of indignation and protest against the government of the fascist brigands" in Italy, has been issued by the Anti-Fascist Alliance of North America.

Recognizing in the coming visit of the aviator an attempt of the fascisti in America to enhance the prestige of Benito Mussolini, the Anti-Fascist group urges "citizens and workers", to lend a hand at all public demonstrations, but to show there their solidarity with the martyred Italian proletariat; to bear in mind the recent murder of the Communist member of parliament, Luigi Salvadori, and the assassination of Giacomo Matteotti, and other leaders

"De Pinedo is a fascist", says the Anti-fascist Alliance; "an intimate friend of the murderers of Giacomo Matteotti, a supporter of the fascist regime. He is an enemy of all workers. We are cognizant of the daring crossing of the South Atlantic, but we also remember other things—the bloody tragedy of the Italian working class our thousands of brothers in jail our murdered comrades, our massacred families, our devastated institutions of learning. We remember the martyrdom of an entire people, of our people, before which the glories of a trans-Atlantic flight loss significance".

Another Corner.

Another phase of fascism is shown in a letter just received by The DAILY WORKER from Louis De Filoppo, an exiled comrade living in Nice, France.

"Just a few words to inform you that we have been told that a certain Guiseppe Gorre, co-editor of the "Pensiero Latino", a fascist paper of Nice, who has recently been deported from France as agent-provocateur, has left, or is on the point of leaving Italy for New York where he is to direct a fascist organ.

Sent By Benito.

"I have read a few letters from his pen to one of our comrades whom he thinks one of theirs, where he says that he has recently been called to Rome by the 'duce' for very important matters and particularly to receive funds for his future work in a foreign country. He is the chief instigator of an attempted murder of an anti-fascist newspaper editor of Paris, namely Sarchi Nino, who denounced the murderer before he had a chance to do the dirty work. The name of the latter is Canovi Newton.

"We are doing very good work in the border region and have created an anti-fascist movement which includes 14 different economic and political organizations.

"We have also been informed that concentration camps are being prepared some place in France in preparation for war with Italy, and preliminary work has been started to facilitate the evacuation of Italian subjects fom the border towns.

"News received from Italy is very significant. The spirit of war is spread thruout the peninsula. Fascisti march thru the streets with the cry, 'Viva la guerra!" But against who? Against France, and some other land. But above all against France because Nice and Savoy, and Corsica and Tunis are mentioned in their claims."

Cleveland Holds an Impressive Memorial

Ruthenberg Is Remembered Where He Joined Fight

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—The Memorial meeting in honor of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg held in this city, where our fallen leader first joined the revolutionary movement, was most impressive. A portrait done by Comrade Sadie Amter was placed on the platform surrounded by a mass of red and black, and above it the emblem of the Soviet Government, the hammer and sickle.

The speakers at the meeting were Comrades Max Bedacht, Herbert Zam, John Stieglitz, John Brahtin, Israel Amter, presided.

The Freiheit Singing Society and the Lithuanian Workers Chorus rendered funeral songs and the International.

Sound Note of Challenge

The the meeting was in honor of Comrade Ruthenberg and was filled with grief over the early demise of our leader, yet the note of challenge to the capitalist system—a challenge in the everyday struggle and for the overthrow of the system—reflected the spirit of militancy and revolution that permeated and signalized the life of Comrade Ruthenberg.

"We are here not only to grieve, but to consolidate our ranks and to battle forward in the spirit and in keeping with the activity of Comrade Ruthenberg."

Police Much In Evidence

The police were in evidence at the meeting, evidently anticipating that the meeting would threaten the existence of the government.

"They speak of freedom of speech in this country, and yet even this meeting must tolerate the presence of the police," said Comrade Bedacht.

There were no untoward incidents, but the 1200 workers present demonstrated that they are ready and anxious to deal with the revolutionary movement and will help to build the only lasting monument to our dead leader by building up the Workers (Communist) Party.

EXPECT TELLEZ TO REITERATE MEXICAN POLICY

Oil Exported Pending Court Decision

MEXICO CITY. — When Manuel Tellez, ambassador to the United States returns to Washington after a brief visit in which significant conferences were held with President Calles, he is expected to again reiterate the stand of his country that Mexico is entirely within its sovereign rights in enacting and enforcing oil and land laws, and that national dignity demands the government to stand firm.

Let Them Take Oil.

Pending a decision from the Mexican supreme court, however, which will deal with injunctions granted against the enforcement of the oil laws, the Mexican government will continue its policy of permitting companies to take out oil.

Not Retreating.

Much conjecture has dominated the press about the hidden motives underlying the visit of the Mexican ambassador. The contents of the various notes exchanged between the U. S. and Mexican high officials have added substance to this.

It is more clear to observers here that the pressure of state department propaganda was instrumental in forming the decision of the Mexican government to take inventory with its ambassador about its attitude toward the much-disputed Article 27 of the Mexican constitution. Indications now indicate that Mexico will not hedge in its interpretations of that law, and will insist American-wise on the principle of "Mexico for Mexicans."

NUMBER OF ORGANIZED WORKERS IN SOVIET UNION OVER NINE MILLION

WASHINGTON, March 13. —Trade unions in the Soviet Union had a total membership of 9,278,000 on July 1, 1926, according to a report of the seventh general congress of trade unions of the U. S. S. R., quoted by the Soviet Union Review, of Washington. This represented a gain of about 3,000,000 members since the sixth congress, held in 1924.

According to the report, 89.8 per cent of the wage workers in the countries comprising the Soviet Union were enrolled in the trade unions in 1926. On July 1, 84 per cent of the trade unionists were employed and 1. per cent unemployed, while 2.5 per cent were learners and apprentices. Unemployment was more serious in the farming and building industries than elsewhere. Union membership among farm workers had increased by 624,000, or 164 per cent, in two years; in the building industry it had increased by 326,000 or 35 per cent. About 33.4 per cent of the total trade union membership consisted of clerical and other office employe, while 66.6 per cent were manual workers. It is among the manual workers in the industries that growth is now most notable.

Expenditures of the trade unions for the year 1925 amounted to $36,000,000, of which 47 per cent was current expense. Funds on hand in 1926 amounted to $20,000,000, of which the metal workers had a larger sum per capita than any other trade.

Marie and Her Sick Old Man Struggle for Power in the Balkans

BERLIN, March 13.—While Bucharest is celebrating Italy's recognition of Bessarabia as Roumanian territory with riot flags and joyous street parades just as if the country had won a victory at war, a new and silent battle is going on inside the royal palace.

King Ferdinand announced his intention to go to Sicily in April in order to recuperate, but Queen Marie has suddenly come out against the trip because she learned that Prince Carol is to visit his father there.

The arrangement for the meeting was made by Prince Wilhelm of Hohenollern, a brother of the former king and chief of the family, because he believes Carol's restoration in the only way to keep at least one branch of the family on a throne.

Marie is silently opposed to a reconciliation because she hopes that if Carol is kept out of the country she might become empress of the Balkans.

Priest Expresses Fear Capitalism Is Doomed Unless It Feeds Worker

Twenty-three thousand Hudson Coal Co. miners have resumed work after a week's idleness caused by overproduction.

Frequent layoffs in the anthracite this winter have brought considerable distress to the workers. In a bitter comment on conditions from the Roman catholic pulpit at Olyphant, a Hudson Coal town, Rev. P. J. Murphy said:

"Men, impelled by idleness, are thinking very seriously on the unjust, unscientific and stupid, economical system of capital and labor as it exists at present Is capital in this country blind, deaf and dumb? Can it not see an invisible hand writing its doom on the wall unless it relents and make the working men and women happy, peaceable and contented by sharing its profits in prosperity with the wage earners."

Chief Engineer Saved, But Laborer Killed

RIVERHEAD, N. Y., March 13.—Joseph Brodsky, 33, an employe of the Riverhead Ice Co., was crushed to death here today when a coal conveyor overturned and he was caught beneath it. Brodsky was assisting Andrew Browna, the chief engineer of the plant, in repairing the conveyor. Browna just managed to jump aside and evade the falling machine.

American Consul Knifed Fighting a Compatriot

SAO PAULO, Brazil, March 13.—Herndon W. Goforth, assistant American consul here, died today as a result of stab wounds received at the consulate yesterday, inflicted by an American giving the name of David Canfied. Canfied was arrested.

Cannot Find Ship

TOKIO, March 13. — Destroyers sent to search for the missing training ship Kirishima Maru, returned to port today without having found a trace of the vessel. It is feared the ship foundered in a gale off Cape Inuboe. The vessel carried a crew of 22 men and 30 cadets.

Insanity Charge, Wild Parties, Adultery, in Augusta High Society

AUGUSTA, Me., March 13. — Society here stood aghast today when James W. Skene, the new father-in-law of Eugene S. Labar, millionaire Pennsylvania coal operator, died in Kennebec County Court a petition asking that Ernest L. McLean, last democratic candidate for governor, be appointed Labar's guardian. Skene, in his petition asserted that Labar was mentally unfit to look after his wealth.

Just a year ago Labar came into the limelight when investigation of "wild parties" at his mansion, with liquor coming from the county storehouse, resulted in the removal from office of High Sheriff Henry F. Cummings by Governor Ralph O. Brewster.

Subsequently, Mrs. Grace R. Labar secured a divorce from her husband. In a counter suit the husband mentioned her alleged "affair" with Clarence E. Purintoon, wealthy Augusta coal dealer.

GAMBLING RAIDS ON DEMOCRATIC CLUBS NET 150

McGuiness, Ward Leader, Is Arrested

Charged with gambling, three democratic clubs were raided. Among the minor ward politicians arrested was Alderman Peter J. McGuiness, Democratic leader of the Fifteenth Assembly District, who was caught "bookmaking" in the Peoples' Democratic Club, Mesorole and Manhattan Avenues, Brooklyn.

Simultaneous raids on the three clubs in the Williamsburg and Greenpoint districts resulted in the arrest of 150 men, all of whom were charged with disorderly conduct.

It is an open secret that Republican and Democratic Clubs of most Assembly districts serve as hangouts for gamblers, criminals—and ward politicians, many of whom combine gambling with politics. Political influences have hitherto prevented raids on district clubs.

Saturday's raids came after police had discovered by wire-tapping that McGuiness and others had been accepting bets on horse races over the telephones in the three club houses. Inspector Wigwam, the Fifteenth Assembly and the Peoples' Democratic Clubs were those invaded by the police.

Marine Workers Burned In Boiler Explosion

PORTLAND, ME., March 13.—John McDonald of Portsmouth, N. H. and Francis Vila, believed to be of Porta Rica, were severely scalded when a manhole cover on the main boiler of the steamer Ansonia in port here blew off yesterday.

They were taken to the Maine General Hospital where their condition is considered critical.

Escaping steam and wreckage in the boiler room made it extremely hazardous for other members of the crew to rescue the two injured men.

2000 Do Honor To Memory Of Sun

Promise to Carry On Fight For China's Freedom

More than 2,000 Chinese and American workers packed the Chinese Theater, Bowery and Delancey street, yesterday afternoon to pay tribute to the memory of Sun Yat Sen and to pledge their support to the Chinese emancipation movement.

Loud Sun.

A mixture of emotions swept the crowd as the speakers lauded Sun's work and voiced their determination to carry on the struggle to which he had devoted his whole life.

A touching tribute was paid to the memory of the Chinese revolutionary leader when two thousand men, women and children, white and yellow, all of them wearing little red buttons carrying his picture, made the customary three bows to his portrait and to the National flag.

Workers' Revolution.

William F. Dunne, editor of The DAILY WORKER, voiced the sentiments of the audience by indicating clearly the class character of the Chinese struggle. "The Chinese movement is not merely a Nationalist movement," he said. "It is not a struggle between the East and the West. It is the fight of the Chinese workers and peasants against exploitation by foreign and native capitalists and against their tools, the war lords."

Contradicting the statement made by Professor John Dewey, the preceding speaker, that the Chinese movement was purely nationalist, Dunne pointed out that the struggle of the Chinese masses was inextricably linked with the struggle of workers and peasants throughout the world. "The Chinese workers and peasants," he said, "are leaning the masses of the Eastern fight against world imperialism and exploitation."

Liberal Interpretation.

Professor Dewey, who has exercised a good deal of influence over Chinese liberals, declared that the Chinese nationalist movement was merely an attempt to set up a democracy like that of the United States, and that it was "untainted by Bolshevism."

The international and class character of the Chinese revolution were emphasized by Bertram D. Wolfe, director of the Workers' School. "Sun Yat Sen is a common leader in a common struggle against capitalism throughout the world," he declared.

Dr. Sun's parting message to his people, which was read by T. W. Chu, an outline of the Chinese situation by H. H. Liang, editor of the Chinese Nationalist Daily, a brief sketch of Dr. Sun's life by A. K. Hu, a denunciation of British aggression by State Senator Loring M. Black and brief addresses by David S. Ogono, A. Frankfeld, Miss K. Y. Loo and Sui Peng were other features of the program.

Lend Struggle.

Dr. Sun Yat Sen, in whose honor the meeting was held, led the Chinese struggle for emancipation from 1896 to the day of his death, March 12, 1925.

He was born in 1866 at Hsian-Shan Kwangtung and educated at the Hongkong Medical College. The Sino-French war of 1885 and the Sino-Japanese war of 1894 convinced him that the foreign powers were bent on the exploitation and possibly the dismemberment of China.

As early as 1894, Dr. Sun realized that a revolution which would destroy the corrupt Manchu government which had been handing out concessions to foreigners, would alone stop the exploitation of China by foreign imperialists. The discovery that he had actually planned the overthrow of the Manchu dynasty led to the execution of seventy of his followers and to his flight to Japan in 1896.

1911 Revolution.

He returned to China a number of times to organize popular opposition to the Manchu and foreign imperialism only to meet with failure. In 1911, however, a series of foreign loans, the annexation of Korea by Japan, rising prices and heavy taxation by the corrupt Manchu government brought about a revolution which Dr. Sun directed. The revolution resulted

NO CENSOR BILLS AT THIS SESSION N. Y. LEGISLATURE

Boston Now After New Sinclair Lewis Book

ALBANY, N. Y., March 13.—Bills providing for state censorship of the type and of books and magazines will not be passed at the present session of the legislature, Senator John Knight, republican leader of the upper house, indicated today.

"I do not believe any stage censorship bill will be enacted by the present legislature", Knight said.

The so-called clean books bill has been defeated at the last four sessions of the legislature.

After Sinclair Lewis.

BOSTON, March 13.—With nine "best sellers" under the ban, Boston censors today turned their attention to "Elmer Gantry," latest sensational novel of Sinclair Lewis.

The censors are members of a committee appointed by local retail book dealers, named following the death of Rev. J. Frank Chase, secretary of the watch and ward society, who acted for years as unofficial censor of literature here.

The nine best sellers under the ban are: "The Plastic Age" by Percy Marks; "The Hard-Boiled Virgin", by Frances Newman; "The Rebel Bird", by Dian Patrick; "The Butcher Shop", by Jean Devanny; "The Ancient Hunger", by Edwin Granberry; "Antenna", by Herbert Fontenay; "The Marringe Bed", by Ernest Pascal; "The Boudle", by Pauline Smith; "As It Was", by H. T.

Publishers Demanded.

While the majority of New York publishers were unruffled today by the action of the Boston authorities in suppressing and removing from the shelves of booksellers certain of their "best sellers", others were contemplating immediate action, while several already have launched investigations and declare that they will use every legal means to stop the ban on these books.

CHARGES 7,000 RICH NEW YORK MEN DODGE TAX

Senate Report Declares Corporations Defraud

WASHINGTON, March 13.—Thousands of corporations in New York City, each controlled by one man, are dodging federal taxes aggregating millions of dollars annually, according to a report submitted to members of the Congressional Taxation Committee, it was learned today.

Fraud On Government.

An investigators for the committee found that there are about 7,000 corporations in New York City, each controlled by one man or one family. He estimated that half of these concerns were formed for the purpose of dodging federal taxes.

Notice was served by members of the committee that they will open a drive upon the treasury department at the next session of congress to force enforcement of Section 220 of the Internal Revenue Law.

Don't Enforce

That section directs the Internal Revenue Bureau to levy a tax upon a corporation's undivided surplus when it is believed that the surplus is being held in the treasury and not divided among stockholders for the purpose of saving the stockholders from paying a tax upon their dividend.

"Failure of the treasury department to enforce that section has cost the government hundreds of millions of dollars in taxes," Senator Reed Smoot (R) of Mississippi, a member of the committee, declared today.

No Witness to Carry Out Chicago Police Frame-Up of Mexican

CHICAGO When the case of Agustin Morales, the Mexican who is held for the murder of Policeman Thomas J. Stahl, at Melrose Park, June 29, was called in Judge Miller's court Thursday, no witness for the state appeared. The case was postponed at the request of the state and against the protest of Morales' attorney Mary Belle Spencer. It is the opinion of those who are supporting Morales that the case will never come to trial.

An investigator for the Chicago Crime Commission was on hand and learned from Mrs. Spencer the details of the abuse, beatings, and robberies which were practiced by the police force on the Mexican colony at Melrose Park, after the shooting last December. He says the commission will make a thorough investigation.

"Peaches" Still in Spotlight.

NEW YORK, March 13.—Frances Heenan ("Peaches") Browning today is threating to bring about another lawsuit, this to be aimed at the Society of Independent Artists because they are exhibiting among other pictures one entitled "African Gander" at their annual exhibit at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria.

The picture objected to depicts a young woman in the nude in a reclining position with a goose at her side, while in the hotel on a nearby table are several peaches.

effort against Mexico through the columns of the congressional record, the literary garbage repository for congressional waste matter. Gallivan is a faithful disciple of the institution that sold his ancestral country for a penny a head to the British king. Gallivan is a notorious blatherskite, appreciated only by those whose favorite oratory is the kind indulged in the holy jumpers, bush baptists and anointeners. He charged the Mexican government with expending $2,000,000 to spread pro-Mexican propaganda in the United States. This is only one million more than the Knights of Columbus raised to help Doheny, Sinclair and Andy Mellon plunder the Mexican republic.

GALLIVAN did not have a word to say in criticism of Doheny when that gentile grafter grabbed the nation's naval oil reserves in California. Doheny is a papal tool and millionaire to boot. Priests and capitalist politicians always kiss the hand that writes the checks. Mr. J. A. G. resents the resentment of the Mexican people at the thought of having their country looted by a gang of land burglars whose chief claims are blessed by the pope or by a hill-billy evangelist. And if the Mexican government spent a couple of million dollars in the United States countering the lies of Kellogg and "Knita" of Mussolini let us hope the information sifted against a more receptive brain than that of the befuddled Gallivan.

WASHINGTON, March 11. Members of Washington's exclusive social set who were guests a little more than one year ago at the brilliant wedding of Miss Barbara Stanfield and Henry Teasdale Dunn, were profoundly shocked today by the institution of suit against the bride's father, United States Senator Robert N. Radio experimenters in all station in Reading should get the union go on the air once in a week." Certainly, the same as ever else. And the new campaign keeps "Welfare does not take the place of wages now the union says she'll come on the air. It listens so well that fifteen to twenty workers phone their appreciation to Station WRAW at the close of the hour.

The union keeps up interest with many different speakers, telling the labor message in many different ways. The night Golden was there he told the story of the life and work at Brookwood Labor College. And Ida Wasserman young Passaic striker told the story of the dramatic and inspiring battle of the 16,000 Jersey workers.

Things are opening in Berkshire mills for a big union move. And all because labor had the imagination to go on the air when it failed on the street.

USE OF RADIO HELPS ORGANIZE FULL FASHIONED HOSE WORKERS

(By ART SHIELDS, Federated Press)

NEW YORK (FP)—Organizing the unorganized over the radio is the new method the American Federation of Full Fashioned Hosiery Workers is using with good results.

The hosiery union is a "right" and vigorous component of the A. F. of L. that has met with fine success almost everywhere except in Reading But in Reading the Berkshire Knitting Company is exploiting several thousand workers under the open shop plan. Its three monster plants produce full fashioned hosiery, in one mill, ribbons and garters in another and in the third mill the company turns out the knitting machinery that it uses itself or sells to new companies starting on the open shop in other cities.

Standard wages for organizing were failing. The Berkshire knitters live in a company town or suburbs of Reading. And there in Berkshire classes, Berkshire social halls and their chief employers dictate their wages under the rule of Berkshire rules. The knitter sees talking to an organizer or turning the pages of the Better Made Curtains For Railroad Cars In Wisconsin Demanded

WASHINGTON, March 13 (FP)—Complaint that curtains on railroad cabs used in northern climates do not afford proper shelter for engine crews as contemplated by the federal boiler inspection law, has been filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission by the Wisconsin Railroad Commission.

Wisconsin first undertook to regulate this matter itself, but the federal supreme court held that the I. C. C. had sole jurisdiction. Accordingly Wisconsin asks the I. C. C. to do its duty by protecting the locomotive engineers and firemen from "inclement weather, and ensible said employes to operate said locomotives and tenders without unnecessary peril to life and limb as provided by Section 2 of the Boilers Inspection Act, amended."

IMPURE MILK IS STILL FLOODING NEW YORK CITY

Old Time Grafters on Job, Says Harris

Impure milk continues to flood the city despite the few ineffectual attempts that have been made to bar it.

Bootleg Milk.

That impure bootleg milk and cream is being smuggled into New York by members of the gang involved in the graft scandals for which Maurice J. Clougher, secretary to former Health Commissioner Frank J. Monaghan, is now serving a sentence in Sing Sing, was revealed by Health Commissionar Harris yesterday.

Endangers Lives.

The lives of thousands of New York workers are endangered by bootleg shipments of milk and cream made by the Valley Company of New Jersey, Dr. Harris said.

"The same old gang of milk and cream bootleggers is up to its same old tricks," he declared. "Until the State of New Jersey as a whole establishes the same fallowship with us which has been manifested by the Hackensack authorities, both New York City and New Jersey will suffer from the smuggling of bootleg milk and cream and its attendant danger to life and health."

Permit Revoked.

The International Milk Company of Irvington, N. J., and the Beakes Dairy Company of Hackensack are under investigation. The former, which did business here under the name of the Valley Dairy Company, had its permit revoked several months ago.

Many Ruthenberg Memorial Meetings in Last Two Days

Thousanis of workers all over the United States gathered at meetings during the week-end to pay a final tribute to the memory of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg, leader of the Communist movement of this country.

At these meetings, which in all cases drew tremendous crowds, scores of new members were secured for the Workers (Communist) Party. Many workers were heard to say: "Now that Ruthenberg is dead, we redoubled effort are needed from many to fill up the gap in the ranks. My place is in the ranks of the party that Ruthenberg helped to form."

Many Meetings.

On Saturday meetings were held in Pittsburg, Pa., at the Labor Lyceum, and in New Haven, Conn., while Sunday the following cities held memorial gatherings: Milwaukee, Wis., St. Louis, Mo., Buffalo, N. Y., Passaic, N. J., Los Angeles, Cal., Bridgeport, Conn., St. Paul, Minn., Minneapolis, Minn., Bridgeport, Conn., and Hartford, Conn.

Tonight workers will gather in Duluth, Minn., Utica, N. Y., and several other cities.

Two More Students Are Suicides

CHESTERTON, IND., March 13.—McIntyre, 19 university of Chicago student, today was the latest victim of the suicide epidemic now sweeping American colleges, according to authorities.

Harsha's body, a bullet through the head, the right hand still clutching a pistol, was found on a lonely sand dune near here.

In Harsha's pocket was a newspaper clipping describing student suicides during the past several months.

He frequently talked of death and the Chinese custom of ordering a coffin two days before an act such as his. Articles on the suicides among students were found in his room.

FARMERS' SECTION.

KNUTSON SHOWS McNARY-HAUGEN BILL NO RELIEF TO THE FARMERS

By ALFRED KNUTSON
Secretary, United Farmers' Educational League.

We pointed out in an editorial in the January number of The United Farmer that the working farmers of this country should refuse to get excited over the McNary-Haugen bill because it will not afford them relief in any basic sense.

It is recalled now that the farmers were to be helped through the law creating the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Farm Loan System, through tariff laws and laws regulating the packers and a host of other "farm relief" laws. Where are these laws today? Are the bankrupt farmers of the west getting any help from them? Not so you can notice it.

The McNary-Haugen bill passed the senate by a vote of 47 to 39. There are powerful political forces back of it, not forces which care about the welfare of the farmers, but the kind of forces which are interested in lining up the farm vote for 1928. That's what counts. Politicians must have votes in order to get in."

The bill provides for a Federal Farm Board of twelve members, appointed by the president of the United States, and the secretary of agriculture is to decide what organizations are representative of agriculture, designate the farm organizations eligible to participate in conventions and designate the number of representatives and the number of votes each farm organization in any district shall be entitled to. Not much chance for any kind of "democracy" here.

The McNary-Haugen bill is a football used by the politicians to get the support of the farmers. Coolidge, the representative of eastern finance capital is against the bill while Frank O. Lowden, multi-millionaire and aspirant for the presidency and a representative of the western farm capitalists is for it. Dawes, the vice-president, who never has been accused of fighting for the farmers' interests, opposed Coolidge and helped to hold the "farm relief" senators together.

In order to get relief the farmers must fight their own battles. In every locality throughout the country there must be developed active groups of farmers who will conscientiously and energetically press for the solution of the farm problems.

Our work or organization must be political as well as economic, and in order to get somewhere with our fight, we must form an alliance with the workers in the industries and work for the realization of a farmers' and workers' government.

Scripps Foundation Finds Farmer Youth Consumed by Cities

WASHINGTON, March 13 (FP).—Not enough children are born in American towns to maintain their population, says a report which P. K. Whelpton has made, after much study, to the E. W. Scripps Foundation for Research in Population Problems.

Whelpton finds that industrial civilization consumes a great annual harvest of children grown from the farms, because townspeople do not breed enough children to keep the towns alive. Yet 45 per cent of the American population is classed by the 1920 census as industrial, compared with only 21 per cent industrial in 1820. And while for every $103 worth of farm products raised in 1809 there were produced only $1 worth of manufactures, in 1919 manufactures were $121 worth to each $103 of farm products.

The birth rate on American farms, he reports, is one-third higher than in towns, where health and sanitary precautions are better.

Ex-Soldier Shows Up Swivel Chair Patriot Who Opposed Laborite

DENVER, March 13 (FP).—Because Captain Ralph E. Hanson, Q.M.C. Reserve, trotted belligerently through his clenched teeth against criticism of military training in college given the Labor Advocate, in which the offending article was written, rapied:

"Captain' Hanson, Q.M.C. Reserve is a disgrace to the information of those who have never been in the army and do not know the branches of the service, it may be stated that anyone can commission as captain in the Q.M.C. Reserve so that he can be a patriot, be prepared to have a soft job if war should come and NOT GET SHOT."

"The Q.M.C. quartermaster corps, stays safely behind the lines in war and sends food up to the unpatriotic soldiers on the front in machine-gun companies of combat divisions as did the person who wrote the editorial that the 'safety-first captain' so bitterly criticizes."

"War is pretty soft for Q.M.C. reserve captains!"

EAST LIVERPOOL, OHIO.—The Workers (Communist) Party of this city arranged a memorial in honor of Comrade Ruthenberg. Israel Amter, District Secretary of the Party, was the speaker.

Comrada Amter reviewed the life of Comrade Ruthenberg and then outlined the tasks that confront the revolutionary and militant workers of this country—in the struggle against imperialism that threatens with new wars.

"We can do nothing better to follow in the footsteps of our leader than by building up the movement, and strengthening the Party. In order that the working class of this country may have a fit leader in the struggles to come. That leader is the Communist Party, and nothing the government can do, or the reactionary trade union officials may attempt, will keep the workers from their revolutionary work," said Comrada Amter.

Chicago Bootleggers Again Stage Machine Gun Battle; Two Dead

CHICAGO, March 13.—Two dreaded chieftains of gangland lay dead here today following a spectacular street battle between rival factions of bootleggers. Others now have been killed and wounded.

Frank "Lefty" Koncil, chief lieutenant for Joe Saltis, reorganized head of a powerful south side beer racketeering syndicate, and Charles Rubnee, alias "Big Hayes" are the men known to have been killed.

The bodies of Koncil and Rubnee, riddled by machine gun bullets, were found in the street at the corner of Ashland Avenue and 39th Street, near a Lincoln sedan identified as the property of Joe Saltis.

The circumstances of the fight were not unlike those in which recently a member of the district attorney's office got himself riddled by a machine gun in the hands of bootlegger enemies of the bootleggers he was with.

DOCUMENT SHOWS U. S. PROCURED DIAZ'S ELECTION

State Department Tries To Deny Legation Order

WASHINGTON, March 13. — For being "indiscreet" about making the statement that he had been instructed by the state department to make sure of the election of Adolf Diaz as president of Nicaragua, Lawrence Dennis, third secretary of the American legation at Managua, has been severely criticized by the authorities here.

The official "denial" was made by Acting Secretary of State Grew; it is not expected that a shake-up will take place in the Division of Current Information which is the technical name for the publicity bureau of the U. S. state department.

Thin Defense.

Administration officials in the state department who have been specializing in the Nicaraguan war, said that they could not "remember any such instructions," and declared that if any such document existed, "it was probably a forgery."

According to the report, the document was received at Managua in the American diplomatic pouch. Just how a forged document could get into the pouch is hard to understand, since the official mail is ordinarily carefully guarded.

Reckless Expense.

There is a hint that the document may have been "of Mexican origin," smuggled into the pouch through some leak, but no responsible official is prepared to stand for such a flimsy statement, which admittedly requires a long stretch of the imagination.

Senator Borah said today he expected to examine Dennis shortly with a view to finding out just what instructions he did receive from the state department.

Ten Thousand Foreign Investors Complying With Mexican Statute

MEXICO CITY, March 13.—Over 10,000 foreign investors have registered their properties in accordance with Article 27 of the Mexican constitution, which has caused much terror among those American capitalists whose titles to property in Mexico are felt to be somewhat dubious.

Immigration Surplus

Emigration from Mexico in 1925 is figured at 51,727 persons according to Mexico's National Statistical Bureau as against an immigration of 27,736. While the net gain in Mexico's favor is 15,379, the fact that this figure includes Mexicans returning to the country after seasonal work in the United States must be taken into account.

Health Education

The Department of Public Health in Mexico is carrying on a widespread health campaign throughout the Republic. By means of lectures, bulletins the radio, newspaper articles, and enormous colored posters with action pictures and large lettering, the most elementary lessons in health are being taught to the people.

Borah Writes Critic His Opinion of Those Who Want Mexican War

WASHINGTON, March 13. Stevens had written to Borah taking issue with the latter on the Mexican oil question, especially of the senator writing to President Calles of Mexico, asking for information about the oil laws.

WHITE AUSTRALIA ENCOURAGES SLAVERY OF BLACK WOMEN IN NEW GUINEA COLONY

By W. FRANCIS AHERN.

SYDNEY—(FP) Frank Anstey, deputy leader of the Labor party in the Australian federal parliament, who has just returned from New Guinea, formerly owned by Germany and now mandated to Australia, tells a ghastly story of female slavery in that tropic island. Said Anstey:

"Woman industrial slavery is the ghastly spectacle we have right before us. We hear constant talk of the black races being the sacred trust of civilization, but in official circles and administrative circles there is never a single mention of the native women, who are the real slaves in the territory.

Plodding Serfs.

"I have seen them climbing and plodding over mountains and down valleys—their eyes dull, their faces strained and worn, their manner subdued, and their whole bearing one of stupefaction, carrying burdens up to 60 pounds on their weary backs, bodies. They are regarded as nothing but machines to work. Some of them give birth to children by the roadside and die in the muck of the beaten tracks."

Race Decline.

The enforced slavery of the female natives is deteriorating the race, said Anstey, for the women cannot produce healthy children under such conditions. In one village alone last year there were twice as many deaths as births. There is a suspicion that the Australian government connives at this slavery of the women. When a native girl reaches the age of 12 she becomes a slave. She bears she is obliged to carry pay graded in accordance with her strength.

With a meticulous regard for the morality of the natives, the government prohibited certain allegedly obscene wood carvings and dances of the natives. Yet the enslaving of the native women is allowed to continue unchecked.

Latin Americans at Brussels Conference Form United Front

The article printed below is part of a series written by the delegate of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League to the Brussels Congress Against Colonial Oppression and Imperialism. The congress was made up of delegates from anti-imperialist organizations, peace societies and labor unions in the European, American and other imperialist nations, from labor bodies and nationalist organizations in the colonial countries, and from subjugated races even in countries with full sovereignty.

Important resolutions were passed, for the practical carrying on of the work of freeing conquered peoples from their slavery. A survey of the work of the congress and the personalities attending, which have made it one of the great events of this era, will be found in these articles.

By MANUEL GOMEZ.

BRUSSELS, Feb. 14 (By mail, delayed)—Next to China and the British empire, the "American empire" is represented here by most delegations. No less than 32 organizations have sent delegates to the Brussels congress for the primary purpose of considering methods of common defense against the imperialistic aggressions of Wall Street and the U. S. department of state.

Latins Right There.

Marked attention is paid to the numerous delegations from the so-called "Munroe Doctrine zone" of American imperialism. These include the following organizations:

Mexico—Mexican Confederation of Labor (CROM); National Peasants' League; Associated Trade Unions of Tampico (the oil territory); Mexican Students' Federation, and All American Anti-Imperialist League (Mexican section).

CUBA—Havana Federation of Labor; Students' Federation; People's University, and All-America Anti-Imperialist League (Cuban section).

HAITI—Union Patriothque.

PORTO RICO—Nationalist Party of Porto Rico.

CENTRAL AMERICA—All-America Anti-Imperialist League (Nicaragua, Salvadorean and Panaman sub-sections).

VENEZUELA—Revolutionary Nationalist Party; Venezuelan Labor Union; All-America Anti-Imperialist League (Venezuelan section).

COLOMBIA—Revolutionary Socialist Party.

PERU—Unionist Party; Students' Federation.

ARGENTINA — Labor Defense League; All-America Anti-Imperialist League (Argentine section).

Ugarte Promises Support.

Manuel Ugarte, famous Argentine novelist and advocate of Latin-American unity against Wall Street, was prevented by illness from attending the congress, but a letter was received from him expressing hearty support.

The Pan-American Federation of Labor, the entire machinery of which is in the hands of the A. F. of L., was conspicuous by its absence. In view of this, special significance is attached to the presence of the CROM of Mexico, which has close to a million members and is the only important Latin American labor federation.

Latin-American Front.

The various Latin-American delegations have been holding joint meetings almost daily during the congress recess. Joint meetings are also held with the delegates from the United States: Roger Baldwin, representing the American Civil Liberties Union and the National Urban League; Richard Moore, with credentials from the Universal Negro Improvement Association (New York wing) and the American Negro Labor Congress, and Manuel Gomez, representing the All-America Anti-Imperialist League (U. S. section).

Presiding Committee of the Brussels Anti-Imperialist Congress

LEFT TO RIGHT (Rear Row, Seated): Chea Kwen, China; Verri, Italy; Bridgeman, Great Britain; Vasconcelos, representing Porto Rican Nationalist Party.

MIDDLE ROW: Liao, China; Nejedly, Czecho-Slovakia; Barbusse, France; Henrietta Roland-Holst, Holland; Muntenberg, Germany; Baldwin, U. S.; Goldschmidt, Germany, Fourrier, France; Senghor, Senegal, Ledebour, Germany; Gomez, All-America Anti-Imperialist League; Kin ka Ling, Corea.

COMPROMISE ON INTERNATIONAL FORCE IN SAAR

Another Tempest Over; Geneva Quiets Down

GENEVA, March 13.—The much-muddled Council of the League of Nations has just escaped another threatened official "crisis" with Germany. A compromise on the future control of the Saar Valley has been reached when it seemed probable that Germany would have to face the embarrassment of an adverse vote in the council.

Herr Stresemann insisted that the present army of occupation be withdrawn from the Saar and that 800 "international guards" be substituted.

After two days of official obstinacy, M. Briand of France finally agreed to the demands of the German representative,—effective within three months. Instead of the "international guards," asked by Stresemann, however, it was agreed that the present army of occupation be replaced by a force of 800, Inter-allied in character.

MEXICAN POLICY OF INDUSTRIAL INDEPENDENCE BASIS OF WILD CHARGES BY YANKEE COMPANIES

MEXICO CITY, March 13. — "More home industrial development." "No industrial freedom without economic independence." These are the challenging slogans echoing throughout Mexico today, says the Mexican News Service bulletin.

One of the outstanding notes in the government economic policy is that for the benefit of the Mexican people. This is the crucial explanation of all the fuss that has been caused by the decision to enforcement of Article 27 of the Mexican Constitution, requiring that property held by foreign capitalists be registered with the Department of State.

Teach Independence.

The open threats of imperialist domination by the United States has given added impetus to the program for economic independence. A new note has been added to the struggle of the Mexican people to keep themselves free from the financial wiles of American capitalists.

Side by side with the active Mexican "ideological" campaign against the "Colossus of the North," they are combing through the Mexican labor movement, millions of workers and peasants with sane and intelligent rehearsals of facts and pertinent targets pertaining to the importation and economic independence of the United States, and are urging the workers' assistance and interest in an interested home production.

The method of making this proposed program a success, however, is limited to effective propaganda directed toward the Mexican people. The claim of the U. S. State Department that the Mexican Embassy at Washington has even conducted propaganda in behalf of the policies of her country is considered absurd by responsible individuals here.

Elias Denies Accusation.

NEW YORK, March 13.—Arturo M. Elias, Mexican Consul-General in New York, in a statement made the other day, emphatically denied inspired accusations made in the interests of American financial imperialists.

"We have always limited ourselves [illegible] and in public statements [illegible] certain points of the Mexican law which were not understood by the American public, and in this regard have done nothing but fulfill the mission entrusted to the consulate of making all possible efforts to maintain cordial commercial relations to the countries to which they are accredited."

A conspicuous element of irony is found in the fact that American public official and influential newspapers have never ceased hurling epithets and making innuendos against the legitimate claims of the Mexican people for political and economic independence.

Boss Blasted Machinery To Avoid Paying Living Wage; Relatives Search

NEW ORLEANS, March 13. — Relatives in British Columbia are searching Louisiana and Mississippi for Moses Graham who dropped from sight twenty years ago. At the time of his disappearance the local press carried this story: "Angered by demands of his employees for higher wages, Moses Graham, wealthy owner of extensive lumber mills in Jones county, Mississippi, blew up the entire machinery with dynamite. Mr. Graham expressed pleasure at his final victory and will retire from business."

May Change Larceny Law.

ALBANY, N. Y., March 13.—Theft of property valued at $100 instead of $50, as at present, would constitute grand larceny, second degree, under a bill introduced in the legislature today by Senator Baumes, chairman of the state crime commission.

GET SUBS TO PARTY PRESS TO HONOR CHARLES E. RUTHENBERG

I, BLOOM, Secretary, Springfield local, Workers (Communist) Party.

—"The loss of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg is so enormous that we are unable to express it in words. We unanimously decide to heed Comrade Ruthenberg's advice and make up for our loss with deeds.

"As part of our increased activity we pledge ourselves individually to get during the year not less than five subs for the party press (one comrade pledged himself with 50 subs), and a voluntary contribution of $15 (the price of a sub for The DAILY WORKER and the Freiheit) if we do not live up to our pledge."

PUPPET HAITIAN GOV'MENT BARS SEN. WM. H. KING

American-Made Official Resents Expose

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 13. —Because he has pointed out that Haiti has no government of its own but is ruled by General Russell of the United States Marines, Senator William H. King will be excluded from Haiti by Louis Borno, so-called president of Haiti and puppet of the American sugar interests and of the National City Bank.

King's resolution introduced in the senate May, 1926, opposing further American intervention in Haiti, his attacks on Borno, who, according to the Haitian constitution is ineligible for the presidency, and the fear that his presence in Haiti would "create a general feeling of unrest and insecurity" among the natives are cited by Foreign Minister Camille Leon as the reasons for King's exclusion.

That the Haitian government has been set up by the United States and that Borno and Leon are the puppets of American interests has been pointed out by Senator King on a number of occasions. General Russell, who has been clothed with the pompous title of "High Commissioner and Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to the Republic of Haiti," and who has been appointed by the president without the consent of the senate is actually in control of Haiti, King declared in a speech in the senate.

Precedent for Diaz.

It is unlikely that Secretary of State Kellogg will protest the exclusion of Senator King.

The action of the Haitian figurehead government may serve as a precedent for puppets like Diaz of Nicaragua to bar senatorial investigating committees from Nicaragua and other Latin-American countries.

Senator King is at present in Porto Rico. He proposed to visit Haiti to investigate conditions there.

Fresh Human Skulls Sent Thru U. S. Mail, Then Thrown on Dump

HARTSDALE, N. Y., March 13.—The police here today were investigating the finding of two fresh human skulls, which were found on the side walk in front of the bank building here late yesterday.

A check is being made in an effort to determine where the skulls came from. They had been wrapped in a Philadelphia newspaper, and bound around again with heavy wrapping paper. The package apparently had been through the mails, as it bore a Connecticut postmark. Although the mark was almost obliterated, investigation showed that the package had been mailed either from Norwich or Norwalk, Conn.

Hungarian Liberal Is Sued In Court For Bond Dealings

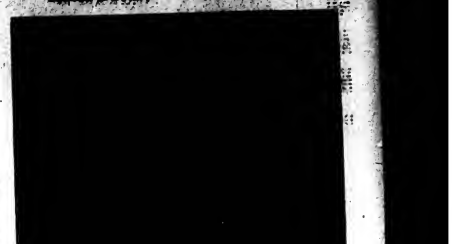
Count Anton Karolyi, of Rumania, was sued in the Brooklyn Supreme Court today by the Austrian Central Credit Bank, of Vienna to recover $46,910 which the bank alleged was due as a result of the count's financial dealings. It was stated that, at one time, the count had 17 accounts with the bank and that his funds at one time totalled 1,000,000,000 Austrian schillings as the result of successful stock and bond dealings.

Negro Lawyer Starts Action Against Jersey Jim Crow School Ukase

ASBURY PARK, N. J., March 13.

Eugene R. Hayne, a Negro lawyer, announced today that he had started action to prevent the Toms River school officials from enforcing the ruling made yesterday that the twenty-five Negro children in the Berkeley section who have been to school for nearly six weeks will go to the separate class provided for them or they will not go at all.

Mr. Hayne has applied to the Ocean county supreme court at Toms River for a writ to compel the school officials to admit the Negro children to the regular school, and has enlisted the aid of the National Association for Advancement of the Colored People and that of Governor A. Harry Moore.



Early last January the school board of Toms River decided to separate thirty children of the Negro families from the white pupils, and place them in a separate school.

Steel Orders Decline During February

Unfilled orders of the United States Steel Corporation decreased 203,558 tons in the month ended February 28, the corporation stated in its monthly report today.

Forward orders on February 28 aggregated 3,597,119 tons, against 3,800,177 tons as of January 31 and 4,616,922 on February 28, 1926.

MME. BORODIN AND HER SON

Mme. Borodin is now held prisoner by Chang Tso-lin's forces at Tsinanfu, China. She was arrested, with three diplomatic couriers going to the Chinese Consulate in Moscow, on the steamer Pamiet Lenina. This ship flies the flag of the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, and is therefore neutral territory. Her arrest is in violation of all international law, and has resulted in a strong note from the All Union government to the Chinese government at Peking, controlled by Chang Tso-lin. Mme. Borodin's husband is adviser to the Kuomintang. British papers have hailed her arrest as a great victory for the imperialist forces in China.

BOSSES' PROPAGANDA TAKES MANY FORMS; CLASSES AND BOOKS ARE SOME OF THE METHODS THEY ARE USING TO FOOL US

By ROBERT DUNN
(Federated Press)

"It does pay" says the organ of industrial rights in reply to the education in economics which employers are giving their workers. "The employer who is determined to be reasonable in his demands ought to be willing to invite outside influence."

This is a shrewd appreciation of the results of the latest wave of "workers' education" which is being paid for, introduced and supervised by man-made concerns—not by the home based, union controlled educational departments.

In order to create a desire for [illegible] many stock companies [illegible] their employees [illegible] phone directories and other [illegible] devices, the company [illegible] through what [illegible] workers' "safety certificate." This is often done through the employes' magazine. But sometimes it takes more elaborate, subtle and indirect propaganda.

A school system of employee education in "financial economics" is advised. It may include [illegible] classes, bulletin board announcements, readers, pay envelope stuffers, even mass meetings where the workers are well in hand and not in contact with "union agitators" who might raise a rumpus as such meetings.

Besides this the direct mail method is used on the workers. The report carries each week at his home a letter expressing some "constructive thought" perhaps a quotation from a Saturday Evening Post editorial or an "inspirational" message from the company president, or perhaps a speech made at a chamber of commerce banquet.

Sell Pamphlets.

Special pamphlets have been written to sell this sort of "education" to industrial plants. One of these calls itself the American Education Association. It tells how [illegible] bearing such titles as "Thrift and the Third Dividend" and "Is a Republic Safe Without a President" [illegible] and Lardner [illegible] the worker and his wife are urged all fellow workers in the same industrial vineyard.

Another concern known as the National Foundation Inst. wants to [illegible] workers of its own companies to [illegible] series of 72 talks on "Getting Ahead in Business" and [illegible] subjects appealing to the workers mind, fear, envy, vanity and home and mother sentimentality. The cure for [illegible] the worker and his wife are urged to [illegible] this service costs from seven cents a week per employee. The worker does not know his boss is paying the bill. Some firms that have used the hypnotizing National Foundation, Inc., are the Lynn Shoe Manufacturers, the American Linoleum Co., the Mergenthaler Linotype Co., and the Booth Fult Ont Co.

Pay Envelope Inserts.

Some corporations make up their own pay envelope inserts. For example the Carborundum Co. of Niagara Falls slips in a little folder [illegible] Comrades and Fellow Workers: [illegible] a great heroic struggle of the Passaic textile workers, the mill owners were forced to submit to a union in the textile industry of Passaic. They are however putting up a fight in the line of maintaining the open shop organization. Although the Passaic textile workers have returned to work [illegible] with the [illegible] of [illegible] and the [illegible] back [illegible] with [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

A Few Punctured Myths

There was in existence until recently a well-nourished myth that the Chinese people were incurable pacifists and good for little except washing the white man's shirt, who carried the yellow man's burden producing rice and tea and propagating their kind. Another myth, which still persists, is that they will not fight on a rainy day. Strange that the imperialist powers do not prevail on their deity to maintain a perpetual drizzle not heavy enough to make it impossible for the imperialists to live in comfort yet sufficiently substantial to prevent the Chinese from resorting to hostilities.

When the Chinese were enjoying a reputation for pacifism, missionaries flocked to them with bibles, business men with rum and opium and soldiers with bayonets and bombs. The preachers turned their eyes to heaven and asked their deity to transform the Confucians into christians, the business men doped their brains and tickled their palates and hoped that Jehovah would transform them into hopheads and drunkards. Those that survived the attentions of the preachers and the bagmen were initiated into the mysteries of bayonet practice by the soldiers. The course in applied christianity was complete.

The Chinese learned that clergymen, capitalists and soldiers have a habit of picking on the meek so they took their trusted bayonets and returned the compliment, much to the disgust of those who were obliged to turn around and reclassify the hitherto meek and lowly Chinese. Now the Chinese are "militarists" and there is no distinction made between those fighting to expel the imperialist powers and free the masses from oppression and those who are the tools of the imperialist powers engaged in the task of keeping the masses in subjection.

The myth that the Chinese do not fight while it rains still persists in the news columns. But we have our doubts. We learn by accident that the Nationalists are preparing for another advance by artillery preparation even though the floodgates of the christian heaven are leaking. And while the Nationalists are thus engaged Chang Chung Chang, the militarist general, who promised to defend Shanghai against the revolutionary army, is engaged in plundering the bankers of Nanking and planning to walk away and allow the Nationalists to enter the city quietly as soon as he collects $6,000,000. The northern militarists may have a decided objection to fighting while it rains but they would just as soon take an honest penny in the wet as make hay while the sun shines.

The present revolutionary movement in China has killed almost as many myths as militarists. What the capitalist literary hacks do not understand is that there is a new China in the making. The old China of the shackled limb and the hopped head is going. The new China of the emancipated masses is being born. This is gloomy tidings for the exploiters of the world. It is joyful news for the oppressed peoples and exploited workers of all lands.

Two Informers Come to Town

One of the most disgraceful episodes—and certainly the most unique—in the history of the American trade union movement transpired last Friday when two high officials of the American Federation of Labor and several hired hacks arrived in New York to confer with the mayor with a view to inducing the latter to open an inquiry into the conduct of a successful strike waged by the Joint Board of the Furriers' Union against the employers in that industry.

William Green, president of the A. F. of L., and Matthew Woll, vice-president, assumed the role of stoolpigeons of a particularly odious kind when they supplied the official of a capitalist city government with information calculated to show that the strike leaders bribed police officers during the course of the strike. This is the first time that such a disgraceful incident happened in the United States, at least openly. We have seen A. F. of L. officials break strikes with hired scabs but it seems to us the limit of degeneracy has been reached when two such officials as Green and Woll scab on the fink agencies in their desire to prove their loyalty to the Wall Street bankers.

That Green and Woll could do such a thing without being chased out of town by an indignant trade union movement gives a picture of the depth to which the trade union bureaucracy has sunk and the demoralizing effect the corrupted officialdom has on the rank and file.

The tasks of the left wing of the trade union movement are many and burdensome. There can no longer be any doubt that the bureaucrats are agents of the employing class. They must be hurled from their positions by the rank and file. They must be supplanted by uncorrupted leaders with a vision for a new order of things, leaders who are ready for unending war on capitalism. And those new leaders must be supported and kept on the straight track by a well disciplined and thinking progressive movement.

Scabby labor leaders and stoolpigeons have no place in the ranks of American labor.

There is no fundamental difference between the Chinese policy of Ramsay MacDonald, Philip Snowden and J. H. Thomas and the policy of Stanley Baldwin and Austen Chamberlain, declares a writer in the New York Times; a writer who knows his tripe. They all favor defending imperialist interests there. On the same day we read in the New York Tribune that Ramsay MacDonald is planning a visit to the United States and that the more progressive members of his party are planning to relieve him of party leadership, because of this same fundamental agreement with the tory government on China.

John H. Walker, president of the Illinois State Federation of Labor, has a solution for the coal industry. It is: Less mines, less miners and more profits. But "Honest John" would compensate property owners whose mines would be forced into inactivity by this solution. For the miners he did not even propose a free burial.

He Challenged the Ruling Class

IN MEMORY OF COMRADE C. E. RUTHENBERG

By ANTHONY BIMBA.

It was in the summer of 1917. This country was already in the clutches of the World War. The conscription law had been enacted by congress. The militarists were working overtime to whip the masses behind the war monster. The horizon was very dark everywhere. The atmosphere was full of blood and powder. The newspapers all over the country were spreading the poisonous pro-war propaganda with full speed.

At that time I was in Cleveland. The socialists of Cleveland decided to organize an anti-war demonstration in order to raise a voice of protest against the conscription law.

It is Sunday afternoon about 2 o'clock. I, hurried to the public square on West 24th Street.

I was on time. The workers are just beginning to pour into the square. The square itself is very picturesque; on two sides it is surrounded by brick walls. On the other two sides are streets, along one of them a street car is running. I see many policemen and cossacks, dozens of them, surrounding the square from two sides. The horses of the cossacks are very impatient. Their masters are also very serious . . . They are awaiting their chance . . .

Hundreds of workers, men women and children, continue to pour into the square. It is filled . . . and still more people are arriving. There is no more place on the square, every inch is occupied. The police would not permit anyone to stand on the street.

The enormous crowd is very quiet. No provocation of the police can excite it. It understands the occasion and knows its purpose.

Comrade Alfred Wagenknecht opens the meeting. He briefly explains the aim of the demonstration. Then he introduces the speakers. If my memory is correct—Baker and Clifford spoke. They received some applause.

But I noticed on the faces of those around me that they are expecting somebody else to address them, to lead them in this great fight, to encourage them, to point the way out of the horrors of war. They knew that there is a man in Cleveland who never failed them before and will surely not fail them now in this crisis. He must speak today.

Comrade Wagenknecht speaks: "Comrades, we have a man with us who needs no introduction. Before you all know him very well. The next speaker today is Charles E. Ruthenberg, the candidate of the Socialist Party for mayor of . . ."

He could not finish his sentence, or, at least, I could not hear him finish it. It seemed that the whole square was shaking from the applause of thousands of men and women. They clap their hands, they shout and sing as loud as they can, they wave their hands and handkerchiefs, some of the handkerchiefs were red . . . I push thru the crowd still closer to the platform of the automobile from which the speakers are addressing the demonstration. I am very close to the platform . . .

I see a finely built figure arise . . . It is Comrade Charles E. Ruthenberg . . . That was the first time in my life that I saw him. The I had been a member of the Socialist Party for quite some time, did not have an opportunity to see him . . . He moves his head slowly from one direction to another and surveys the audience with his half-closed, but far-seeing and piercing eyes. His face is radiated with an ever-present smile, but his forehead is wrinkled, he is very serious . . . I forgot myself and the audience entirely. My eyes and my mind are on this wonderful man. He raises his hands indicating the great audience stop the applause and permit him to speak . . . A few seconds passed and absolute stillness prevails on the square. He glances around more more. Then he speaks. . . I admire his voice. Everybody can hear each word.

He is a giant. . . . His personality, his smile, his voice, his thoughts, the very simplicity of his speech captivates the audience. They could not help but listen to what he has to say to them.

"My friends and comrades," says Comrade Ruthenberg, "this is not a war for democracy. This is not a war for freedom. It is not a war for the liberties of mankind. It is a war to secure the investments and profits of the ruling class of this country. . . . The only reason we are in this war now is because it is to the interests of the ruling class, the capitalist class of this country, wants to have us in this war . . . The capitalists were ready and willing to send the youth of this nation into this horrible nightmare of murder, to kill and to be killed, in order that their profits might be conserved. . . ."

He told the audience that the American capitalists made over five billion dollars of profit from the war already and when the German submarines threatened to put an end to the exportation of ammunition to England and France, they dragged the country into war. Then he described the horrors of war by telling a story of a youth who came back from war maimed and crushed. This youth was told that to kill human beings in war is a heroic deed. His mother waited for him home. She wanted to salute him for his bravery, for his patriotism. "But the young man laid his head down in her lap," says Ruthenberg," and put his face on his hands and began to weep and said: 'Mother, I cannot think of it. I cannot think of the look on that young man's face—young man just as I, a young man who might have been a happiness and joy to me—when I put that bayonet in him and took his life away from him. Do not talk to me about the glory of the deed. Do not talk to me about the bravery of it. It will be the curse of my life for the rest of my days that I murdered a human being thus.' That is what conscription means to the youth of this nation."

Then he appealed to the audience to get rid of the bourgeois government and abolish the conditions which make war possible.

"We must organize our forces to meet the situation," comrade Ruthenberg shouted to his listeners. "We must organize our power to alter this situation. . . . We are here to fight to the end, to end this condition in the world, to build a new society, to build a new spirit in the world, to end wars, to end murder, to end suffering, to end the destruction of millions of lives and billions of wealth, and bring into existence a new comradeship of the future, a brotherhood which must inspire the hearts and minds of all men, in which we will have fraternity and equality, and in which for the first time the people will be endowed with those inalienable rights of life, liberty and happiness which the Declaration of Independence says are the fundamental rights of every human being. We ask you to stand with us. We ask you to work with us to achieve this beautiful goal of Socialism, the brotherhood of man—for today, as never before, rings out in the world the cry of the poet of the social revolution:

"Come shoulder to shoulder
Ere the world grows older.
The cause spreads over land and sea.
Now the earth shaketh and fear swaketh,
And joy at last for thee and me."

"Joy at last for thee and me—of the working class, because for the first time there will come into the world this new spirit of love, of equality, fraternity, and happiness and peace."

Thus he concluded. It was a great anti-war speech. It is true that he did not deal with the theory of the question. He went directly in the hearts of the audience composed entirely of workers. He pleaded with, he appealed to them, he painted to them the horrors of war, he asked and urged them to organize themselves and overthrow the ruling class.

Again a great demonstration took place; applauding, shouting, waving of hats and handkerchiefs. The automobile began to move. Comrade Ruthenberg waved his hat to the crowd and disappeared with great enthusiasm. Hundreds of us followed the automobile for blocks, and then finished the demonstration with a mass meeting at the party headquarters.

If I am not mistaken, either for the same speech or for a similar one, made in some other place on the same subject, Comrade Ruthenberg was arrested, convicted and served ten months in prison.

This great anti-war demonstration lead by our beloved, fearless leader, is still fresh in my memory.

Workers in Pledge to "Carry On"

Russian Bureau Pledges to Continue.

Russian Bureau Workers Party District 1, Boston:—"It is with deep sorrow that we learn of the untimely death of our dear Comrade Charles E. Ruthenberg, the general secretary of the party. With the death of Comrade Charles E. Ruthenberg, our party has lost one of its best leaders and comrades—a burning torch not only for the toiling of American, but for the entire world.

"We members of the Russian Bureau, District No. 1 Workers Party of America in expressing our deep sorrow, pledge ourselves to continue the great work with unwavering faith and energy for the cause which Comrade Charles E. Ruthenberg so ably championed. The Russian Bureau District No. 1 in the day of mourning calls upon all of its members to rally still closer to the banner of our party in order that we may more speedily realize the behest in our great leader.

"Long live the Communist Movement."

"To Carry Forward the Work."

Sub. District No. 1 of McKeesport, Pa.:—"Members of the Workers (Communist) Party mourns the loss of our great leader C. E. Ruthenberg.

"We members of the Workers (Communist) Party of America pledge ourselves in the name of the American proletariat to carry forward the work in which Comrade Ruthenberg showed such fearless and loyal devotion.

"Long live The Communist International!

"Long live The Workers (Communist) Party of America!"

"Heed His Message."

International Labor Defense, Pacatello, Ind:—"In behalf of Pacatello Branch International Labor Defense I wish to express the great feeling of sorrow with which news of Comrade Ruthenberg's death was received. Realizing he would not have the labor movement cease progress even to mourn death of so valuable leader the labor movement should heed his last message to close it ranks and carry on."

"Our Great Teacher."

Shop Neucler No. 2, District 5, Yestaburg, Pa.:—"We comrades have deep sorrow of lossing our great teacher, our Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg. Our promise is to continue in the struggle for which he lived and died."

• • •

Miner Feels The Loss.

L. A. ROSELAND, members of the United Mine Workers, Waukegan, Ill.:—"In my simple way, I wish to express my great sorrow for the loss of our leader and Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg.

"I must admit I was greatly moved when the news came that he was dead.

"Perhaps I will only repeat what hundreds and thousands have stated before me, but let me say this, that the services rendered by him to the working class movement of this country as well as of all lother countries shall not be forgotten, nor shall the great cause for which he lived and fought for up until his death have been in vain.

"Let us fill in the space left by our devoted brother and comrade with redoubled energy in carrying on the work from where he left off, until our class (the working class) shall rule the world."

"Ruthenberg Was the Builder of Our Party."

Lithuanian Bureau, Workers Party:—"The sudden death of our leader and guide, Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg, was a great shock to us, and to all Lithuanian workers in America as well.

"Comrade Ruthenberg was the leader of our party and the revolutionary movement. The death of Comrade Ruthenberg has inflicted a deep pain in our hearts. Ruthenberg is dead, but his courageous revolutionary spirit remains with us.

As Comrade Lenin after his death lives always with us and leads us to Communism, Comrade Ruthenberg will remain in his spirit and his teachings with us and he will be our spiritual leader in the future.

"We will always remember that Comrade Ruthenberg was a builder of our party and we will continue to build his party, Workers (Communist) Party. Let us close oru ranks and carry on his work to a final victory, to overthrow capitalism and establish a Workers and Farmers Soviet Republic in the United States.

"Comrade Ruthenberg, our leader is dead! Long live the Communist Movement!"

"Lithuanian Central Bureau, Workers Party.—J. Lasiunas, Secretary."

Unexpected Shock.

J. A. BLASUTCH, Kellogg, Iowa:—"Such sudden and unexpected shock as the death of our trustworthy leader C. E. Ruthenberg, which has shocked the whole revolutionary movement in America, and let wish that he will forever and ever to rest and his work that he left unfinished grow in leap and bounds.

"I will extend my sympathy to the staff his comrades."

"J. A. Blasutch, Kellogg, Iowa."

• • •

L. A. Roseland, member of the United Mine Workers, Waukegan, Ill. —"In my simple way, I wish to express my great sorrow for the loss of our leader and comrade, C. E. Ruthenberg.

WAYS TO REMEMBER.

I have just come from a number of meetings at which thousands of workers most deeply and profoundly moved by the death of Comrade Ruthenberg, came together to honor his memory. While the grief everywhere was genuine and spontaneous, yet it is significant to note that everywhere the tendency was to express this grief in the form at some real contribution toward the movement he for which he stood. The idea of the RUTHENBERG DAILY WORKER SUSTAINING FUND was therefore received cordially as a natural channel for the expression at the feeling of the assembled workers.

The idea of the RUTHENBERG DAILY WORKER SUSTAINING FUND in brief is this. Comrade Ruthenberg looked upon The DAILY WORKER as an indispensable weapon in the struggle of the American working class for emancipation. Few comrades in the party or outside of it, can realize how much time and effort he gave to the paper. Few comrades can estimate what Ruthenberg meant to The DAILY WORKER in its many difficult and trying hours. In the opinion of many comrades it was therefore felt to be most appropriate that The DAILY WORKER SUSTAINING FUND be named in his honor.

Furthermore it was felt generally that in view of the great service rendered to our movement and to The DAILY WORKER, in particular, that this fund be devoted to the task of improving the paper, to hiring additional editorial talent, to securing such attractive and necessary features as news correspondents in foreign lands, regular cartoon service, a popular science column, proletarian stories, comics, and raising the standard of the paper generally.

No comrade can feel that he has done his full share to honor the memory of Comrade Ruthenberg without enrolling himself in the ranks of the contributors to the RUTHENBERG DAILY WORKER SUSTAINING FUND.

A Few Punctured Myths

There was in existence until recently a well-nourished myth that the Chinese people were incurable pacifists and good for little except washing the white man's shirt, who carried the yellow man's burden producing rice and tea and propagating their kind. Another myth, which still persists, is that they will not fight on a rainy day. Strange that the imperialist powers do not prevail on their deity to maintain a perpetual drizzle not heavy enough to make it impossible for the imperialists to live in comfort yet sufficiently substantial to prevent the Chinese from resorting to hostilities.

When the Chinese were enjoying a reputation for pacifism, missionaries flocked to them with bibles, business men with rum and opium and soldiers with bayonets and bombs. The preachers turned their eyes to heaven and asked their deity to transform the Confucians into christians, the business men doped their brains and tickled their palates and hoped that Jehovah would transform them into hopheads and drunkards. Those that survived the attentions of the preachers and the bagmen were initiated into the mysteries of bayonet practice by the soldiers. The course in applied christianity was complete.

The Chinese learned that clergymen, capitalists and soldiers have a habit of picking on the meek so they took their trusted bayonets and returned the compliment, much to the disgust of those who were obliged to turn around and reclassify the hitherto meek and lowly Chinese. Now the Chinese are "militarists" and there is no distinction made between those fighting to expel the imperialist powers and free the masses from oppression and those who are the tools of the imperialist powers engaged in the task of keeping the masses in subjection.

The myth that the Chinese do not fight while it rains still persists in the news columns. But we have our doubts. We learn by accident that the Nationalists are preparing for another advance by artillery preparation even though the floodgates of the christian heaven are leaking. And while the Nationalists are thus engaged Chang Chung-Chang, the militarist general, who promised to defend Shanghai against the revolutionary army, is engaged in plundering the bankers of Nanking and planning to walk away and allow the Nationalists to enter the city quietly as soon as he collects $6,000,000. The northern militarists may have a decided objection to fighting while it rains but they would just as soon take an honest penny in the wet as make hay while the sun shines.

The present revolutionary movement in China has killed almost as many myths as militarists. What the capitalist literary hacks do not understand is that there is a new China in the making. The old China of the shackled limb and the hopped head is going. The new China of the emancipated masses is being born. This is gloomy tidings for the exploiters of the world. It is joyful news for the oppressed peoples and exploited workers of all lands.

Two Informers Come to Town

One of the most disgraceful episodes—and certainly the most unique—in the history of the American trade union movement transpired last Friday when two high officials of the American Federation of Labor and several hired hacks arrived in New York to confer with the mayor with a view to inducing the latter to open an inquiry into the conduct of a successful strike waged by the Joint Board of the Furriers' Union against the employers in that industry.

William Green, president of the A. F. of L., and Matthew Woll, vice-president, assumed the role of stoolpigeons of a particularly odious kind when they supplied the official of a capitalist city government with information calculated to show that the strike leaders bribed police officers during the course of the strike. This is the first time that such a disgraceful incident happened in the United States, at least openly. We have seen A. F. of L. officials break strikes with hired scabs but it seems to us the limit of degeneracy has been reached when two such officials as Green and Woll scab on the fink agencies in their desire to prove their loyalty to the Wall Street bankers.

That Green and Woll could do such a thing without being chased out of town by an indignant trade union movement gives a picture of the depth to which the trade union bureaucracy has sunk and the demoralizing effect the corrupted officialdom has on the rank and file.

The ranks of the left wing of the trade union movement are many and burdensome. There can no longer be any doubt that the bureaucrats are agents of the employing class. They must be hurled from their positions by the rank and file. They must be supplanted by uncorrupted leaders with a vision for a new order of things, leaders who are ready for unending war on capitalism. And those new leaders must be supported and kept on the straight track by a well disciplined and thinking progressive movement.

Scabby labor leaders and stoolpigeons have no place in the ranks of American labor.

There is no fundamental difference between the Chinese policy of Ramsay MacDonald, Philip Snowden and J. H. Thomas and the policy of Stanley Baldwin and Austen Chamberlain, declares a writer in the New York Times; a writer who knows his tripe. They all favor defending imperialist interests there. On the same day we read in the New York Tribune that Ramsay MacDonald is planning a visit to the United States and that the more progressive members of his party are planning to relieve him of party leadership, because of this same fundamental agreement with the tory government on China.

John H. Walker, president of the Illinois State Federation of Labor, has a solution for the coal industry. It is: Less mines, less miners and more profits. But "Honest John" would compensate property owners whose mines would be forced into inactivity by this solution. For the miners he did not even propose a free burial.

He Challenged the Ruling Class

IN MEMORY OF COMRADE C. E. RUTHENBERG

By ANTHONY BIMBA.

IT was in the summer of 1917. This country was already in the clutches of the/World War. The conscription law had been enacted by congress. The militarists were working overtime to whip the nation behind the war monster. The horizon was very dark everywhere. The atmosphere was full of blood and powder. The newspapers all over the country were spreading the poisonous pro-war propaganda with full speed.

At that time I was in Cleveland. The socialists of Cleveland decided to organize an anti-war demonstration in order to raise a voice of protest against the conscription law.

It is Sunday afternoon about 2 o'clock. I hurried to the public square on West 24th Street.

* * *

I was on time. The workers are just beginning to pour into the square. The square itself is very picturesque; on two sides it is surrounded by brick walls. On the other two sides are streets, along one of them a street car is running. I see many policemen and cossacks, dozens of them, surrounding the square from two sides. The horses of the cossacks are very impatient. Their masters are also very serious . . . They are awaiting their chance . . .

Hundreds of workers, men women and children, continue to pour into the square. It is filled . . . and still more people are arriving. There is no more place on the square, every inch is occupied. The police would not permit anyone to stand on the street.

The enormous crowd is very quiet. No provocation of the police can excite it. It understands the occasion and knows its purpose.

Comrade Alfred Wagenknecht opens the meeting. He briefly explains the aim of the demonstration. Then he introduces the speakers. If my memory is correct—Baker and Clifurd spoke. They received some applause.

But I noticed on the faces of those around me that they are expecting somebody else to address them, to lead them in this great fight, to encourage them, to point the way out of the horrors of war. They knew that there is a man in Cleveland who never failed them before and will surely not fail them now in this crisis. He must speak today. . . .

Comrade Wagenknecht speaks: "Comrades, we have a man with us who needs no introduction. Every one of you all know him very well. The next speaker today is Charles E. Ruthenberg, the candidate of the Socialist Party for mayor of . . ."

He could not finish his sentence, or, at least, I could not hear him finish it. It seemed that the whole square was shaking from the applause of thousands of men and women. They clap their hands, they shout and sing as loud as they can, they wave their hands and handkerchiefs, some of the handkerchiefs are red . . . I push thru the crowd still closer to the platform of the automobile from which the speakers are addressing the demonstration. I am very close to the platform . . .

I see a finely built figure arise . . . It is Comrade Charles E. Ruthenberg . . . That was the first time in my life that I saw him. Who I had been a member of the Socialist Party for quite some time, did not have an opportunity to see him . . . He moves his head slowly from one direction to another and surveys the audience with his half-closed, but far-seeing and piercing eyes. His face is radiated with an ever-present smile, but his forehead is wrinkled, he is very serious . . . I forgot myself and the audience entirely. My eyes and my mind are on this wonderful man. He raises his hands indicating the great audience stop the applause and permit him to speak . . . A few seconds passed and absolute silence embraced the square. He glances around more and more. Then he speaks. . . I admire his voice. Everybody can hear each word. . . .

He is a giant. . . . His personality, his smile, his voice, his thoughts, the very simplicity of his speech captivate the audience. They could not help but listen to what he has to say to them.

"My friends and comrades," says Comrade Ruthenberg, "this is not a war for democracy. This is not a war for freedom. It is not a war for the liberties of mankind. It is a war to secure the investments and profits of the ruling class of this country. . . . The only reason we are in this war now is because it is to the interests of the ruling class, the capitalist class of this country wants to have us in this war . . . The capitalists were ready and willing to send the youth of this nation into this horrible nightmare of murder, to kill and to be killed, in order that their profits might be conserved. . . ."

He told the audience that the American capitalists made over five billion dollars of profit from the war already and when the German submarines threatened to put an end to the exportation of ammunition to England and France, they dragged the country into war. Then he described the horrors of war by telling a story of a youth who came back from war maimed and crushed. This youth was told that to kill human beings in war is a heroic deed. His mother wanted for him to become a hero, wanted to salute him for his bravery, for his patriotism. "But the young man laid his head down in her lap," says Ruthenberg," and put his face on his hands and began to weep," he said: 'Mother, I cannot think of it. I cannot think of the look on that young man's face—young man just as I, a young man who might have been a happiness and joy to me—when I put that bayonet in him and took his life away from him. Do not talk to me about the glory of the deed. Do not talk to me about the bravery of it. It will be the curse of my life for the rest of my days that I murdered a human being thus.' That is what conscription means to the youth of this nation."

Then he appealed to the audience to get rid of the bourgeois government and abolish the conditions which make war possible.

"We must organize our forces to meet the murderers of mankind," Ruthenberg shouted to his listeners. "We must organize our power to alter this situation. . . . We are here to fight to the end, to end this condition in the world, to build a new society, to build a new spirit in the world, to end wars, to end murder, to end suffering, to end the destruction of millions of lives and billions of wealth, and bring into existence a new comradeship of the future, a brotherhood which must inspire the hearts and minds of all men, in which we will have fraternity and equality, and in which for the first time the people will be endowed with those inalienable rights of life, liberty and happiness which the Declaration of Independence says are fundamental rights of every human being. We ask you to stand with us. We ask you to work with us to achieve this beautiful goal of Socialism, the brotherhood of man—the ideal which never before, rings out in the world the cry of the poet of the social revolution:

"Come shoulder to shoulder
Ere the world grows older.
The cause spreads over land and sea.
Now the earth shaketh and fear awaketh,
And joy at last for thee and me."

"Joy at last for thee and me—of the working class, because for the first time, they will come into the world this new spirit of love, of equality, fraternity, and happiness and peace."

* * *

Thus he concluded. It was a great anti-war speech. It is true that he did not deal with the theory of the question. He went directly in the hearts of the audience composed entirely of workers. He pleaded with, he appealed to them, he painted to them the horrors of war, he asked and urged them to organize themselves and overthrow the ruling class.

Again a great demonstration took place; applaudise, shouting, waving of hats and handkerchiefs. The automobile began to move. Comrade Ruthenberg waved his hat to the crowd. They responded with great enthusiasm. Hundreds of us followed the automobile for blocks, and then finished the demonstration with a mass meeting at the party headquarters.

If I am not mistaken, either for the same speech or for a similar one, made in some other place on the same subject, Comrade Ruthenberg was arrested, convicted and served ten months in prison.

This great anti-war demonstration lead by our beloved, fearless leader, is still fresh in my memory.

HYMAN SHOWS UP SUPPORTERS OF SIGMAN'S SCABS

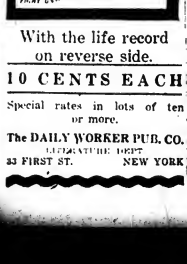
ReactionaryTries toFire Workers But Cannot

Louin Hyman, manager of the Joint Board declared yesterday that the "threat of the International to throw workers out of the shops because of their refusal to register or for their activities on the picket lines, will frighten nobody, and the Joint Board will continue to defend every worker, if necessary by calling strike."

He pointed out that "Sigman has mentioned a few shops where out of 50 workers only a few have refused to register but he has forgotten to mention the many large shops where only a few have gone to the International to register in Sigman's fake union."

Answering Sigman's declaration that no steps had been taken against workers who refused to registered up to this time he said: "That more workers were not discharged for this reason was not due to the generosity of Sigman who has hired gangsters to assault and beat up and knife the workers loyal to the Joint Board. At the present time there are under arrest for assault of our pickets gangsters who have criminal records for offenses ranging from hold ups to white slavery and who have served prison sentences for those crimes.

"These are the henchmen of Sigman, and his lawyers defend them in the courts and the International uses the money it gets from workers to furnish bail for them.



"The reason that more workers have not been deprived of their bread and butter at Sigman's instigation was that the employers have refused to take his orders, since there are so many thousands of workers who refused to register that their discharge would have meant the wrecking of the industry. If Sigman and the employers begin to send down workers in the Joint Board will declare strikes, and even call strikes against shops that discharge for that reason."

Scabs Support Sigman.

Mr. Hyman also commented upon the statement of Sigman that the I. Greenberg shop had voted to give a day's pay to the International and had paid dues twenty weeks in advance. "This shop is one of the worst sab shops in the industry," he said. "In the last strike it was scabbing the entire time. Half of its workers would pretend to picket while the other half worked, and then they would change places.

STEAM SHOVELMEN MERGED IN STEAM ENGINEERS, AMALGAMATION OF IMPORTANT UNIONS EFFECTED

WASHINGTON (FP).—By a large majority the membership of the Steam Shovel and Dredgemen's International Union have ratified the merger agreement with the International Union of Steam and Operating Engineers, negotiated at Chicago in January, President Welch and Secretary Langdon of the Shovelmen announced at Washington headquarters after a canvass of the vote. Their union will be amalgamated into the Steam and Operative Engineers on April 1.

This action disposes of a jurisdictional dispute which has continued since 1916, and which resulted in suspension of the shovelmen from affiliation with the American Federation of Labor due to their failure to amalgamate with the larger body.

Close One Headquarters.

Headquarters of the shovelmen in the Machinists' building in Washington will be closed. Welch and Langdon will be given positions in the steam engineers' headquarters in Chicago. Officers of the seven districts of their union will serve until the end of the terms for which they have been chosen.

The steam and operative engineers are paying dues to the A. F. of L. on 29,000 members. The shovelmen claim 11,000 members. This amalgamation is expected to remove a source of weakness in the building trades, where jurisdiction over excavation work has been disputed, and is counted on to strengthen the union in its attempts to organize all steam shovel work on highways and mining operations.

WORKER SCHOOL JOURNALISM GOOD

The two stories below are the work of pupils of the Class in Advanced Labor Journalism of the Workers School. They are good stories. Two subjects of great interest to workers are treated in a concise and readable manner. The story dealing with the ruin of a worker's health by conditions in a chair factory is tha most spectacular of the two but both are good examples of workers' journalism.

CHAIR-MAKING RUINS WORKERS' HEALTH

By JACK GLASS (Worker Correspondent).

Lunch time. As usual we chatter while eating.

This time the conversation turned out to be very interesting. A worker about 35 years of age, married and having a few kids, works for $27 a week as a packer. It's hard work having to make heavy bundles, pack them and ship them and without any assistant.

The conversation was on the low wages we were getting.

I asked him, "Say Mike, how is it that you can get along on such a few dollars?"

"I have to," he replied. "It's a long story, but if you want me to tell it to you, here goes.

Rosy Outlook At First

"When I came to the United States I get a job in a chair factory. The factory is somewhere on East 50th St. We worked piece work and were making as much as $15 to $60 a week. I was more or less of a carpenter and my duty was to drill. I had to hold the drill against my stomach and drill day in and day out.

"The first few days were not so bad. I was strong and healthy My relatives envied me. I, a 'greenhorn', was making so much money while they, 'Americans,' were making as little as $25 or $30.

Hard on the Stomach

"A few weeks at the job and I began to realize that I worked about 10 or 11 hours a day and 6 days a week. I also began to feel a pain in my stomach. At first I thought it was the buttons on my shirt and underwear. I tore the buttons off but that didn't help. As a matter of fact I became worse and worse every day.

"Our lunch hour was over as soon as we got through eating, usually from 10 to 20 minutes. I took about 10 minutes to swallow my sandwiches. I began to eat less and less, not because I wasn't hungry but because the food wouldn't go into my stomach. It got stuck as soon as it reached the stomach. I had to take a very small bite and then a drink of water in order to wash down the bread. By the time I left I couldn't eat at all. I ate about one sandwich and three bottles of water with it.

"Frequently when through eating I used to vomit. I noticed that I wasn't the only one. Some used to vomit blood. Big stresses and lumps of blood came out of their throats.

Health Ruined

"In the department where I worked I used to see at least one new face every day and of course an old one disappear. I found out the reason later when I was fired for not putting out enough work.

"I worked there for about 6 months and hardly missed one day. I used to come in to work sick, tired and discouraged at finding this 'free country' so damn rotten. The factory was dirty, filthy, no air, windows were never washed, floor very seldom wet. The toilets were indescribable. Nobody ever used it there except when vomiting. It's a wonder that many of us didn't faint in there. The toilets were cleaned about once a week when they should have been cleaned at least every day.

"All that I was fired. I was taken to the hospital, where I spent a few months. Spending all the money I had saved, borrowing some from relatives I left the city and went to work. I pulled through all right but my stomach is still wrinkled and at times I feel a pain.

"It took several lunch periods for Mike to tell me this, since we have only half an hour for lunch. He has been living on $27 a week or less for about a year and a half now so on, two and a half months in the bargain

NEGRO WORKERS SOLD BUM HOUSES

(By a Worker Correspondent.)

Many workers trying to find relief from high rents in the city, go to the suburbs. If they come to South Jamaica, it will be a case of jumping from the frying pan into the fire.

The district where poor people live is unspeakably ugly, with an ice plant, a city dump, a filthy ditch, an incinerator, and a steam laundry belching smoke. In a storm the streets, deep in water, are almost impassable. This is the section where most colored people live.

The Building Boom

For about a year, feverish building activity has gone on here. Hundreds of box-like, six room houses have been hastily thrown up. These jerry-built structures are made attractive by flashy paper, paint and modern improvements. The builders ask between six and seven thousand for these seven family shacks.

But they are new and so find ready and quick purchasers. In many cases the houses are sold before they are finished. An appeal is made to colored people throughout the metropolitan area. The glaver ads bring droves of colored workers out every pleasant Sunday and sales are brisk. The southernar who doesn't like a Harlem flat anyway and the northerner, oppressed by outrageous rents, needs little persuasion to buy one of these new clean shells.

Defects Concealed

However, there are a few items left out of the salesman's spiel. He doesn't mention the long distance from Jamaica's business center, the time necessary to get to the city, the cost of cleaning cesspools, and the over-crowded schools.

Colored Workers Sold Bum Houses

Two inefficiently managed car lines serve the section, but one of them breaks down in any severe rain storm. All this the hally-hoo man keeps under his hat.

Not until he has spent a winter in his fancy contraption, does the worker wake from his dream of home ownership. After that experience he realizes that installments plus carfare charges, taxes, coal, water, insurance and carfare bring his expenses up to his living rental. He wants to send an SOS call for a Harlem lodger.

But worst of all he has a bill for repairs. A year hasn't gone and he needs a new roof. After it coming through in several places and sinking the new rug. Heavens, it isn't paid for!

Dawes Plan Official Fears German Finances Slip From His Control

BERLIN, March 13.—As a result of the new German campaign against the Dawes Plan, intimated by the budget speech of the new Minister of Finance, Koehler, Parker Gilbert called on Chancellor Marx today in order, it is understood, to ascertain Germany's intentions and to urge reforms in the German financial administration which he believes will forestall a premature breakdown of the Dawes Plan.

Gilbert has been watching the new campaign with growing concern, and his visit is an effort to clarify the situation.

Gilbert especially pressed two "reforms" he has long advocated.

One is the concentration of all governmental and saml-governmental finances ih the Reichsbank, which is under Gilbert's control.

The other calls for the distribution of revenues between the Reich States and the Communes for "greater economy."

Under the present system the government distributes money to various semi-public banks, withdrawing it from Gilbert's control.

GANGSTERS WHO KNIFED PICKET HELD TO ANSWER

Tried to Break Strike At A-1 Dress Shop

Three gangsters were held in high bail and one was refused bail by Magistrate Flood in Jefferson Market Court yesterday, and ware bound over to the grand jury upon charges of felonious assault against Tony Burlo and Angelo, pickets who were stabbed near the A-1 Dress Shop, 361 West 36th Street last Wednesday.

Criminal Record.

Morris Golanback was held in $2,500 bail, Sam Schechter in $5,000 bail, and Sam Gold in $10,000 and Harry Lise, who is said to have a long criminal record, was refused bail.

Two others arrested with them, Isaac Rabbin and Henry Morris, were discharged when attorneys for the Joint Board said that they would not press charges against them since identification was not perfect and the Joint Board had no wish to prosecute men who might possibly prove innocent, although there were several witnesses.

Slash Face.

Burlo and Varen were attacked on Wednesday as they were picketing the A-1 Dress Shop, which was called on strike by the Joint Board because of the discharge of a cutter who had refused to register with the International. Burlo received a face wound requiring thirteen stitches.

Hearing on the injunction obtained by officials of Local 89 against the Joint Board was postponed to March 21 yesterday.

Meeting Called.

The Shop Chairmen's Council, in accordance with its plan for holding meetings in every section of the city to acquaint all the workers with the facts in the present dispute within the garment unions, has called a meeting in Brownsville, at Hopkinson Palace on Sunday afternoon. All workers are urged to attend.

Iron Workers Get Help Of Reading Organized Labor AgainstWageCut

READING, Pa. (FP).—J. Henry Stump, president of the Federated Trades Council of Reading has offered his assistance to the employes of the iron shop Reading Iron Co., whose wages have been severely cut in the last week.

The slashes began in the furnace department and were followed with still more drastic cuts in the finishing department. Bonus pay was eliminated and the men were required to produce as much in straight pay as they formerly produced to get the bonus. This means performing 200 operations where 100 were the basis of a day's pay before the cut. In one instance, 1,000 operations must be performed in place of 100 under the former system.

Stump is calling a trade union conference to fight wage cuts that are commencing in other industries. The effect of the cuts has been to stimulate the trade union movement and the last meeting of the central body was the best attended in years.

Big Business Struggles To Keep C. S. Law

SACRAMENTO, Cal., March 13.—With small chance for success, state senator Roy Fellon's bill for amendment of the California criminal syndicalism law to prevent imprisonment for the exercise of free speech is having its hearing before the assembly. Big business has sent half a dozen speakers to attack the amendment. Most of them accused the defenders of the bill, including David Starr Jordan, bishop E. L. Parsons and archbishop Charles Ramm of being affiliated with the I. W. W. Felion says that since the committee tabled the bill he will have it called out by resolution.

COOPERATIVE NEWS.

SWEDISH CO-OP. GREAT SUCCESS; COMPETES TRUST

Flour Mills Work Three Shifts; Win Market

Flour mills of the Swedish Kooperativa Forbundet work three shifts a day and have beaten the capitalist flour trust into second place in Sweden's trade, Rudolph Molin told the Co-operative League when visiting in New York. Molin has been making connections to market the co-operative's products, particularly art glassware, in this country.

Subsidiary Mills.

Corn mills, a shoe factory, a hog slaughter-house and two insurance companies are subsidiaries run by the Swedish co-operative wholesale. Another subsidiary makes fine glassware and pottery, following the traditional peasant hand made.

The margarine works and technochemical factory at Malmo are most interesting subsidiaries. Vitamines are segregated at the techno-chemical plant for use in the co-operatives' margarine. By agreements with private margarine manufacturers, the co-operative has brought vitamine-treatment by its rivals, thereby increasing the use of a product equal to butter in food value but at half the cost.

School for Workers.

A school for co-operative workers is held every year and a correspondence school continues from Stockholm headquarters throughout the year. Annually a delegation of a few board members visit co-operative unions of other European countries. The Kooperativa Forbundet tries to maintain the principle of neutrality within itself toward differing religious, semi or political movements.

Old Politicans Fool Labor.

NEWARK, N. J.—Last Friday the delegates to the Essex Trades Council listened to a report from the New Jersey legislative committee on bills that have been introduced which are favorable to labor. It is reported that of the 22 that have come up everyone has been shelved. Organized labor thru its local unions, was urged to protest against this treacherous and dangerous procedure of the New Jersey state politicians.

Organized labor is beginning to see thru the smokescreen of the outworn policy of "rewarding your friends and punishing your enemies", pick Bill to Protect Painters.

TRENTON, N. J.—20,000 painters are involved in a bill that has been introduced in the present session of the New Jersey state legislature. It is known as No. 333 and provides for the prohibition of the use of wood alcohol and benzol, and the labeling of paint containers so that workmen may know the poisons contained in the material they use.

"Twenty thousand painters of the state are now suffering years of life to the unregulated use of poisons in their trade," the health committee declares. "Premature death, sickness and poverty for their wives and children are the price they pay because they are given no protection under the laws of New Jersey."

Milwaukee Celebrates Paris Commune, Sat., March 19; I.L.D. Affair

MILWAUKEE, Wisc., March 13.—The Paris Commune will be celebrated Saturday, March 19, at the Finnish Gemeinde Hall, 728 Walnut Street. It has been arranged by the International Labor Defense and will include an elaborate program.

The South Slavic Singing Society and a short drama by M. Libow, "The Last Day of the Paris Commune," together with a speech by Martin Abern will be presented. It starts at 8.00 p. m., and admission will be 25 cents.

Ruthenberg's First Clash in Socialist Party Was Over Farmers' Program

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

THE day's mail brings a letter from Alfred Knutson, secretary of the United Farmers' Educational League, at Bismarck, North Dakota, with this opening paragraph:

"Just got to Bismarck and saw copies of The DAILY WORKER telling of Ruthenberg's death. This thing came so suddenly upon me that I can hardly realize it yet."

Militant farmers in the West, as well as in other sections of the country, like "Dad" Walker, of North Dakota, William Bouck, of Washington; E. R. Mottzen, of Texas, characteristic of hosts of thinking agrarians. In a multitude of states, knew the keen interest that Ruthenberg took and the great energy he displayed in unifying the struggle of the city and farm workers.

Few know, however, that Ruthenberg's first struggle in a national Socialist Party convention was for a militant farmers' program.

It was at the National Socialist Convention held in Indianapolis, Ind., in 1912. Ruthenberg had joined the Socialist Party in January, 1909. He was not a delegate to the 1910 congress held in Chicago, but two years later he was sent to Indianapolis as one of Ohio's delegates. This was the most imposing convention held by the Socialist Party in this country, marking the height of its power. The party membership had gone up over 125,000. Emil Seidel had been elected the first Socialist mayor of a large city. Victor L. Berger had been sent as the first socialist to congress. Fred D. Warren in his "Appeal to Reason" was predicting "Socialism by 1918!" Millions of votes and a host of congressmen were expected in the approaching national elections.

This was the atmosphere that spawned the attack on the extremist viewpoint held by William D. Haywood, active in the Industrial Workers of the World, resulting in the insertion of a new section in the party's constitution demanding the expulsion of those who would not toe the mark of political opportunism. It was into these surroundings that Ruthenberg came, after three years in the Socialist Party, at 30 years of age.

The convention was discussing the farmers' program that had already had an interesting history. The committee had created a furore in the gathering, organizing among the farmers themselves. The farmers had demanded real farmer representation on the committee. The convention surrendered and dirt farmers were attached to the committee, including John G. Wills, Oklahoma; C. W. Sherman, Oregon; Edward W. Theinert, Rhode Island; Jay E. Nash, Minnesota; G. W. Beloit, Idaho; I. J. Rhodes, Texas; Robert Grant, North Dakota; Dan M. Caldwell, Pennsylvania, and Thomas J. Cantrell, Idaho.

I do not remember any of these Socialist farmers as still being active in the revolutionary movement. They have all disappeared from the scene. Most of them had been drawn into the Socialist Party as a protest against the old parties. Practically all of them, however, had influence over considerable masses. In conjunction with Simons, Lee and Thompson they brought in a program more populist than Socialist, in which the revolutionary struggle against capitalism was carefully pushed into the background.

• • •

The convention proceedings contain the following:

"Delegate Ruthenberg (Ohio). I move the adoption of a new section, No. 10, as follows:

"We also point out that the above should be considered only as an immediate program, and that we demand the ultimate collective ownership of all the land used for productive purposes.

"Delegate Noble (Texas): I move to lay on the table."

Then the battle started. But is was not a struggle over the issue raised by Ruthenberg. It resulted from an effort to prevent this issue from being discussed.

Ruthenberg claimed that he had a right to the floor, as a maker of the motion, in spite of the motion to table. Jim Carey, the chairman, socialist member of the Massachusetts state legislature, claimed ignorance of any such provision in Roberts' Rules of Order.

Delegate John Spargo (Vermont), then one of the most prominent leaders in the socialist party, raised this question, "I should like to inquire in regard to the expiration of the time for debate what time it is now by the chairman's watch."

Chairman Carey announced, "In two minutes the time for debate will have expired. Comrade Ruthenberg's point is not well taken."

Ruthenberg appealed from the decision of the chairman but his appeal was turned down. But even that didn't end it. Delegate Besemer (Ohio) got the floor and merely requested that, "In order to be fair to everybody I move that Comrade Ruthenberg be allowed to read the clause in Roberts' Rules of Order, that the delegates in this convention may know whether we are right or wrong."

At this point Delegate Morris Hillquit (New York) came to the chairman's assistance with another point of order declaring that, "There is nothing before the house except the next order of business. We are not here to discuss academic questions arising on Roberts' Rules of Order."

This was the usual Hillquit subterfuge. Ruthenberg was trying to get a discussion on the opportunist character of the farmers' program before the convention. The Hillquit-Spargo-Carey combination had forced the fight over the rules of order to gag this discussion. Carey upheld Hillquit's point of order but that only brought Delegate Lewis J. Duncan, of Montana, the socialist mayor of Butte, to his feet demanding a new appeal from the decision of the chairman. The vote was taken by a show of hands which revealed a strong opposition of 83 delegates supporting Ruthenberg against the 146 delegates who voted with the officialdom.

Thus in 1912, Ruthenberg had raised the standards of class struggle in his first national socialist convention. That was the beginning of a continuous conflict with Hillquit-Berger-Spargo rule in the socialist party, in which Ruthenberg demanded that emphasis be put on the ultimate demands of socialism, thus opposing the tendency to forget the final goal completely, becoming irretrievably lost in the swamp of immediate demands.

It is significant today, however, that the program of the Progressive Farmers of America, recently organized in Minneapolis, Minn., is more militant than the socialist program adopted in 1912.

During the 15 years since 1912 Ruthenberg, fighting for the principles that gradually took an increasing leadership over the million's toilers on the land, as his opponents in 1912 have gradually disappeared. Not one member of the joint committee that brought in the Farmers' Program at the Indianapolis socialist gathering remains as a figure of any prominence in the arena of the class struggle.

James H. Maurer, president of the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor, has continued to confine himself almost exclusively to trade union activities. Ruthenberg continued to the end the champion of the broadest and deepest struggle of all who toil, which included the farmers as well as the city workers, the women and children as well as the men of labor, the Negro worker among the toilers of all other races and nationalities. Tha Ruthenberg leadership triumphed over the leadership offered by Berger, Hillquit and Spargo.

RUTHENBERG

Unerring in judgment, fearless, loyal,
Strong as steel, gifted, quick,
Courageous, standing by the cause,
Never swerving, never doubting,
Hero of the onward march!
Ruthenberg!

Steady, keen, face to the front,
Taking battle blow for blow!
Always ready, never failing;
Gladly have we followed you,
Hero of our Communist cause,
Ruthenberg!

Hated by capitalist birds of prey,
Who yet feared your martyrdom;
Hated by reaction fierce,
Death deprived them of their prey,
Hero of the earth's oppressed—
Ruthenberg!

Still we follow where you led,
Your strong spirit beckons us!
All your strength, dear Comrade dead,
Has become a part of us;
All your courage and your faith
Will guide us thru the darker days—
Ruthenberg!

ANOTHER LEGAL NOOSE FOR LABOR

The Raynes law, ostensibly aimed at habitual criminals, is certain to be used against striking workers and opponents of the capitalist system.

"YAH—GET UP, YUH BUM, YUH CAN'T DIE ON THE STREET LIKE THAT."

(Inspired by several recent stories of unemployed workers arrested for intoxication, but actually suffering from starvation.)

With Women Workers

In Shop, Factory, Home, and on the Picket Line

By ANN WASHINGTON CRATON

International Woman's Day, March 8, was celebrated with great spirit and enthusiasm at the Mass Meeting, scheduled to take place at the Central Opera House, but which was changed to the Yorkville Casino. The hall was crowded with the women of the working class, representing both the Housewives and the Trade Unionists.

Many Left Wing Leaders

It was a representative crowd of all of the prominent women in the left wing movement, whose devotion and zeal has been proved in many of labor's fights. One recognized Lena Chernenko, recently back in New York, to resume an active role in her own union, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, after a year's absence in Passaic, where she distinguished herself as a militant and valiant leader. Miriam Silverfarb was also there, the splendid work in the Pioneers in the Passaic strike endeared her to all of the Passaic children in their activities, especially at the Workers Playground.

Red Letter Slogan

There were also hundreds of other active women members of Local 22 the Furriers. Wives of both Anthony Dimin and Peter Ross Makers Union whose activities cause them to stand out in any working class gathering. The leads of all the Councils of the Housewives Leagues were present. Their spirit and slogans which were erected on red letters upon banners gave a picturesque and revolutionary atmosphere to the meeting when they were borne proudly around the hall, in a spirited procession. They proclaimed their attitude upon the Abolition of Child Labor, Better Housing Conditions at Lower Rents, Against War with China, Mexico and Nicaragua.

Historian of Passaic

The chairman of the meeting was Leonia M. Smith, who has been prominently identified with the Passaic strike, for the past year. She compiled one of the most informative and popular leaflets, which has been widely circulated and which gave the background of the strike. She has been associated with the Working Class Housewives in Passaic and New York.

Among the speakers were the leading left wing trade unionists, Rose Wortis, of Local 22 and Fanny Worshofsky of the Furriers Joint Board. Other speakers were Margaret Cowl, Rose Pastor Stokes and Mother Gitlow of the Workingclass Housewives, whose speech was enthusiastically applauded. J. Louis Engdahl of the Daily Worker, Albert Weisbord, leader of the Passaic strike, and a Young Pioneer representative also spoke.

The success of the meeting was due to the efforts of a large committee on arrangements who were responsible for providing a beautiful musical program.

The first issue of the "Woman—At Home and in the Shop," the official organ of the Council of Working Class Housewives appeared to greet International Woman's Day. It was sold at the meeting for two cents a copy. It is an interesting little sheet. Its articles deal with the most dominant questions confronting the working class woman—Homes of the Workers, Conditions of the Schools of the Workers Children, American Imperialism and the Working Woman, the Significance of International Woman's Day. It will appear weekly and should be read by all the women of the working class so that they may be well informed.

The many friends of Elizabeth Gurley Flynn will regret to hear that she is still seriously ill in Portland, Oregon. She is under the personal care of Dr Marie D. Equi, prominent woman physician, who has been actively identified with radical causes for the past twenty years. Dr. Equi has been active in the birth control movements and served a term in jail in Austion.

Miss Flynn was on a coast to coast speaking tour under the auspices of the International Labor Defense when she suffered a heart attack. Her years activities in the Passaic strike, and in addition the Furriers and Cloakmakers strikes during the same period, accentuated the strain on her heart and she is suffering besides from general exhaustion.

Has Given Much

Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, the best known and best loved woman in the American labor movement, stands in the front rank as a speaker and organizer and fearless leader. In the twenty years of her activity she has always given herself unreservedly and devotedly, so that it is small wonder that she has suffered this breakdown. She will be delighted to hear from her friends as she may be in the west for several months, until she is able to travel. Letters may be sent her in care of Dr. Marie D. Equi, Roosevelt Hotel, Portland, Oregon.

• • •

Items and notes of interest, relating to the activities of women in the labor movement will appear in this column, twice weekly. Secretaries of trade unions of women's locals or of unions in which women are represented, are urged to send notices of important meetings and events. Also information of any group development of women's organizations will be gladly received. All communications should be addressed to THE DAILY WORKER, 33 First Street.

Expounds Russell; Fired From College

The he was dismissed on the charge of "not teaching English," H. J. Chambers, an instructor of English at the University of Washington, informs the Civil Liberties Union that he was actually discharged because he discussed Bertrand Russell's "What I Believe" with his classes.

Parents are said to have complained to university officials that Chambers was assailing 'the religious beliefs of his students through the first chapter of the book, "Nature and Man." The matter was brought to the attention of Dean Thompson who declared he left it in the hands of Miss Jane Lawson, Chambers' immediate superior. Miss Lawson denies making any decision. She protests that she referred the case to Professor Dudley D. Griffith, head of the English Department, who in turn accused Chambers of "not teaching English."

To Train Future Disciples.

Young Workers' League, Conneetlcut.—"The Young Workers (Communist) League of Connecticut deeply mourns the death of Comrade Ruthenberg, who only one month ago was with us here in Connecticut. His death has left a deep gap in the rank of the Communist Party of the world. We, of the Young Workers' League pledge our utmost support to the Communist Party, and not permitting ourselves to despair, we pledge to train future fighters for the principles for which Comrade Ruthenberg stood."

"You Ain't Done Right by J. P. Morgan!" Cries Gary

—A HUMAN DOCUMENT

By SENDER GARLIN.

I learned from The New York Times the other morning that Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the U. S. Steel Corporation, had written up some of his reminiscenses of J. P. Morgan, Sr.

In the days before Gustavus Myers had turned to writing histories of "American Idealism," I had developed a rather hostile attitude toward old man Morgan. Myers' "History of Great American Fortunes," whatever its other obvious defects, had provided me with a graphic picture of the genesis, growth and uses of Morgan's fortune. Driven by curiosity concerning the real Morgan, I hastened to invest five cents in the current issue of the Saturday Evening Post, in which the touching tribute to the old pirate appears.

Red-Fellows.

Judge Gary is just the fellow to write about J. P. Morgan. Similarity of background, tastes and character makes of Gary the perfect biographer. Sympathetic insight into the motives of an individual are known to be the prime essentials for the successful and artistic piece of literature. Judge Gary's experiences as a captain of industry and as a leader of financial thought has placed him in a strategic position to understand the finer, more sensitive aspects of his hero, Morgan.

"The people of the United States," writes Judge Gary, "are reaping today where the late J. Pierpont Morgan sowed." How true! . . . "The influence of his genius . . . is impressed on our railroads, our manufacturing industries and our financial structure. . . ."

Nothin' But a Low-down Trick.

Judge Gary complains, rather petulently, that "the national habit of using the name Morgan as a synonym for wealth has caused him to be pictured as one seeking his own profit, whether or not at the expense of others."

In this article Gary brands this suspicion for what it is—a dirty, scurvy lie, a libel, a slander for which William Z. Foster is probably responsible.

"I never knew him to take hold of an undertaking," continues Gary in the same wistful, tender mood, "that did not have as its chief hope of success the immediate benefits of many, and the unending public good."

Was Fond of Horatio Alger.

In spite of these characteristics, it appears from this portrait that Morgan was bashful, modest and unobtrusive. There was no bitterness or undue antagonism in his intentions."

Even when Judge Gary begins to discuss Morgan's experiences as an exploiter of labor that his genius as a biographer is best displayed. Cool, dispassionate and with confident handling of his materials, Gary paints a tender picture.

"One very good way to gauge the caliber of the man," he writes, "is not to note his (Morgan's) treatment of his employes and their attitude toward him." We find that "he had a deep and abiding sense . . . and sometimes in the heat of argument it was gruff, but when he gave orders to his employes his tone was softer and gentler."

Beautiful!

Them was the days. No unions, not even of the "American Plan" variety. Soft, gentle voices of employers fear strikers; a friendly smile when the Chief passed. . . . Beautiful!

"It Pays to Be Decent."

At this point Gary runs out of copy on the human aspects of his hero, and goes off on a tangent. Indulging in the luxury of a few generalizations on "the personal relation in industry," the white-haired jurist suggests that "the domineering man repulses others, while the dominating man attracts them." J. P., according to Gary, belonged to the latter type.

Conscious that he is a good tack, Gary continues: "When a man domineers over those who may be weaker, or at a disadvantage, he creates anger and hatred and sows the seeds of conflict." In the steel strike of 1919, one remembers with great satisfaction that Gary studiously avoided this evil spirit of creating anger and sowing the seeds of conflict.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

Charge Lyons' Accusation Unjust

Editor, The Daily Worker: In his column "Footnotes to the News", Mr. Eugene Lyons has accused the New Playwrights Theatre of catering to frock coat critics and ignoring the labor press. This is altogether false. All the leading papers of the labor group are on our review lists, including of course The Daily Worker. It is possible that through oversight our list may be incomplete, but no labor press critic has asked in vain for review tickets.

It is true, as Mr. Lyons said, that neither the Federated Press nor Tass were on our list. That was because press and wire services are never on review lists. This was not a discrimination against labor, because we had no other news service of the sort on our list. We did not know that either Tass or the Federated Press handled anything but straight news. Personally I do not believe the Federated Press reviews plays at all.

At Mr. Lyons' request I telephoned his office and offered him two second night review tickets. Mr. Lyons was not in; I was told the message would be delivered, and that was the last I heard of the matter. We feel that first night tickets ought to be reserved for the daily papers, such as The Daily Worker and the metropolitan press, which must have reviews at once. Weeklies and, anything like a wire service would naturally go on the second night list. Our house has only 400 seats and we cannot crowd all critics in the same night.

Many of us feel that Mr. Lyons was venting a personal pique in his column. We certainly are NOT opposed to frock coats; we certainly prefer a labor class audience, as Mr. Dos Passos said in his letter to the press. Mr. Lyons' accusation is very unjust and petty. As a matter of fairness, won't you print this letter either in or near his column?

Yours very truly,
ALICE TAYSON.

State Highway Appropriation.

ALBANY, N. Y., March 13.—An appropriation of $3,000,000 would be provided for the repair, construction and reconstruction of narrow bridges on state highways, under a bill introduced in the legislature today by Senator Hewitt. The state is to pay 65 per cent of the cost of building new bridges on through highway routes.

EVEN a Tammany leader cannot always keep his cubs satisfied. Most leaders have this trouble but in political parties with a mission that rises beyond pork chops and lots of them, leaders battle for foilowers on the basis of policy. Tammany spurns such idealistic infantilities. It talks the only language its clientele understands. It talks jobs. Now, it appears that in the wigwam of one Mr. James J. Hagan, leader of the 7th ward, a revolt has flared out and a new tiger is sharpening his ivories for the old leader's jugular vein. The new leader has organized a club and thus armed is ready either to win completely or to force old man Hagan to come across with something that will satisfy the cub's hunger for power for the time being.

ONE of the principal charges made against Mr. Hagan by his rivals is that he is guilty of handing out jobs to aliens from Brooklyn, New Jersey and other lands that are to the Tammanyites of the 7th ward even as Canaan was to the Israelites. Furthermore Mr. Hagan dug up divers sons and other relatives whom he placed on a generous payroll. This filial attribute of Mr. Hagan is a good talking point for leaders of the opposition when conversing with ward editions whose sons and other relatives have not been able to connect with a salary while engaged in the pleasant occupation of collecting campaign contributions from prosperous speakeasy proprietors or counting the stars on a policeman's uniform.

ALEXANDER KERENSKY is a variety artist. Besides delivering a lecture against the Soviet Union last Sunday he also played the stellar role in "He Who Gets Slapped," the slappee being a Czarist female, now employed as a designer or artist. Kerensky is reported to have carried himself right gallantly thru the ordeal tho the acerbity of his speech was partly attributed to the application of the female glove to a chin that is trying hard to jab the atmosphere saucily after several years of disappointments. Kerensky tried his hand at prophecy but the trick is growing stale. Even newspaper reporters transferred to paper his prediction that the Soviet Union was tottering with less than their customary alacrity. Here is a prophet who is dishonored in his own country and without honor in any other.

THE favorite indoor sport these days is discussing Sinclair Lewis, who is enjoying himself in Paris or in the rural districts of England and leaving the analysis and rank of counting his royalties from his latest novel to a technical secretary. "Elmer Gantry" (not Fmil as this column for some unaccountable reason has it yesterday) is received with varied feelings but the book-buying public empties its pockets for it. Indeed, it has been suggested with some degree of justice that Lewis should turn over a certain percentage of his royalties to the church which provided him with such a remunerative subject for a novel. In the meantime critics will quarrel over the question: "What is art?" and Sinclair Lewis will wish them luck.

Sapiro Charges Ford Evades Main Issue

Irked Because Henry Is Mum About Communism

DETROIT, March 14.—Charging Henry Ford with "evading the issue," attorneys for Aaron Sapiro, noted organizer of farmers' co-operatives, this afternoon pleaded with Federal Judge Fred S. Raymond to eliminate the auto king's "plea of justification" from the million dollar libel suit brought by Sapiro.

The libel suit, growing out of a series of attacks on Sapiro in Ford's Dearborn Independent, developed into a maze of legal technicalities. Ford, however, drew first blood when the court ruled out an amendment which Sapiro's counsel sought to insert into their bill of complaint.

Calls Sapiro Communist.

In attacking the "plea of justification" in which the auto king said he would prove all charges against Sapiro, the latter's attorneys declared Ford had not defended the alleged libels in scores of instances. Two of the alleged libels, stressed by Sapiro's counsel, were statements in the Dearborn Independent that the Jewish movement led by Sapiro to control American farmers, was a Communist movement, and that other nationally-known Jews had aided Sapiro.

Otto Kahn Also Communist.

The Ford articles charged that Kahn, Bernard Baruch, Albert A. Lasker and Julius Rosenwald had helped Sapiro. It was contended by William H. Gallagher and Robert S. Marx, Sapiro's counsel, that Ford's "plea of justification" did not proffer any proof of these charges.

Charges Communist Zionism.

It was charged that the Jewish movement in America was a Communistic movement and that it was the Sapiro plan to make American agriculture Communistic, said Marx.

Ford denied that there was any intendo in the statement and denied that it referred to the plaintiff, that is not a justification of the libel.

If the "plea of justification" should be struck out, it is said, Ford would be seriously handicapped in his defense.

Ford is placed in the humiliating position, of either trying the impossible task of proving the big business man, Sapiro, a Communist, or of arguing that it is not slanderous or libelous to falsely call a man a Communist, a distasteful confession for the anti-Bolshevik Ford.

Supreme Court Upholds Face Powder Trust In Right to Set the Price

WASHINGTON, March 14. — The supreme court today denied the petition of the federal trade commission for a review of an adverse lower court decision in its effort to force the Harret Hubbard Ayer Inc., alleged to be the third largest manufacturer of cosmetics in the country, to cease an endeavor to prohibit price-cutting by local dealers.

The principles in the case, the company contended, had already been laid down in the Beechnut case.

PASSAIC, N. J., WORKERS ATTEND RUTHENBERG MEMORIAL MEETING

(Special To The Daily Worker).

PASSAIC, N. J., March 14.—More than 500 workers jammed into the Workers' Home, 27 Dayton Avenue here yesterday afternoon at a Ruthenberg memorial meeting. Most of those who were present were textile workers who recently ended the famous textile strike that lasted for over one year and obtained international publicity.

The principal address was made by Rebecca Grecht of New York City, well known speaker of the Workers (Communist) Party who addressed the assembled workers on the role of C. E. Ruthenberg in the American labor movement.

"For A Labor Party."

She pointed out his activity in fighting for a labor party, against imperialism, and the need of new elements joining the Workers (Communist) Party to try in a small measure to fill up the gap in the ranks.

That the working class must now unite its forces because the capitalist elements, fought at Ruthenberg's death, might be in an attempt to fight the whole red labor movement.

She also showed that Ruthenberg was not an isolated figure striking out blindly, but was a part of the International Communist movement that is continuing to struggle for the advancement of the working masses.

Other speakers were Ray Ragozin, also of New York and a member of

There Ain't No God, Say Princeton Boys, Shocking Press Club

Let skeptics know that knowledge creeps even into the ivy-covered walls of Old Nassau. Five hundred and fifty-seven Princeton students out of 1061 who answered a religious questionnaire formulated by C. R. Garnett, Jr., have decided that they don't believe in a God who wears whiskers and who juggles thunderbolts.

This information has shocked the Princeton Press Club which has refused to divulge Princeton's religious turpitude to outside newspapers.

WESTERN UNION RIFLE CLUB IN LIEU OF UNION

Further Extension of Company Sports

CHICAGO, March 14.—More than 2,000 workers employed by the Western Electric Company's Hawthorne plant, located just outside of Chicago participated in the sharpshooting tournament staged by the corporation.

One More Sport.

The gun play is a recent addition to the big variety of sports fostered by the company to prevent its workers from thinking along lines that might lead to trade union organization.

According to those who are acquainted with the situation, the use of sports by open shoppers, to keep their workers in subjection is a good argument in favor of labor sports unleasifying their activity.

Biggest Branch.

The Hawthorne plant of the Western Electric is the principle western production department of the electric trust. Other branches include telephone, telegraph, communication, radio, public utilities and hydro-electric production.

SILK WORKERS OF EASTERN RESIST 23% WAGE SLASH

EASTERN, Pa., March 14.—Determined to resist the policy of wholesale wage slashes instituted in December, employes of the Stewart Silk Company have gone out on strike.

The outcome of their struggle will affect the six or seven thousand workers employed in the silk mills here who have all suffered wage cuts ranging from 13 to 23 per cent since December.

Misguided by the propaganda of the employers, the silk workers have consistently refused to affiliate themselves with the silk workers' union. The Associated Silk Workers of America, however, is conducting a strenuous campaign to organize the strikers. Company papers have carried stories about "foreigners and red agitators" and have thus far succeeded in keeping the silk workers from joining the union.

The employes of the Stewart Silk Company walked out on March 3.

"Most Crime Traced To Economic Causes," Declares Hackenburg

ALBANY, March 11.—Declaring that "80 per cent of all crime can be traced to economic causes," Assemblyman F. L. Hackenburg, N. Y. C. democrat, made a fiery attack on the Baumes Crime Commission.

"The Baumes Commission," he said in a speech in the state assembly, "has made a recommendation, which, if it is enacted into law, will entirely destroy the present efficient system of probation in New York City."

Housing Report Allows Higher Room Rent

New York Governor Shows His Satisfaction

A decided victory for the New York landlords in their fight to mulct city workers out of additional rent was won for them in the recommendations found in the State Housing Board's report just made public.

While the governor's commission recommends that the Emergency Rent Laws be continued until April 1, 1928, it nevertheless, advocates that the law shall apply to all apartments renting for $15 or less a room in New York City, instead of $20 or under as at present.

False Friend.

The pretensions of the Tammany governor, Al Smith, as a "friend of the people" is once more riddled by his statement upon receipt of the report of the Housing Board in which he expressed satisfaction with its recommendations.

"Their recommendations seem fair and just to me," he said.

It is the "hope" of the board that by June 1, 1928, housing conditions in New York City will have improved from the tenants' viewpoint to an extent where the emergency laws can be permitted to die.

Landlords Encouraged.

In the meantime, whereas those paying rents on a basis of $15 and less per room, will continue to get the benefits involved in the emergency rent laws, those paying more will again be at the mercy of the landlords whose morale has been greatly strengthened by their present victory at Albany.

Pressure is now working two ways on the New York cave dwellers just below the point where the "emergency" laws begin to function, it is revealed in the report of the commission. From below, families are cramping themselves into smaller quarters, if only to find better homes, and deserting the worst houses. Construction within the past four years have been without precedent, it is reported by the body, but the relief is reached only those families able to pay the higher rental.

Poorest Suffer Most.

By its own admissions the governor's commission makes clear that the plight of the great masses of the New York workers is still as frightful as it ever was.

"The present shortage in New York," the report says, "is most in the range of $15 a room a month and below." Declaring that "the board has been impressed by the amount of over-crowding and congestion which appears to be a part of the permanent living conditions of New York City," it concludes with the startling statement that "the temporary congestion due to the emergency of 1920 and 1921 has unquestionably passed. But there still remains a condition which is extremely dangerous from the physical and moral point of view. Many individual cases were called to the attention of the board in its public hearings."

Frightful Crowding.

An almost ironic twist is given to the recommendations of the commission by its recital of evidence of extreme suffering and conditions dangerous to the public health. It quotes testimony of Dr. Louis I. Harris, Health Commissioner of New York City, who said a study made in September and October, 1926, by the nurses of the Department of Health, revealed frightful over-crowding in many parts of the city.

Indiana Ex-Governor In Prison, Gets Help Of Whole Legislature

WASHINGTON, March 14. — A petition bearing the names of 142 of the 150 members of the Indiana legislature was presented to President Coolidge today, requesting a pardon for Ex-Governor Warren T. McCray of Indiana, now in Atlanta federal prison. Gov. Ed. Jackson concurs.

Unceasing efforts have been made by McCray's friends to obtain executive clemency for him since his imprisonment.

WOODEN CARS ON INTERBOROUGH CAUSE TWELVE INJURIES IN CRASH

Wooden cars of the Interborough Rapid Transit were responsible for the injury of 12 passengers, one serious, when a five-sectioned Ninth Avenue "L" train, north bound, crashed into a rear end of a Sixth Avenue train of similar makeup at the 66th St. Station, just off Broadway yesterday afternoon.

Ready Excuse.

The official alibi of the Interborough was "slippery rails."

Scores of passengers from trains stalled south of the scene of the collision risked death on the third rails by walking the ties to the station when it became apparent that there would be considerable delay in resuming operations.

Clear Over Success.

Almost at the same moment as the accident due to the penny-squeezing tactics of the I. R. T., Fred Hedley, the president of the company, and Mayor "Jimmy" Walker were posing for cameramen and patting each other on the back in celebration of the first run of the I. R. T. trains at the new station at 7th Avenue and 47th Street.

BIG FOUR UNION LEADERS DESERT STUDIO WORKERS

Arrange Settlement in Secret; Betray Crafts

LOS ANGELES, Calif.—After an intensive organization campaign among the studio workers of Los Angeles, who embrace 75 per cent of all the workers in the motion picture industry, plans for a strike were suddenly called off by the New York headquarters of the international unions involved with the announcement of an agreement made with the producers in New York.

What this agreement is, now becomes clear after two or three months of waiting for word from New York. There is no "closed shop" guarantee, nor is there any definite guarantee of recognition of the union in this agreement. Arbitration machinery is set up to settle grievances among those workers already in the union. It is interesting to note that the producers' representative is none other than A. J. Berres, former secretary of the A. F. of L. metal trades dept., who is now on the other side of the fence.

The representatives of the "big four" unions in the Studio Workers Alliance, in return for this agreement which gives the union nothing but a "gentleman's promise," are under obligations not to permit the other crafts employed in the movie studios, of which there are many, in any organizing work.

This was brought out recently, when an international organizer of the Brotherhood of Painters, refused assistance to other crafts. There are anxious to organize in their own particular department of the studio employes. It is generally admitted that the motion pictures got by far the best of the bargain in their little deal with the union leaders, in which for a slight concession they gained the assurance that the open shop would continue to exist in the industry for some time to come

Tellez On Way Back To U. S.; Not True He Has Been Fired

MEXICO CITY, March 14.—Manuel C. Tellez, Mexican ambassador to the United States was on his way back to his post at Washington today, following his week's sojourn here, during which time he conferred with President Calles and Foreign Secretary Saenz repeatedly, presumably concerning Mexican-American relations. When Ambassador Tellez first left Washington for here it was freely reported in the United States that he had been recalled.

BREAKING CHAINS MOVIE GETS PAST LEGION'S BARRIER

Returns to Cleveland For Second Showing

CLEVELAND, March 14. — The movie, "Breaking Chains", which gives the story of the revolution of 1917, and the reconstruction period following, will again be shown in Cleveland on Thursday, March 17, at the Duchess Theatre, 5708 Euclid Ave. at which it was originally scheduled.

Upon a complaint sent in by telegram to the state movie censors by American Legion, a showing scheduled for March 3 was cancelled owing to the revocation of the license by the censors. After going through considerable red tape and a practical censorship by the American Legion, instead of the regular censors, the movie has again been passed, the only changes being in a few subtitles.

It seems that when the two reviews were made of the picture on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, there was really no reason why anything should be cut out of this film, but the censor, Mr. Riegel, had to justify his revocation of the license by merely taking out a few words from some of the sub-titles. The picture itself remains unchanged.

The second and last showing will take place on Thursday, March 17 at the Duchess Theatre, 5708 Euclid Ave. beginning at 7:00 and 9:00 p. m.

LOUISIANA JIM CROW HOUSING RULED ILLEGAL

WASHINGTON, March 14. — The segregation law of Louisiana under which white and Negro communities are established, was held invalid by the supreme court today.

Benjamin Harmon alleged that the New Orleans ordinance and the state law upon which it was based violated the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution giving Negroes equal protection of the law.

Under the New Orleans ordinance, a majority of the residents on any street determined whether it to be a "white" or a "Negro" community. A building permit was refused Benjamin Harmon on the ground that he was converting a house in a white community into a "double cottage," to be rented to a Negro.

There was no written opinion.

Millionaire's Flunkey Is Good Boy for Years Lady Leaves $100,000

Frederik Bucher, a butler, long in the employ of the late Mrs. Josephine Whitney Taylor, of Newport and New York, who died January 10, is left $100,000 outright, it was revealed today by the probating of Mrs. Taylor's will in Surrogate's Court.

Mrs. Taylor declared the bequest was "for long, faithful and devoted service."

A maid, Malvina Le Franc, is left $5,000; a sister, Fanny L. Johnson, $100,000 and Josephine Young, another relative, $50,000.

Fall of Nanking to Nationalists Imminent

Report General Chang Ready To Abandon Shanghai

BULLETIN.

LONDON, March 14.—The fall of Nanking to the Nationalists is considered imminent, according to a Central News dispatch today from Shanghai. The Nationalists are less than 30 miles from Nanking. It is reported that General Chang Tsung-Chang is preparing to abandon Shanghai and withdraw to the northward.

• • •

SHANGHAI, March 14.—The Nationalist armies are moving on Shanghai breaking their all opposition. Revolutionary propaganda is causing havoc in the ranks of the militarists and detachments of troops are going over daily to the Nationalists.

The Yangtze squadron of the Chinese navy lying off Woosang has gone over completely to the Nationalists. The squadron consists of 22 vessels which are said to have raised the Nationalist flag.

Chang Chung-Chang is seriously worried over the situation and is considering beating a "strategic retreat" northwards. In addition to other misfortunes his subordinate leaders are deserting him.

Loss of British Prestige.

LONDON, March 14.—The defeat suffered by the British when the Nationalists took over the Hankow concession has weakened British prestige in China with soldiers of north and south, and the growing confidence of the Chinese in their ability to handle the imperialist troops is considered a serious angle of the situation by foreign office officials.

The foreign office has instructed Sir Miles Lampson to send an attache of the Peking embassy staff to Hankow to keep in touch with Eugene Chen.

The recently recruited body of White Russians paraded in Shanghai last Sunday with detachments of soldiers from the warships of the imperialist powers lying in the Shanghai harbor.

Exaggerated reports of friction take place on Thursday, March 17 at among the high leadership of the Kuomintang is being circulated by Reuters, the British official news agency. The Associated Press in China depends on the British agency for its information.

Protection Assured.

WASHINGTON, March 14.—Protection for American lives and property in China has been pledged by Eugene Chen, Nationalist foreign minister, Consul-General Lockhart at Hankow cabled to the state department today.

Renew Wage Slashes in Paterson, N. J. Mill

PATERSON, N. J., March 14. — Wage slashes have begun anew in the Carfinkle and Ritter underwear factory in Paterson.

This policy comes within a week of the return of the girls to work after five weeks strike in protest to former wages cuts. The girls returned to work without an agreement and without membership cards in the I.L.G.W.U., with nothing more as a working basis than vague promises of the boss that wages would be raised and conditions improved.

Since the strike leaders have been subjected to petty persecution of all kinds, various improvements in conditions which were promised have not been made, and now to crown it all the wage slashing campaign, against which the girls struck, has been resumed.

The girls are anxiously awaiting their membership cards which the I.L.G.W.U. promised them about four weeks ago. Some of them are getting restive under the delay and wondering why actual organization is being continually postponed.

The news reports in the "New Leader" of Jan. 29, that the shop was entirely organized, are false, since not one girl in the entire shop is a member of the union.

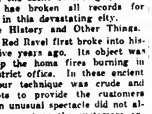
WINDY CITY IS IN WHIRLWIND OF EXCITEMENT

Red Revel to Greet New York Visitors

CHICAGO, March 14.—Despite the absence of The DAILY WORKER editorial staff, the Workers (Communist) Party has decided to go ahead with its annual Red Revel, the principal social event in this city so far as radicals are concerned.



On next Saturday evening Mirror Hall, 1186 North Western avenue will be the scene of this gala event which has broken all records for gaiety in this devastating city.

Brake History and Other Things.

The Red Revel first broke into history five years ago. Its object was to keep the home fires burning in the district office. In these ancient days our technique was crude and attempts to provide the customers with an unusual spectacle did not always pan out as the customers expected they would.

For instance: A committee of three was appointed to devise a midnight surprise. It was an intelligent committee composed of Hans Peterson, T. J. O'Flaherty and Manuel Gomez. O'Flaherty was in charge of the publicity, Peterson was in charge of the stage and Gomez was commissioned to bring the surprise along. When it came the customers fled, including Peterson and O'Flaherty, tho the guests retreated face to the stage with hands on eyes, but like Mark Twain while watching the can-can dancers, most of them looked thru their fingers. Gomez never got on such a committee again and O'Flaherty, and Peterson had a tough time restoring their reputations. Nevertheless the Red Revel was made by the incident. Even the Danes and the Finns attended the following Revel.

HE STOOPS TO CONQUER.

This is a photograph of a prominent revaller who spent all his money at the lunch counter and absentmindedly took a taxi home. When the driver learned that his fare had no money he dropped him in a vacant lot in the condition you see him in. With the aid of a pair of dumb bells and inspired by a mental picture we see the gay citizen . . . .

The Exiles May Return.

According to Arne Swabeck the following New Yorkers will be in attendance if they can get away from their duties in the Metropolis: William Z. Foster, James P. Cannon and Jay Lovestone, the boys are getting homesick and would like to have another look at Chicago before they die. William F. Dunne and Louis J. Fraina (he resigned to their fate as all editors should. As for T. J. O'Flaherty he will be obliged to enjoy the Red Revel by the exercise of a lively imagination and is looking forward to the day when the DAILY WORKER grows wheels as well as wings if the Red Revel is a financial as well as a social success there is some talk of bringing the arrangements committee to New York to teach the Gothamite a thing or two about staging Revels.

On March 17, once again we commemorate the great day in working class history when, as Karl Marx said, the French "rushed to the storming heaven." The booklet (No. 8 in the Little Red Library) is a brilliant account of that great first attempt at proletarian dictatorship.

Roving Oyster Unlike Rolling Stone Hangs On To Whatever He Grabs

WASHINGTON, March 14.—Still non-committal on the generic question of the tree-climbing fish, recently sought by former Mayor William Hale Thompson of Chicago, the bureau of fisheries today testified to the success of oysters grown on birch trees.

The latest marvel of science, the bureau reveals, furnishes a solution to one of the most troublesome problems of the oyster industry—the high infant mortality rate due to the diminishing natural oyster beds.

The life of the young oyster is carefree to the point of tragedy, for once the animal sets out on its own, it simply wanders until it catches on to something. Having once made a connection, it still grows, develops a hard shell, and thrives.

ACTION SOUGHT BY PAINTERS ON GRAFT CHARGES

New Investigation to be Used to Prosecute

By FRED HARRIS.

There have been, up to the present time, two separate investigations into the graft charges against Phillip Zausner and Charles Koenig, former officials of the New York District Council of Painters. Both reports show a shortage of the treasury funds, both admit that robberies have taken place, and yet no legal action can be taken against the culprits until a third investigation has been made. This is likely to take about three months but will give the necessary legal weapon to place into the hands of the district attorney, who will then be requested to prosecute the grafters in court.

Report Shows Shortage.

It is plain now that it is easier to catch a grafter than to send him to jail. Especially is this true where the delinquents enjoy the protection of high office holders, and are permitted to obstruct a thoro and legal procedure.

The first investigation referred to above was made at the request of local painters union 906, by the accounting firm Bail, Dworkin & Co. The report of this investigation shows a deficit of $36,000 and strongly incriminates Phillip Zausner, secretary; Charles Koenig, financial secretary; William Hartig, treasurer; as well as the trustees and the official auditor, as being responsible for misappropriation of the council funds.

Report Not Legal.

However, this report was made by an audit of the councils minutes, since the official books had been confiscated by the general executive board and taken with them to Indiana, the headquarters of the brotherhood. The explanation made for this was that the headquarters was going to make a thoro investigation and needed the books. The actual reason for moving the books was to prevent, if possible, any investigation by the insurgents. Being unable to get the books, the report has to be made from the minutes of the meetings. Since however such an investigation is not recognized by the court as legal evidence, they can therefore not be made used for immediate action.

Doyle Shields Grafters.

The second investigation made by Mr. Doyle at the request of the general executive board, is incomplete but nevertheless finds a shortage of $23,000. It further demands that the council agree to settle the case outside of the court by accepting 50 cents on the dollar for the total sum missing. This report was rejected by the council as being incomplete and not acceptable as a whole.

Can Not Explain Deposit.

Doyle's report stops at the end of August, when he had instructions to audit the books up to the date of Oct. 31. The reason for the sudden stop is, that during the month of September an investigation was already feared by Zausner, Koenig & Co., which promoted them to deposit during the month of September the sum of $12,000 with the treasury of the council.

Headquarters Submit Books.

A vigorous demand by the majority of local unions for the return of the councils books has now compelled headquarters to comply with the request, and will enable not only an investigation of not only the last two years record of the financial manipulation but for the period of the last eight years the total of the Zausner-Koenig regime.

In order therefore to bring action into the prosecution of the guilty man, the council has decided to engage another accountant and to make a complete official investigation. The report of such will then be submitted to the district attorney and to start criminal procedure through the courts. It is demanded that the full sum of stolen funds be returned, or that, in default of such, every one implicated in the graft be given full punishment, and be sent "up River".

Organize the Traction Workers

ARTICLE V. THE COMPANY UNION—UNDERHAND METHODS

By ROBERT MITCHELL.

Some of the methods employed by the company union have already been suggested. It is necessary to present the most typical examples in clearer form.

The general policy of the company union is to maintain a very definite hold on the men in order that they may be prevented from attempting other forms of real organization, but at the same time to conduct the affairs of the company union so as to provide the men with the minimum of organized power. Care is always taken that the men shall not become too active in their locals. Men, who come too regularly to their meetings are dangerous to the officials whether those officials are the owners of attraction corporations or the heads of some of the typical, reactionary labor organizations. Ask any of the A. F. of L. right wing bureaucrats! They will testify that wherever workers come together, there is the place of their power.

Dull Meetings the Rule.

As a result of this insight the company sought to make the company union meetings as listless and uninteresting as possible. It was no difficult task to accomplish this aversion. The locals have very little business to transact beyond listening to dry, meaningless reports of visits made by "nice" brothers by their delegates who seak by the reports of such activities to raise themselves in the estimation of their men.

Occasionally there are reports of the great successes achieved by the sales company tools in securing the cancellation of a suspension imposed upon an offender. The method using the company union as the agency to "straighten" out all petty difficulties is an old device of the Interborough, particularly used since the last strike. The men are, of course, fully aware of the superficial trick. They know, too, that minor offenses receive usually about twice the ordinary punishment in order that the company union may be able to intervene in behalf of the men and secure the cancellation of a day or two of the sentence. It is also well known that the company union is entirely helpless in the case of more serious offenses and in those cases there is absolutely no protection for the men against the unfair discriminations of the company.

Dunne in Numbers.

The device of isolating the local meetings as uninteresting as possible may be illustrated by a rather amusing example from the experience of the Station Department Local. Several years ago the men of this local developed an unexpected streak of militancy. This, naturally, worried the company not a little. Quite by accident, however, some of the men introduced the game of "crap-shooting" at one of the meetings. The practice became so diverting that more and more of the men began to take part. Grievances were lost sight of in the fascination of watching the rolling bones. Likewise the new interest began to pack attendance into the meetings which before this could hardly muster sufficient man for a quorum. When the numbers became too large for safety, the craze was promptly prohibiting the game at the meetings. The attendance again fell off to the earlier small numbers but in the meantime the men had been temporarily at least, diverted from their earlier demands.

Crush Militancy.

No less interesting, even if not so amusing, is an example of how the company works directly to surprass the men by means of its tool, the company union.

In the case of locals in which the men become over militant, steps are always taken to subdue them. The trait which has always had the greatest reputation for militancy is the Motormen's and Switchmen's local, the leading group in the recent strike. On one occasion when the situation became dangerous, it was decided to get rid of Ed. Lavin, fighting leader of this local and the plan was devised to have a complaint of disloyalty registered against him by the company union through Paddy Connolly its president. Ed Lavin was summoned before Mr. George Keegan, the vice-president of the company.

Lavin Speaks Up.

Almost everyone on the road has by now heard the story which is variously reported as follows:

"Now, Ed.", began Mr. Keegan, "I have been receiving bad reports about you and your men".

"What's the matter Mr. Keegan, aren't the trains running alright?"

"Yes, yes, wail, er—"

"We show up on time, keep to the schedule, send in regular reports to B. K."

"Well, you see, Ed., it's your meetings I'm complaining about, your men are too radical."

"Radical, Hell! If they were half as radical as your conditions are urging them, they would have walked out on you long ago."

"That's a pretty strange way for a delegate to be talking, Ed."

"I'm taking the part of my men. What's the business of a delegate, anyway?"

Boss Wants Quiet.

"That's what you don't seem to understand. The business of a delegate is to quiet his man down, to keep them from getting out of control."

"You're entirely mistaken, as far I am concerned. That's what Paddy Connolly may understand to be the business of a delegate. But you've got me wrong, Mr. Keegan."

"Well, Ed, a committee of your men has complained to me about you and we will have to take some action."

"That sounds pretty 'fishy' to me. There are no such men in our local. You had better come clean, Mr. Keegan, wasn't the man Paddy Connolly?"

"Wall, if you must know, then it was!"

Local Hears Story.

Lavin reported the whole matter to his local at the next meeting. He did not, however, feel like exposing Paddy Connolly so marcilessly. The men, nevertheless, suspected Paddy since they knew very well that there had been no committee from the local to complain about Ed. Seeing the sentiment of the man, Paddy Connolly cunied that he had been mixed up in the plot. The men insisted on seeing the matter through and when E. Lavin faced Keegan with his own statement, the great vice-president of the Interborough hedged from his position: "That wasn't quite the way I said it, Ed."

Workers Not Fooled.

But the workers were not deceived by such underhand tactics. Everyone understood what had been attempted. The only result was that Keegan and Paddy Connolly were both proved to be cowards and liars and that Connolly was shown up in his true light as a company tool and betrayer of his men.

In the next election, Ed. Lavin was elected by the largest majority ever received by any delegate in the local. They were afraid this time to steal the election from him.

'BUSY' BUSINESS AGENT MAKES A MERE $132 PAY

As Unemployed Hunt Jobs, He Loafs

While more than 200 members of his local are walking the streets looking for work, Dan Herrick, business agent of Local 23, Pressmens' Union, who receives $77 a week from the union, took advantage of an opportunity of making some extra money at the expense of some unemployed member of the union.

Two weeks ago the Federal Printing Co., 239 West 39th St., called up the union office and requested that they send one man for night work.

As he does not devote much time to union affairs, Dan saw a good opportunity to make some extra money. The wage of a pressman is $55 a week and when you add the $77 that he obtains from the union you get $132 a week, which is not bad for a trade unionist!

After working there as a pressman for one week, Dan was discovered and was removed from the job and suspended from the union.

He will be brought up on charges at the next meeting of the local, to be held this Friday evening.

Harry Kemp's Divorce.

Harry Kemp, Greenwich Village poet, author of "Tramping on Life," and veteran co-respondent of many divorce and separation suits, today admitted that he and his second wife, the former Frances McLernan, have separated and are planning a divorce.

Anti-Saloon League in Further Grab for Power

A further attempt of the Anti-Saloon League to control dry enforcement in the country is evidenced in the fight which begins today for the appointment of Roy A. Haynes as the new commissioner of prohibition.

While not naming Haynes, the league demands the appointment of "a commissioner who believes in the law he is to enforce," and it announces that it will try to enlist President Coolidge in the fight, which is aimed at Secretary of the Treasury Mellon and Assistant Secretary Andrews.

Haynes, the candidate of the Anti-Saloon League, is a former dry chief and now technically "prohibition commissioner."

FURRIER WRITES FROM LOS ANGELES TO SEND TAX AND CALLS EXPULSION A SHAMEFUL ACT

The ridiculous charges of right wing International Fur Workers officials that the twenty-five dollar tax recently voted by all locals was inflicted by force upon an unwilling membership, is again effectively refuted by an interesting letter which reached the Joint Board yesterday from the Pacific Coast.

Calls It Shameful.

Dear Brothers: The expulsion of the Joint Board by the International is a shameful act. I, an old member of Local 5, Ledger No. 5555, who took a transfer to Local 45 (Chicago) in 1925, and now, on account of my health am in Los Angeles, California, consider myself ideologically still a member of Local 5, New York Joint Board.

Sends Tax.

Therefore, I enclose $25 per capita tax, which was unanimously voted for by the last local meetings.

Your fight will be a successful one because you are fighting for the right cause.

Long live the pioneers of the 40-hour week in the United States!

With brotherly and comradely greetings, I remain,

Yours,
MAX SAFIER.

Robert Dunn to Give Lectures on American Foreign Investments

Robert W. Dunn, author of the outstanding work on American Foreign Investment, will give a course of three lectures at the Workers School on three Wednesday evenings, beginning March 16, on the subject dealt with in his book.

The course aims at a survey of the new position of the United States in the role of the great creditor nation of the world. Dunn will tell how this country now invests money abroad at the rate of a billion a year, and what it means finanelally and politically. He will describe the effects of this deluge of dollars upon the countries so "favored".

The role played by banks and corporations in these investment transactions, the effect of the growth of imperialism upon the American people, as well as upon the people of the industrially backward countries in which the investments are made, and the conflicts being created by our bankers and dollar diplomats, which are laying the basis for a new world war with the United States playing the central role that Germany played in the last one.

The course of the lecture on American Foreign Investments was originally scheduled to begin March 2, but has been postponed to Wednesday March 16. The fee for the course is $1.00.

They were told that no literature would be distributed there, that the De Valeralites would have none. Thots blind leaders of the dumb are as much afraid of an enlightened rank and file as was the Catholic church in the middle ages. A movement that starves the brains of its followers is hopeless.

PRESIDENT BORNO of Haiti refused permission to Senator King of Utah to enter the republic on the ground that he was "undesirable." It happens that the senator has on more than one occasion exposed the role played by the United States in Haiti and branded Borno as a puppet of the state department, a prototype of the Nicaraguan Diaz. Haiti is as much part of the American empire as Coney Island. The United States senate has indeed fallen on evil days when one of its members can be refused permission to enter part of his patrimony with the sanction of his own government.

Auxiliary of Machinists Union So Decides

(Special to The DAILY WORKER.)

ST. PAUL, Minn., March 14.—At the regular monthly business meeting of the auxiliary to the Machinists' Union, held March 8 at the Labor Temple, the members went on record in support of International Women's Day.

International Woman's Day will be celebrated by the auxiliary at its meeting on the second Tuesday of March each year, as this day comes just before or after the 8th. This meeting will be open and invitations are extended to all women in St. Paul.

An effort will be made to have the very best speakers available for this occasion to speak on the significance of International Women's Day, with the aim of bringing all women into the trade union movement to help their husbands, children and themselves toward better living conditions.

At the previous meeting of this auxiliary a resolution was passed and sent to the national office in protest against the invasion of Nicaragua, the threats against Mexico, and intervention in China.

The national office of the auxiliary has outlined an educational program for its members, and St. Paul will also participate in this, realizing that women must understand her relations to industry and the trade union movement before she can help in the fight for emancipation against slavery and capitalism.

DELEGATES MEETING AT BRUSSELS SIGN SHARP CRITICISM OF U. S.

Find That Wall St. Conducts Campaign Over Two Continents for Predatory Domination

The article printed below is part of a series written by the delegate of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League to the Brussels Congress Against Colonial Oppression and Imperialism. The congress was made up of delegates from anti-imperialist organizations, peace societies and labor unions in the European, American and other imperialist nations, from labor bodies and nationalist organizations in the colonial countries, and from subjugated races even in countries with full sovereignty.

Important resolutions were passed, for the practical carrying on of the work of freeing conquered peoples from their slavery. A survey of the work of the congress and the personalities attending, which have made it one of the great events of this era, will be found in these articles.

ARTICLE V.

By MANUEL GOMEZ

BRUSSELS, Feb. 14.—(By Mail, delayed)—Unanimous declaration regarding the tasks of American workers in the face of the U. S. imperialist policy has been made to the congress in the following joint document, signed by all members of the United States, Latin-American and Chinese delegations:

"We, the undersigned members of the U. S., Latin-American and Chinese delegations, declare it to be the task of all labor, farmer and other progressive forces in the United States:

"1. To fight side by side with the nationalists and national liberation movements of the countries under the heel of U. S. imperialist domination, for:

a. Immediate, complete and absolute independence for the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico; self-determination for all colonies and semi-colonies;

b. Abrogation of the unequal treaties making virtual protectorates of Panama, Cuba and the other countries of the Caribbean area;

c. Withdrawal of U. S. military and naval forces from Caribbean, Central and South American territory, and from China; yielding up of all extra-territorial and other special privileges.

"(2) Opposition to all attempts to use coercive force against the Latin-American nations.

"(3) Exposure of the systematically imperialistic character of U. S. foreign policy, beneath democratic-pacifist pretenses.

"(4) Giving wide publicity to the outrages accompanying U. S. imperialism in Haiti, Santo Domingo and elsewhere.

"(5) Carrying on propaganda against imperialism not only among the civilian population of the United States but also among the military and naval forces called upon to do the bidding of imperialism.

"(6) To insist upon and support strike action against the sending of troops or munitions for repressive use in Latin-America and the Far East.

"(7) To support the tendency toward Latin-American unity against U. S. imperialism; to support an intimate relationship between the nationalist movement in the Philippine Islands and the Chinese nationalist revolutionary forces.

"In the face of the present U. S. aggressions against Mexico and Nicaragua, demands must be raised for:

"(1) With regard to Nicaragua:

a. Immediate withdrawal of U. S. military and naval forces;

b. Recognition of the popularly supported Sacasa government;

c. Cancellation of the right-of-way privileges wrung from Nicaragua during a period of military occupation, for a U. S. owned canal across Nicaraguan territory; cancellation of the similarly secured leases of naval bases.

(2) With regard to Mexico:

a. Hands off Mexico; support of the national-revolutionary conquests of the Constitution of 1917; opposition to U. S. diplomatic and economic offensives undertaken in the interests of U. S. oil, mining and financial magnates against the efforts of the Mexican people to protect their resources from foreign monopolization;

b. Affirmation of Mexico's right and necessity to draw about her other countries of Latin-America against U. S. imperialism.

"We call upon the American Federation of Labor, with which the labor movements of Nicaragua and Mexico are associated, to initiate a movement looking toward concrete strike action by U. S. workers in the event that the military forces in Nicaragua are not withdrawn."

ANTI-ALIEN LEGISLATION IMPRACTICAL

TO FOREIGN-BORN WORKERS IN AMERICA

By LEON BLUMENFELD.

The American public, or to be precise, that vast multitude that is classed as alien, is this day confronted by abuses which have characterized ancient European despotism. I am referring to the sundry and obnoxious registration bills which are introduced in congress at premeditated intervals. The Hon. Messrs. Aswell, Holaday and Brand are the trio who in the past few months have attempted to create a new army of official snoopers by registering, photographing, finger-printing, etc., all aliens residing in the country.

Bills Before Congress.

At the present time congress is faced by two bills, one requiring registration, and the other permitting voluntary registration. On the face of it, the latter is impractical. It is manifest that it is deliberately intended as the for nation of a channel for permitting voluptuous, narrow-minded petty officials to victimize and mulct unknowing and unsuspecting foreigners. The foreign born worker must be cloaked with protection. The foreign born element in America is too great, too important to be given such trivial attention. To the National Council for the Protection of Foreign Born Workers, goes the task of combatting all these attempts at alien legislation.

The passing and enforcement of registration laws will add still another blot on the so-called American freedom. One of the most immediate effects will be found in the increased cost of living of foreigners and even interfere with their social tolerance. It is quite natural, consequently, that the foreign born and those derived from foreign parentage are emphatically opposed to such tyrannical legislation, which is synonymous to disaster.

Boon For Open-Shop Advocates.

The Aswell bill exaggerates its significance and purpose to a degree that places the alien faction of the working class in the category of outcasts. By employing vile tactics such as thwarting and intimidating, this bill intends to disable foreign workers for the labor struggles.

Recently a precedent has been set by Judge Busdick of California to the extent that any judge can outlaw a labor organization by an injunction. This, of course, makes for the alien laborers membership in any labor union a crime punishable by two years imprisonment a fine of $5,000 and deportation. Can you grasp the meaning of this? It means that a worker who has worked continually for years, raised a family, has furnished a home, can be taken from his family, stripped of all his savings, thrust behind bars for two years and deported.

The following are a few of the results that would be the outcome if the Aswell bill shuld become a law:

1.—A national rogues' gallery will be established, the purpose of which will be the recording of names, data, fingerprints, photographs, etc., of every one who has not had the distinction of being born in America.

2.—Every American consulate in foreign countries will be transformed into an agency for the hiring of strike-breakers.

3.—A yearly tax of from $3 to $10 for the first year and $5 the following year on all adult aliens will be imposed.

4.—It will mean the hounding to death of all aliens, or all alien-appearing people, or for the matter, any one the "payroll hounds" accuse of being an alien.

In Basic Industries.

Miss Cicely Applebaum in an article in the current edition of "Labor Age" puts the situation like this: "The coke ovens of Steltton are manned by Hunky, Slav, Polack and Eyetalian! The open-face is no longer John but Giovanni and Jan. In all the basic industries iron and steel manufacture, slaughtering and meat packing, bituminous and coal mining, woolen and worsted manufacturing, cotton goods manufacturing, leather manufacturing, furniture manufacturing and oil refining, foreign-born workers form a majority of those at work.

"A new moustache is probably intended to mask nefarious activities. A move from the slums to a better neighborhood indicates a desire to spread propaganda among a new group, easily influenced by revolution."

When the late President Harding was alive, he approved of the registration of aliens as a measure which would prove effective in weeding out those who had entered the country illegitimately.

To date President Coolidge has not yet indicated what the policy of the administration would be in respect to such a measure, but his secretary of Labor, Hon. James J. Davis, has shown favor to various measures of a similar tenor.

Crooked Bankers Hang In Russia, Get Gravy Here, Says "Advocate"

ST. PAUL (FP.)—March 14.—The Minnesota Union Advocate, official organ of the St. Paul and Minnesota organized labor, noting that bankers don't enjoy the same privileges in some places abroad that they have in Minnesota; says:

"Press reports state that seven bankers and employes in Russia have been sentenced to hang for accommodating their friends to the disadvantage of the co-operatives and the government.

"In Minnesota when the bankers accommodate their friends with the funds of the depositors and wreck the bank they are promoted to a position in the federal reserve system. The Columbia Holding Co. and the Capital Trust & Savings bank are good examples of the American system."

Naval Officer Begins To Extract Gold From Cemeteries of Panama

Reports of hidden treasure in Panama City have led Lieutenant George Williams, R. N., to start an investigation of ruins and cellars and ancient monasteries where wealthy natives may have hidden their valuables when the city was sacked by the pirate Morgan in 1665.

Armed with a gold finding device, which he says helped in the successful recovery of the precious metal on the Laurentic, sunk by the Germans in 1917, Lieut. Williams has already located jewelry and other ornaments, and he has also discovered a hidden cemetery.

By an arrangement with the Panama government, one-fourth of what he finds goes to the government, in exchange for a concession he began to work in January. He expects with the help of his instrument, to locate considerable treasure.

Stock Exchange Sends Employes to Learn Art Of Conquering Mexico

Declaring that the New York Stock Exchange has set a fine example in permitting its younger employes a full thirty days' vacation in order that they could attend military training camps, Nathan H. Lord, president of the Stock Exchange Institute, appealed to all employers in the metropolitan area to go and do likewise.

Lord said that this was a fine opportunity to give the working lads a healthy vacation and at the same time do a good turn for the war department of the U. S., an institution which has done much for the stock exchange.

American Junkers Start Plane to Paris

The American Legion will spend $100,000 on the airplane trip of Commander Noel Davis from New York to Paris in June. The flight will be in the nature of an unofficial advance unit of the Legion in its trip to Paris for its annual convention. It is believed that members of the Legion will be asked to subscribe to a fund to be used for exploiting the flight. Delegates in the convention expect a "hot time" during their stay in the metropolis of France.

WISCONSIN LABOR FEDERATION RAPS KELLOGG'S POLICY

Not for Intervention in Mexico or China

MILWAUKEE, Wisc., March 14.—The General Executive Board of the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor adopted the following resolutions and instructed the secretary to send them to the proper authorities at Washington, D. C.:

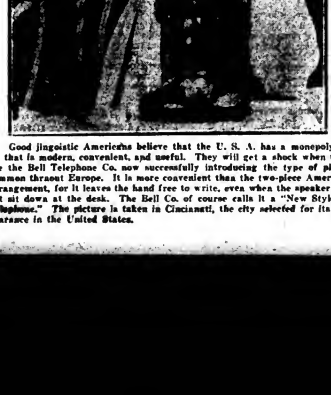
WHEREAS, The workers of Wisconsin, in local groups and in representative conventions, have repeatedly expressed themselves against wars of aggression and conquest, and have voiced their opposition to governmental employment of the resources of our country, the welfare and the lives of our people, in pursuance of a policy of armed aggression against other nations in behalf of privileges of profits and in disregard of human rights; and

WHEREAS, The U. S. government has within the last two years, invaded with armed forces the domains of friendly peoples of Nicaragua, Mexico and China, under the guise of "protecting American interests," but obviously with the intent to force these nations to comply with the demands of sinister corporations of capital for a free hand to exploit the resources and the lives of the peoples of these nations; therefore be it

RESOLVED, In conformity with the long established policy of the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor, to promote peaceable relations and good will, that we protest the unjustifiable imperialistic attitude assumed by the United States government toward certain foreign nations notwithstanding our professed doctrine of self-determination of nations, in interfering with their internal affairs and exerting the powers in behalf of sinister private interests, in whose favor the peace of the world in that being risked; and be it further

RESOLVED, That we urge upon our representatives in congress to exert every effort to terminate the armed invasion of foreign lands and to require the government to function in the spirit of democracy and thus serve the people of the nation in their aspirations for a lasting peace and to avoid entanglements in such foreign wars and peace complications.

Rhinehardt Show For New York



LONDON, March 14.—It was learned here today that Max Reinhardt, producer of many Berlin successful mirthquakes, has completed arrangements for returning to the United States probably next winter where he will rent a large Broadway theater for part of the season.

Otto Kahn has promised to finance the project. Reinhardt intends to take with him a German cast who can perform in German, English and pantomime. Moreover, he proposes to seek several unknown American actors and actresses whose talent will be developed for the forthcoming productions in New York.

You Can Live To 103.

EVERETT, Mass., March 14.—Mrs. Abby Loveland Tuller, oldest resident of greater Boston and this city, celebrated her 103rd birthday today. Except for being slightly deaf, she retains all her faculties. She is a native of Hartford, Conn., and remembers Lafayette's visit. She has a son and a daughter, her husband died twenty years ago.

ADOPTING EUROPEAN PHONE

Good jingoistic Americans believe that the U. S. A. has a monopoly on all that is modern, convenient, and useful. They will get a shock when they see the Bell Telephone Co. now successfully introducing the type of phone common thraout Europe. It is more convenient than the two-piece American arrangement, for it leaves the hand free to write, even when the speaker can not sit down at the desk. The Bell Co. of course calls it a "New Style of Telephone." The picture is taken in Cincinnati, the city selected for its appearance in the United States.

William Pickens Will Speak at the Harlem Open Forum, Sunday

William Pickens, Field Secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, who recently returned from a visit to the Soviet Union, will speak at next Sunday's Harlem Educational Forum on "What I Saw in Russia."

The Forum is located at the Utopia Neighborhood House, 170 West 136th St., and starts at 3:30 p. m.

Sunday, March 27, the speaker will be Scott Nearing, who will discuss "Dollar Diplomacy in Nicaragua and Mexico."

Russian Princess May Hate to Wed Out of Her Class, But She's Broke

Russian royalty, in the person of Princess Nathalie, daughter of Grand Duke Paul, an uncle of the late Czar of Russia, is condescending to a marriage with a business man, so it is rumored in Paris.

The prospective groom is Lucien LeLong, the inventor of Kinetic clothes, who runs a Paris dressmaking establishment in which the Princess has been a saleslady in the perfumery department.

It is understood that the Princess' mother is making the customary objection to accepting a non-royal son-in-law, but it is not expected that her opposition will be more than formal since LeLong is estimated to be worth about 30,000,000 francs.

This event will have to wait until LeLong's decree of divorce from his present wife is granted.

Sacasa Envoy Calls Policy of America a "Barbarous Sport"

WASHINGTON (FP.), March 14.—American intervention in Nicaragua has become a barbarous sport for American investment bankers, but a sport "framed" in advance as to who shall win when all the victims have shed their blood, says Dr. T. S. Vaun, agent in Washington for the Sacasa liberal government. This statement deals with the sending of 175 marines, with a field gun and machine guns, to Matagalpa, where the Sacasa forces were about to occupy.

Latest "Neutral" Zone.

Matagalpa is the latest neutral zone," says Vaun, situated some 70 miles north of the railroad lines, in the mountains. Evidently it has no bearing on the purpose to keep open the line of communication between the American legation in Managua and the base at the port of Corinto, which was the explanation for the most recent landing of marines.

"The neutral zone has a double edge. It keeps the Constitutional (Sacasa) forces from any desired military position and also releases from that position the Diaz soldiers, so that they may outnumber Moncada's (Sacasa) troops, saving the marines from the necessity of actually having to assume the task of destroying the Constitutional armies.

Decided to Advance:

"A barbarous sport, this setting of Nicaraguans to fight, when the final result has been decided in advance at the inner councils of American interventionists. Our prudish civilization rants against bull fights in deference to the poor horse, but this inhuman slaughter seems to find plenty of delighted fans among certain powerful money makers. These so-called investors engineered the frame-up. The ferment of revolt was allowed to spread and develop. Hopes of success that might have been crushed easily at the beginning were encouraged. The slow process of arming the people was permitted to go on. The struggle has been protracted and yet all could have been averted in the beginning with less harm to the dignity and sincerity of the interventionists and very little cost to the intervened.

"At this very moment, I am informed unequivocally, Diaz and his few partisans would have reached a peaceful agreement with the Constitutional defenders if they were allowed to do so. It may be that the greater the destruction and ruin of these poor people of Nicaragua, the easier it would be to justify more profitable and further-reaching measures to 'rehabilitate' the devastated little country."

Los Angeles Workers To Celebrate Commune

LOS ANGELES, March 14.—The brave struggle of the Paris communards will be celebrated by members of the Workers (Communist) Party and the Young Workers' League at the Music Arts Hall, March 20.

The Freiheit Gesangverein, the Juniors' Orchestra and violin selections by Helen Ajroff will be some of the features of the elaborate program which has been prepared for the celebration.

William Schneiderman, representing the Young Workers League and Tom Lewis and Malcolm Bruce, representing the Workers (Communist) Party, will be among the speakers.

ESTRADA TRIAL INDICATES U. S. OIL MEN'S PLOT

Filibuster's "Army" to Pave Way for Marines

By WILLIAM SCHNEIDERMAN.

LOS ANGELES, March 14.—The trial and conviction of General Estrada, former Mexican minister of war, for violation of the U. S. neutrality laws in attempting to cross the border into Mexico with an "army" of 125 men, has come to a close in Los Angeles. Estrada was sentenced to imprisonment for one to one and a half years.

The peculiar circumstances of this "revolt" which was nipped in the bud indicate that this was more than a mere attempt at counter-revolution in Mexico, although it is known that Adolpho de la Huerta, who openly carries on his propaganda against the Mexican government from his Los Angeles headquarters, was undoubtedly in sympathy with Estrada.

Making An Incident.

Estrada's plan was to cross the border, seize an unnamed Mexican town nearby, and confiscate enough money from the gambling joints to finance his "revolt" and extent it further into Mexico.

As these gambling houses are almost entirely owned by wealthy Americans, one can easily see behind the plan. It merely would serve as an excuse for intervention on the part of the American government, whose justification would be the now famous and familiar phrase "protection of American lives and property."

Who Backed It.

The Estrada affair smells strongly of being "fixed." The source of the financial backing for Estrada's army has never been revealed, although an American firm in San Diego furnished the miniature "army" with the necessary military equipment. There is very good reason to believe that Estrada was backed by the same American interests which are responsible for "our" government's row with Mexico.

This suspicion is strengthened when it is pointed out that the notorious Mr. Doheny, who, together with that other "oil patriot," Mr. Harry Sinclair, owns oil concessions in Mexico, carries on his business affairs in Los Angeles.

Seasoned Mexican revolutionists find it hard to believe that an army of 125 men would seek to invade Mexico on any other pretext.

"SHARPER THAN WORDS--"

"More Effective Than Argument"

By A. JERGER

The new second volume of

RED CARTOONS OF 1927

The popularity of the first volume of RED CARTOONS (1926) has brought about the second volume of over seventy new cartoons and drawings by the leading American working class artists.

All your old favorites are included—with the work of six new artists:

FRED ELLIS, BOB MINOR, ART YOUNG, WM. GROPPER, LYDIA GIBSON, BECKER, AJERGER, VOSE, A. HERS, HAY BALES SUYANTO, GELLERT and others.

Sequoyah Mexican revolutionists find it hard to believe that an army of 125 men would seek to invade Mexico on any other pretext.

"The Cartoon represents a kind of snapshot logic that often is sharper than words, and more effective than argument"

Says the Introduction by

V. F. CALVERTON

Editor

of the Modern Quarterly

"The Cartoons are cartoons of social meaning and economical significance. They are conceived in the spirit of the class struggle and devoted to the definite purpose of class propaganda."

The Responsibility for Chinese Massacres.

Admiral Latimer, an American naval officer, commander-in-chief of the battlefleets of the imperialist powers in Chinese waters by virtue of superior rank, the foreign residents of Shanghai, armed and organized in military units parading daily thru the streets, trenches and barbed wire entanglements extended far beyond the boundaries of the foreign settlement with the forces manning them steadily increased, a steady barrage of provocative propaganda in the imperialist press, the People's Armies marching steadily toward Shanghai, demoralizing and defeating the militarist troops upon whom the imperialists have been depending—the labor unions and Chinese civil population of Shanghai enraged by the murders and financial exactions of the Shangtung forces and ready to aid the People's Armies in every way possible—this is a birds-eye view of the present situation in and around the largest port in China.

North and west the army of Chang Tso Lin is meeting resistance from the forces of Wu Pei Fu, who has apparently made up his mind to aid the People's Armies in preventing the advance of Chang along the line of the Tientsin-Hankow railway line. The fall of Nanking is expected any day now by even the most optimistic of the foreign correspondents and the much over estimated Chang Tsung Chang has been forced to extend his troops over a front which he cannot defend.

Lately the imperialist press has been speculating joyously over a rumored split in the ranks of the Kuomintang (People's Party) but the recent public announcement by Commander-in-Chief Chang Kai Shek to the effect that he supports the republican revolutionary wing of the party which leads the workers' and peasants' movement has dampened the imperialist hopes in this direction.

News coming from all sources emphasizes the continued extension and consolidation of the People's Government behind its armies and the spread of trade union and peasant organization.

In the face of these facts the refusal of the imperialist powers to recognize the People's Government is tantamount to a declaration of war and it is in this light that the show of imperialist military and naval force in and around Shanghai must be viewed.

Withdrawal of all foreign armed forces from China and recognition of the People's Government is the most important demand to be raised by the world's labor movements. The action of the British Communist Party is an example for the rest of the world's working class. It has placed the responsibility for the recent massacres in Shanghai squarely upon the shoulders of the British government. All imperialist governments share in this responsibility and the working class in the respective countries will insist on placing the blame where it belongs.

As long as a single foreign soldier or warship remains on Chinese soil or in Chinese waters the imperialist powers cannot escape this responsibility.

Borno Barks

When President Borno, the particular specimen of colonial depravity that the state department has picked for its figurehead in Haiti, visited the United States last year he was met with an outburst of popular indignation. Haitian exiles met him at the dock and wished him everything but luck. The liberal press exposed him and hinted quite openly that without the bayonets and machine-guns of American marines to protect him the Haitian population would make him the sole entrant in a long distance Caribbean swimming contest.

But President Coolidge entertained this Haitian Judas, had his picture taken with him and in general placed the stamp of official approval on this gold braided jumping-jack of American imperialism.

Settled by the exposure of Borno the state department is taking its revenge. Senator King, whom no one, least of all us, will ever accuse of radical tendencies, has been denied permission to visit Borno's domain. It seems the senator from Utah once said some unkind things about conditions in Haiti. He said them in the senate but Borno, backed by the state department, seems to be above the senate.

We await anxiously the next move in the game. If the American labor leadership has one spark of vitality left it will make use of this incident, the mass murder of Cuban trade unionists, the invasion of Nicaragua, the attempt to browbeat Mexico, and the host of other incidents of state department control of the constitutional machinery, to start an offensive against Wall Street government that will give new life to the whole labor movement.

Putting a Punch Into the Rent Law

Running true to form the rent law commission and Al Smith have greatly strengthened the position of the landlords. It is true that the provisions ostensibly prohibiting a rise in rents of rooms priced at $15 per month and less have been extended for one year but the official barrage laid down on tenants who have insisted on their rights under the law is an indication that no rigid restrictions will be enforced against the rackrenting fraternity.

The formal extension of the law, however, makes it easier for tenants to organize to resist exactions and it is only by this method that the law itself can be made of any real value.

As it is the law merely acknowledges the existence of horrible housing conditions in working class districts. Mass organizations of tenants, initiation of rent strikes, exposure of actual conditions, a united front of trade unions, working class fraternal societies, housewives' leagues, etc., will compel enforcement of the formal provisions of the act.

Forge the Iron Unity of the Party!

THE District Executive Committee, District No. 8, Chicago, mourn the loss of the leader of our Workers (Communist) Party and of the working class, Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg. We pledge to follow in his footsteps. We pledge to carry out his last will; to close our ranks, to meet unitedly the attacks of our enemies, to fight on and to win the struggle against the most powerful imperialism. In the course of this struggle we will mobilize and lead the great masses of the American working class, as he taught us to mobilize and lead them to final victory.

His untimely death has left a gap in the ranks of the revolutionary working class movement which was hitherto filled by a comrade and leader in the struggle whose integrity, rebel courage, determination, fearless adherence to the principles of cause of Communism earned for him and our Party the respect and following of broad sections of the working class.

We pledge our solid support to the Central Executive Committee of our Party in their great and difficult task, made more difficult thru this irreparable loss.

We pledge to build our Workers (Communist) Party, the American section of the Communist International, and to draw thousands of new revolutionary recruits into its ranks, for only in this way can we fill the loss our Party has suffered thru the death of Comrade Ruthenberg.

Comrades of District No. 8! Close your ranks, forge the iron unity of the Workers (Communist) Party. Forward with closed ranks under the leadership of our Central Executive Committee and of the Communist International to new struggles and to final victory.

Long live the leader of the world revolution, the Communist International!

Adopted unanimously, Arne Swabeck, general secretary.

Workers in Pledge to "Carry On"

Lettish Bureau Expresses Sorrow.

THE executive council of the Lettish Fraction Bureau expresses its deep sorrow at the loss of the leader of our party and the revolutionary working class, Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg.

Comrade Ruthenberg was one of the few American Communists who quickly learned to understand the Bolshevik principles and policies which came into prominence during the Russian revolution. He taught the American Communists how to apply Bolshevik policies to American conditions.

He relentlessly fought against all right and left deviations from the clear cut Bolshevik line.

Comrade Ruthenberg was a true working class leader in every bitter fight.

He led the fight against the war, and the capitalist class recognized in him their deadly enemy and sent him to jail.

He led the fight for a Communist Party in America and the capitalist class again saw in his activities a great danger for their rule and sent him to jail.

He led the fight against suppression of the Communist Party, and boldly fought for a legal Communist Party in a Michigan court, and the capitalist class again threatened to throw him in jail.

Comrade Ruthenberg was a fighter for the working class, even in the darkest moments. He never lost courage, and from his death bed he said to the American working class:

"Close your ranks, the American workers under the leadership of our party and the Comintern will win. Fight on!"

Yes! Let us fight and win!

Fraternally yours, F. Zelms, secretary, Lettish Propaganda Bureau.

"Comrade Ruthenberg was the leader of our party and the revolutionary movement. The death of Comrade Ruthenberg has inflicted a deep pain in our hearts. Ruthenberg is dead, but his courageous, revolutionary spirit remains with us.

"As Comrade Lenin after his death lives always with us and leads us to Communism, Comrade Ruthenberg will remain in his spirit and his teachings with us, and he will be our spiritual leader in the future.

"We will always remember that Comrade Ruthenberg was a builder of our party and we will continue to build his party, Workers (Communist) Party, and 'farmers' Soviet Republic of the United States.

"Comrade Ruthenberg, our leader, is dead! Long live the Communist movement."

—Lithuanian Central Bureau, Workers Party.

J. Gasiunas, Secretary."

Remember Ruthenberg's Last Words.

Finnish Bureau, Workers Party District 1, Boston.—"The Finnish Bureau of the District received with sense of great sorrow the startling news of the death of our beloved Comrade Charles E. Ruthenberg, general secretary of our party. On the occasion of the death of our great leader, we address our message to the Finnish workers of this district and to the revolutionary comrades of America, calling upon them to put into practice the last bequest of Comrade Charles E. Ruthenberg.

"Tell the comrades to close their ranks, build the party. The American workers under the leadership of our party and the Comintern will win. Let's fight on!"

Negro Workers Express Grief.

American Negro Labor Congress: "The growing number of class conscious revolutionary Negro workers this country who had come to know C. E. Ruthenberg cannot but suffer an indescribable shock at the announcement of his death. It is a tremendous loss to the revolutionary movement of this country.

"Ruthenberg was fearless, energetic, sagacious and well typified the best in the American revolutionary movement. May his memory ever abide with us."—Lovett Fort Whiteman, National Organizer.

"White and Black Workers Unite."

American Negro Labor Congress, New York Local:—"It is with heartfelt regret and sorrow that the members of the American Negro Labor Congress have learned of the death of one of America's great fighters in the struggle of labor.

"While death has taken him away from us his life's work should serve as an inspiration to all of us.

"We can best commemorate the memory of Charles E. Ruthenberg by uniting the white and Negro workers in the common struggle."

Shall Follow His Advice.

Workers Party, Denver, Colo.—The city executive on behalf of Denver membership grieves death of Comrade Ruthenberg as great loss to the working class of America.

"Shall follow his advice and redouble our efforts to build the party."

Cleveland Workers Pledge To Fight

Needle Trades Section T. U. E. L., Cleveland, Ohio.—"We the Needle Trades Section of the Trade Union Education League of Cleveland are deeply grieved over the sudden death of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg.

"We remember Comrade Ruthenberg as a staunch fighter for the working class in Cleveland.

"Especially he was the champion taking part in almost all the struggles that the Cleveland workers fought.

"He was our inspiration in all our battles and with bowed heads we mourn his death and pledge ourselves to carry on the fight where he left off."

To Get "Subs."

Workers (Communist) Party, Springfield, Mass.—The loss of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg is so enormous that we are unable to express it in words. We unanimously decide to heed Comrade Ruthenberg's advice and make up for our loss with deeds.

"As part of our increased activity we pledge ourselves individually to get during the year not less than five subs for the party press (one comrade pledged himself with not less than 50 subs). And a voluntary contribution of $15 to sub for The DAILY WORKER and a sub for the Freiheit if we do not live up to our pledge."

Message From the Bulgarian Bureau.

The Bulgarian Bureau of The Workers Party: "We express our deepest sorrow at the loss to our party and the working class. In this critical moment when the Workers Party faces the sublime tasks of revolutionizing the labor movement in this country, when problems of national as well as international importance are pressing hard for their solution the labor movement must face them without Comrade Ruthenberg, one of the most valiant courageous temperals in the revolutionary struggles. We deeply regret his premature death. Our pledge shall be to carry on his unfinished work to the end."

Strengthen The Ranks.

Lenin Branch Workmen's Circle, N. Y.—"The death of Comrade Ruthenberg is a great loss to the labor movement in the United States. He was a sincere and courageous fighter for the workers' cause.

"The sorrowful loss of the able leader should strengthen the ranks of the only true working class party in America.

"Long live the Workers (Communist) Party of America."

Unexpected Shock.

I. A. Bluestein, Kellogg, Iowa.—"Such sudden and unexpected shock as the death of our trustworthy leader, C. E. Ruthenberg, has shocked the whole revolutionary movement in America, and let wish that he will forever rest and his work that he left unfinished shall grow in head and hands.

"I will extend my sympathy to the staff of his companions."

• • •

Omaha Makes Its Pledge.

Omaha, Neb., Workers (Communist) Party.—"We are at a loss to find words to express our grief at Comrade Ruthenberg's death.

"We pledge ourselves to help build a great monument in his memory, a powerful Communist Party, especially do we pledge that Omaha will become an active, alert unit of this monument."

DRAMA

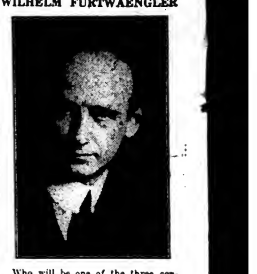
A Black Folk Drama

"Earth" Weighs God in the Balance and Finds Him Wanting

Reviewed by HARBOR ALLEN.

As it is produced by New Playwrights 52nd Street Theatre, "Earth," by Em Jo Basshe, has its faults. It is crowded on a shallow stage, much of its fineness is lost by an inexperienced cast in the beat of tom-toms and the rattle of gourds, its speeches grow monotonous for length, its singing stops the story. Yet it remains a great play.

A white man speaks "In Abraham's Bosom." In Emperor Jones a Negro strips off the white veneer and goes black. The greatness of "Earth" lies in the fact that its Negroes are real, primitive Negroes. Say what you want about slips in dialect, Em Jo Basshe's Negroes think like Negroes and feel like Negroes. His feeling is always right; that's what makes "Earth" great.



Suppose "Earth" hasn't a "plot." Suppose it doesn't move in curtain climaxes to a Sidney Howard end. It is time the drama graduated from the grade-school of plots as the short story has abandoned the schoolboy tricks of O. Henry. When "Earth" is finished it has told its story and exhausted its theme. It has said its say on man and the world. That's enough.

On its surface this play of Negro peasants is pure emotion. Its emotion pours out in a torrent of prayers and invocations, chants and spirituals. At times the play dissolves into rhythm and voodoo dancing. A band of Negroes forms a sort of Greek chorus to the simple action.

Yet under this simple action and under this pure emotion, "Earth" is full of irony. Here is religion, planted in a simple mind, grown to ripe fruit. The fruit it bears is poison. God is a policeman around the corner. God is a school teacher with sour looks and a rod, who grins at you if you know your lessons and swats you if you don't. The Negro mother of the play expects God to treat her as she would treat a friend. When she "gives" to God the voodoo witch doctor whom she strangles below the cross, God gives her a stray cow in return. When the cow is drowned in the marsh, God has gone back on his bargain. He has cheated her. In the end the black chorus which has now condemned her, now exults over her, torn by fanaticism, by wagging from Jesus to voodoo, trample her to death.

Senon the witch doctor can trick them, but he can't help them. He is as helpless as God, who, for all their wails and prayers, doesn't show up. They want something to believe in. They starve, their crops are burned, they fight, they kill one another. God doesn't give a damn.

WILHELM FURTWAENGLER

Who will be one of the three conductors of tonight's concert at the Metropolitan Opera House in honor of Walter Damrosch.

Is this proletarian drama? Is "Earth" food for workers because it deals with simple people, because it isn't cluttered with intellectual patter, because it goes out in the fields and huts and mountain tops, into a community of people, a mass?

Well, what is proletarian drama? Does it include folk drama? Nobody knows. No American has written one. As for Europe: Toller? Andreyev? How much does "Broken-brow" or "King Hunger" mean to working class audiences? Not much.

I can't say that the New Playwrights Theatre is a working man's theatre But this I can say: It has produced two honest plays. "Lead Speaker" is an honest satire on American politics and "Earth" is an honest peasant play. "If somebody writes us an honest worker's play," say the directors, "we will produce it. We want one." They are breaking ground. There is much ploughing to be done before a strong tree can grow. When the proletarian artist comes he will find his right furrow. Meanwhile, we ought to help them plough.

SUCCESS OF IMPROVED ROAD BUILDING MACHINE MAKES IMMIGRATION OF LESS IMPORTANCE NOW

CHICAGO, March 14. (FP).—Who will build our roads and dig our ditches if we shut off immigration, the question usually put by interests that want to swamp the labor market of the country, is being answered by other interests from the same side of the class line. Publicity distributed by the Chicago agents of the Foote Co., makers of paving machinery, reads:

"Hundreds of laborers with shovels would be required to mix the same amount of concrete in the same time in the old fashioned way. But now only a single man is required to operate the machine and the only use for a shovel is to pat the concrete smoothly into its place and to clear up the loose gravel spilled by a careless truckdriver."

The paving machine builds more than a foot of standard concrete highway per minute. During the summer the machines in use build a total of 50 miles of highway each day between sunrise and sunset. A single machine will build half a mile a day.

Mixing and spreading of the huge bucket of concrete on the roadbed, the company announces, "takes place in less time than it used to take for a husky laborer to roll up his sleeves, spit on his hands and get ready to mix concrete with a shovel."

The labor so displaced gets no unemployment insurance or job bonus. The enormously increased profits go to the machinery makers and the road contractors.

Big Meeting in Needle Trades Defense

Joint Campaign by Furriers And Cloakmakers Opens

That the imprisoned cloakmakers and fur workers are not to be forgotten by their fellow workers was shown unmistakably by the thousands who crowded Cooper Union on Saturday afternoon for the official opening of the Joint Defense Committee of Furriers and Cloakmakers which is undertaking to raise a huge fund to bring about the release of those in jail, and to care for their families until this is accomplished.

Betrayed By Sigman.

These men, who for their strike activities, were given such unprecedented sentences by Judge Otto Rosalsky, and other representatives of the law, are undoubtedly the victims of the right wing's union smashing policy in the needle trades. Aecording to Isidore Shapiro of the Furriers Joint Board, who was a speaker on Saturday.

"Sigman could have saved the cloakmakers from jail if he had not wanted to use them as pawns in his attack on the left wing. He let them be railroaded to prison for such long terms hoping that this would frighten other workers and prevent them from supporting the Joint Board. But the result has been just the opposite."

Di Mola Back.

The failure of the terrorist tactics of the reactionary officials was proven even more vividly by the appearance of Joseph Di Mola on the speaker's platform.

Di Mola had just returned from his weeks of convalescence in the country following the attack upon him by right wing gangsters who nearly killed him by fracturing his skull. Di Mola was attacked in his shop for refusing to register with the International officials of the I. L. G. W. U., and for days his life was despaired of.

He celebrates his recovery by returning to the fight once more, and to the workers who greeted him so enthusiastically at Cooper Union Saturday he pledged his continued support of the Joint Board and the struggle against the reactionary foes in the International.

Tears Off Medal.

One speaker, Sam Ginsberg, who is a shop chairman, stated that he had a medal awarded to him for distinguished service in Palestine but the action of Judge Rosalsky, who is a noted Zionist, made him ashamed to belong to this order and he discarded his medal as an indication of his disgust.

The chairman urged others who were members of this order to visit Judge Rosalsky and follow Ginsberg's example if the judge refused to do all in his power to release the imprisoned workers.

Gangsters Known.

Louis Hyman, general manager of the Cloak and Dress-makers' Joint Board, spoke of the notorious gangsters who are being employed by the right wing of the cloakmakers' and furriers' unions, and of the way Sigman had tried to prejudice the cases of the imprisoned strikers by calling them gangsters and declaring they were not really union workers.

The utter absurdity of such a statement is most effectively shown by the records of these loyal union men who have been so active in building up the union which Sigman is now trying to destroy.

The names, locals, length of the time in the union and the sentences of those now in jail are given by Hyman as follows:

Name	Local	How many years a member	Sentence
Charles Wolfish	2	18 years	4 months
Max Bernstein	10	6½ years	indefinite

Other speakers at Saturday's meeting were Henry Robbins, chairman of the Defense Committee; Joseph Boruchowitz, manager of Cloakmakers' Local 2; Sam Lipson and Louis Cohen, chairman of Furriers' Local 5.

A collection of $350 was contributed by the workers.

BECKERMANISM EXPLAINED BY A RANK AND FILE MEMBER OF THE AMALGAMATED CLOTHING UNION

(By Rank and Filer.)

Abraham Beckerman, the "Mussolini of the Amalgamated" and erstwhile "white hope" of the reactionaries in the entire labor movement, has suffered another defeat.

The successful meeting at Cooper Union held by the left wing recently, spells the downfall of Beckermanism.

Beckerman, who built up his reputation by breaking up meetings of the left wing is no longer able to deliver the goods. Evidently he suffered a change of heart or mind or both. Since the tailors have learned the art of defending their meetings, Beckerman and his brigands keep themselves at a respectable distance.

Only very recently, Beckorman and his saintly crew, ware strutting along Second Ave., in front of Stuyvesant Casino, in order to break up the meeting of the progressive tailors, but used their discretion and after a short skirmish, made a very successful strategical retreat.

Beckerman Gets Cold Feet.

At an earlier date, Beckerman and his lieutenants paraded Third Ave. and 67th St., in order to break up the meeting of tailors at the Central Opera House, held under the auspices of the Civil Liberties Union, but for some reason the meeting was not disturbed. Beckerman found the pretext for his retreat in the proximity of the meeting place to a post office station which could involve his gunmen in trouble.

But now it is Cooper Union. It is at Cooper Union that Beckerman earned his spurs. And what did Beckerman do at Cooper Union? Last year through foul means, he succeeded in preventing a meeting which was supposed to be held at that place. No fight took place. With the aid of detectives he broke in through a backdoor before the meeting started, bought off the hall, dispersed the floor committee, and those in charge, and prevented the meeting being held.

Terror of the Amalgamated.

Soon after that, Beckerman became the terror of the Amalgamated. Members are expelled from attending meetings, heavily fined for their political beliefs, the freedom of speech and press is abolished. Beckerman spreads his activities to the other tailor unions, meddles in the affairs of the furrier and cloakmaker unions and become the "white hope" of all reactionaries, but in vain.

The furriers and the cloakmakers knew how to handle bulldozers. They had ample experience with their own labor fakers, and Beckerman takes his medicine at the hands of the fur and cloak workers.

His failure to break up the Madison Square Gardën meeting, of which he boasted so much, was a great blow to all the reactionary forces within and outside of the labor movement.

Now Beckerman will have his hands full at home. There is no need for him at present in meddling into some other people's business. (Of course, one could appreciate his desire for amalgamation of all the needle trades.)

The left wing of the Amalgamated has challenged Beckerman to continue his tactics of breaking up meetings, of penalizing or expelling members for political beliefs. Beckerman would not accept the challenge. He and his dark forces are in full retreat. They could assault defenseless people only.

Change of Heart.

Beckerman has suffered a change of heart, since the tailors have demonstrated their ability to fight back.

Now Beckermanism stands exposed before the membership as a big bluff.

Ruthenberg Was an Able Organizer of Labor for the Social Revolution

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

C. E. RUTHENBERG was an organiser of the working class for the social revolution. It was no accident, therefore, that he held for ten years the position of secretary of the socialist party in Cleveland, Ohio, then became the secretary of the Communist Party, and afterwards the secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party, the position that he held at his death.

Ruthenberg, however, did not confine himself at any time to the mere office duties of his position as secretary.

In the socialist party there were many trained executives who merely acted as the office boys of the political leaders of the party. Such a secretary was J. Mahlon Barnas and later Adolph Germer who, as national secretaries of the socialist party, were merely the obedient instruments of Victor L. Berger and Morris Hillquit. This situation was duplicated in the New York socialist party where Julius Gerber was the local "secretary" of Hillquit, Lee and others who dominated the party. This was the socialist party conception generally of the role of the executives.

Even in the socialist party Ruthenberg was a different kind of secretary. In Cleveland he not only gave organizational direction to this section of the party, but he also gave it political leadership. This lifted him head and shoulders above Max S. Hayes, for instance, also of Cleveland, prominent in the American Federation of Labor, whom the Berger-Hillquit forces tried to use as a foil against Ruthenberg and the revolutionary position he championed within the socialist party.

Ruthenberg's position in the socialist party, in the Communist Party and in the Workers (Communist) Party was a difficult one. It is not easy to attend to all the details of an organization, carefully watch over its finances, give care toward the development of its campaigns, and at the same time keep informed as to the political developments locally, in the state, nationally and internationally, so as to be able to formulate correct policies. Ruthenberg performed this task successfully. Just how successfully we all know.

Workers generally think of Ruthenberg as giving political direction to our movement. I remember especially the day that a copy of his proposed program for the Workers (Communist) Party, to be submitted at the first convention, arrived in New York from behind the prison walls at Sing Sing. The open party of Communism was being organized in the United States, following a period of illegal existence. Ruthenberg was in prison. Nevertheless, he had his ideas on how the movement should be developed. And his capitalist jailers could not stop him from giving expression to those ideas, putting them on paper so his comrades would know his stand.

Few workers, however think of Ruthenberg studying account books, balancing figures that usually showed the party with a deficit that must be met quickly, carefully planning to meet that deficit with some new campaign, and giving his own attention to the working out of the smallest details of such a campaign.

If these routine duties had been lifted off Ruthenberg's shoulders, giving him more time to study and follow events, greater leisure to write about them, our party would certainly have had a greater literature from the pen of our fallen leader. It was he, however, who wrote most of the party's proclamations, who planned and worked out many of the declarations on multitudes of subjects offered at the various party conventions, who put on paper the concensus of opinion expressed in the meetings of the political committee of the executive committee.

It was this, Ruthenberg, the organizer, who understood so well the meaning of each new reader won for the party press, the value of every new member won for the party.

Recently the writer of "The Topics of the Times," a column that appears daily on the editorial page of The New York Times, delivered himself of a few thoughts under a title, "A Contrast in Funerals." He wrote as follows:

"The highly emotional interest shown by Communist sympathizers in the ceremony before the ashes of the late Communist leader Ruthenberg, now being transported to Moscow for interment near the body of Lenin, is brought into high relief by the fact that on the same day a crowd of mourners, smaller in number and moved more by grief than by belief in a social system, attended the funeral services for the late State Senator Daniel J. Carroll. * * * Senator Carroll, beloved by hundreds of thousands throughout the state, was honored by representatives of many organizations. Ruthenberg, whose following in this country was small in comparison, received tribute from several thousand loyal followers.

"Such disproportions as these have tended to give certain people an erroneous and exaggerated notion of the strength of the Communists in this country. * * *

These utterances merely display the ignorance of their author. The appearance of this mention of State Senator Daniel J. Carroll in The Times was probably for the first time that most of the readers of that publication had ever heard of him. When a man's funeral is merely attended by the leaders of organizations, with the membership of those organizations, of this have any, absent, then it can be truly said that he has no popular following. The parasites that feed off the organization to which he belongs, whether it is Tammany Hall, or some other corrupt expression of capitalism, will turn out automatically. But it requires some real appeal to win support of the workers generally.

The great numbers of workers who are eagerly attending the Ruthenberg Memorial Meetings is a tribute not only to Ruthenberg, but to his party, the Workers (Communist) Party, and to the federation of sympathy with, if not complete understanding of the Communist principles for which Ruthenberg fought and died. .

* * *

Every one of the men, women and children of labor who has attended and is planning to attend the Ruthenberg memorials, represents not only himself alone. He may not be an official in an organization. But it may truly be said that every one of them is active somewhere, in his shop, factory, mill or mine, or in his own immediate neighborhood, among the progressives of the ideas in which he believes, or with which he sympathizes. That is the story of the development of the revolutionary movement.

Three hundred new members were won for the Workers (Communist) Party at the Ruthenberg Memorial Meetings in New York City.

The forces of capitalism fear every one of these new members, not as individuals, but as better contacts of the Communist movement with the American working class. Ruthenberg saw the necessity of every one of those contacts. Remember Ruthenberg by getting new members for the party. Be an organizer of the social revolution. Accomplish its routine tasks. That will also help equip the soldiers of the struggle for the political leadership of the working class.

Kerensky Raising Money

By WILL DE KALB.

Pessimistic and despondent, Alexandre Kerensky, provisional president and dictator of the Russian social-democratic government in 1917, arrived on a business visit to New York last week. In an exclusive interview with this writer, and in other interviews with other journalists, the ousted leader of the petty bourgeoisie admitted that he is collecting funds "for use against the Soviet."

Kerensky had little to say of importance; but what he said was important since his statements revealed his status in social revolutionary circles. When asked if he was collecting money from bankers or from workmen in America, he answered, "I am happy to receive support from every kind of person who believes in freedom."

Silent Brooding.

When the point was pressed, and the brooding pseudo-statesman was asked if he thought it consistent to accept funds from both capitalists and workers, he partly replied through a spokesman that he was accepting funds from progressive believers in freedom, and to refuse such support from his "sympathizers" would be to neglect his cause. Perish the thought! This, and you can bet your last dollar on it, Mr. Kerensky will not do.

That was all Mr. Kerensky cared to say about his campaign funds. After all, as he told the ship news reporters and the immigration officials when he arrived here, his visit to the United States was prompted solely by a desire to study our political, social and economic conditions. But that, as a cynical customs inspector remarked sotto voce, is what they all say. And unless the American millionaires have all of a sudden gained a little sense, he will have an opportunity to study American banking systems.

Just what he will do with the funds he and his business associate, Mr. A. J. Sack, are gathering in, Kerensky would not say for publication. "I am among friends and not for individual purposes but for the democratic cause is good all," his exact words were. When asked for a detailed explanation as to how the funds would be spent to aid the democratic cause in general, he merely stated that he was going to carry on his work.

New White Hope.

So a new saviour of the "democratic" cause appears on the horizon! It should be noted that he, like all other "saviours" appears in it with arms outstretched, the palms upturned.

When this writer asked for an interview, he was told Mr. Kerensky was "too busy." In the interview granted to one of our correspondents Kerensky stated that he was not a candidate for any office in Russia. Other reports were current in New York papers. One of these had it that Kerensky was a candidate for president. Another had it that he was to be premier of a new government. Still another had it that he was to be "king" of Russia. Mr. Kerensky has denied all these reports, as well as the report that he was to be made president of the Russian Republic of Far Eastern Siberia, with Vladivostok as the capital. Mr. Kerensky also denied that he was to be made president of Russia.

What Is Democracy?

Highlights in Kerensky's statements: Q. Does anyone deny A. Democracy, or social democracy, is the final development of political democracy. Q. Has Bolshevism defeated Communism because the other way around? A. (Through Mr. Sack's censor). "I certainly say what I believe, not what other people believe." Pressed by this writer, his spokesman explained that "A free government can guarantee political freedom even though economic freedom has not been established."

Q. Do you believe in struggle, bloodshed, and direct action to establish wider equality? A. No. I advocate moderation, balloting, an "social evolution." Q. Do you believe it is possible for any socialdemocratic government to suppress Communists because the other way around? A. (Through Mr. Sack's censor). "I certainly say what I believe, not what other people believe." Pressed by this writer, his spokesman explained that "A free government can guarantee political freedom even though economic freedom has not been established."

Q. Do you believe in struggle, bloodshed, and direct action to establish wider equality? A. No. I advocate moderation, balloting, an "social evolution." Q. Do you believe it is possible for any social-democ

ADMINISTRATION newspapers are all laughing at senator King because of his failure to secure permission to enter Haiti, the island republic that is actually a branch office of the National City bank. King delivered a speech last year in which he said that Haiti was not free but was actually a puppet of the state department. To prove that King was not stating the truth President Borno put up the "no admittance" sign for the senator and the state department says: "Now, who is running Haiti?"

THE state department will not insist on the president of Haiti granting King a visa to enter the country. But if President Borno treated a Wall Street banker in this fashion, a few of the battleships that are not engaged protecting Wall Street's interests in China, Nicaragua and the Philippines would be churning the ocean immediately on the way to Haiti to show Borno where to get off at. Which proves that a senator who fails foul of the money barons does not amount to much.

RAMSAY MacDONALD is coming to the United States and there is some talk that the more progressive wing of the Labor Party are in favor of giving him a permanent vacation. MacDonald got in wrong with his party on the Chinese question. British labor leaders have a habit of taking an ocean voyage when home life gets too strenuous. J. H. Thomas came to the United States after he betrayed the miners a few years ago. When he helped to betray them last year he went to Canada and to recuperate from the same kind of activity Ramsay MacDonald went to the Sahara desert. Things move slowly in England but the British working class are preparing to send their reactionary leaders to the political wilderness.

KERENSKY tells us that Stalin hates the peasantry and that the only difference between Stalin's policy and Trotsky's is that the latter wants to kill them right away while the former would go about the business of extinction more methodically and cautiously. Kerensky declares quite correctly that the peasantry comprises about 85 per cent of the population of the Soviet Union. Yet these peasants seem to like their enemies. Kerensky's lies are so feeble that even the capitalist newspapers decorate them with invisible question marks.

POOR Mr. Kellogg has a terrible time trying to deny that he instructed the American charge in Nicaragua to bring about the election of the reactionary Diaz. It is reported that Mr. Dennis, the charge in question who is returning to the United States to become head of the Latin-American section of the state department has such a document in his possession. It may be less majestic to say that Mr. Kellogg is lying but the secretary of state has been caught so often taking liberties with the truth that his denials carry no more weight than a preacher's tirade against the devil.

THE Nationalists are forging ahead in China. Shanghai, the prize city of the Orient, seems to be ready to fall into their lap. If they had to deal only with the feudal militarists their task would be simple. Even despite the opposition of the Imperialist powers whose money is financing the militarists the revolutionists appear to be on the verge of attaining victory. Too much stock should not be taken in reports of conflicts inside the Koumintang Party. Of course there are differences on questions of policy and there is no doubt but the

Smith, Mellon Scramble Over Water Power

Governor Favors General Electric Company

ALBANY, March 16.—Republicans and democrats in the legislature are at each others' throats in their scramble for water power. Back of them stand the General Electric Company and the Mellon interests pulling the strings.

The fight between the republicans and democrats was brought to a head last night when Governor Smith in a special message to the legislature flatly rejected the republican proposal for an "investigating commission," which, by wasting time, would permit republican leaders to hand over New York's rich power resources to the Mellon interests.

"Public Ownership."

Making a plea for "public ownership" of the power resources of New York, Governor Smith introduced bills in the legislature providing for a New York State Power Authority empowered to submit a comprehensive plan for "public development" of state water power. Governor Smith's plan would permit the General Electric Company to mulct the public for power generated by the state. Owen D. Young, vice-president of the G. E. C. was a prominent contributor to Governor Smith's campaign fund.

The hypocrisy of Governor Smith's plea for public development of power resources was clearly indicated in his message which stated that the "Power Authority would finance the building the dams and plants at the river through the contracts which it would make for selling the power to be generated to private companies which would finally market it to the people."

"Generous Al."

Although Governor Smith makes no mention of the company which is to market the power, it is quite obvious that those in the know with the situation that the fat contract will go to the General Electric Company. Governor Smith has on a number of occasions proposed Owen D. Young as chairman of the Water Power Authority, and Owen D. Young, with true christian gratitude, has reciprocated by boosting Al Smith for president.

Governor Smith's bill was introduced in the senate and the assembly by Senator Bernard Downing and Assemblyman Maurice Black after the reading of the Governor's message.

Young vs. Mellon.

Determined to maintain the present power monopoly and permit them to grant the Mellon aluminum trust the power resources of the state, republican leaders are waging a bitter fight against the Power Authority Bill.

The Aluminum Company of North America with its numerous subsidiaries, all of them controlled by Andrew D. Mellon, is back of the republican opposition to the bill.

KELLOGG AGAIN DISCRIMINATES; REFUSES VISA TO PIATOKOFF

MOSCOW, March 15.—George Piatokoff, who had been designated to be head of the Soviet Trading Corporation at New York, has returned here from Berlin where he stayed for the past three months awaiting his visa for entry into the United States.

The state department at Washington, D. C., is maintaining its usual policy of silence and has not notified Piatokoff what it intends to do in his case.

Piatokoff, whose application for entry had the endorsement of a group of prominent New York firms, believes that he is being victimized by narrow-minded Washington officials, and that the refusal of a visa to him would be in keeping with the previous record of Kellogg barring foreigners to come to America.

Rumors coming from Berlin state that the U. S. consul there was given instruction to refuse a visa to Piatokoff as the state department at Washington has found him "inadmissible."

Dunne Member C. I. Executive Following Ruthenberg's Death

William F. Dunne is now a member of the Executive Committee of the Communist International, following the death of Charles E. Ruthenberg. At the Fifth Congress of the Communist International held in June, 1924, Ruthenberg and William Z. Foster were elected as members with Dunne as alternate.

According to the statutes of the Communist International the members of the Executive Committee are elected by the Congress and not by the various sections.

Dunne was chairman of the American delegation at the Fifth Congress. He and J. Louis Engdahl are the editors of The DAILY WORKER.

Jury Picked in Ford-Sapiro Libel Suit

Anti-Semitic Issue Creeps Into Suit for Cash

DETROIT, March 15.—A jury of housewives, small salaried employes and small-town merchants, was finally chosen this afternoon to sit in judgment on the million-dollar libel suit of Aaron Sapiro, wealthy Chicago attorney, against Henry Ford, America's first billionaire.

What this jury will have to decide is whether the Detroit manufacturer was justified in declaring, in various articles in his magazine, "The Dearborn Independent," that Sapiro, organizer of more than 40 cooperative associations and author of a farmers' cooperative law, was the prime mover in a "conspiracy" of Jewish international bankers to throttle agriculture.

The Issues Are Clearer

Lines along which the libel suit will be fought became clear with the examination of the prospective jurors. As the questioning by the high-priced attorneys progressed it was quite evident that even the defense, which has firmly maintained that Jewry was not an issue, nevertheless took sharp notice of the difference between the Jew and non-Jew as jury material.

One candidate for the jury box who testified that he once "joined the Ku Klux Klan, more out of curiosity than anything else," was subjected to hard questioning by lawyers for Sapiro, the man who wants Ford to pay him $1,000,000 as damages for the statements which he made about him and his activities.

When the selection of the jury was finally completed, there were two Jews among the 12 talesmen in the box. They stoutly maintained that they could give Ford a fair trial.

There seems to be slight interest in the case here. Should Ford suddenly make his appearance, however, there is no doubt that the case would take on "Peaches-Browning" interest in the public estimation.

Will Henry Ford Appear?

Much legalistic discussion has taken place in the last 24 hours as to whether or not Ford has officially been subpoened to appear. Sen. "Jim" Reed, of Missouri, counsel for Ford said, however, that there will be no trouble having Mr. Ford here if the court wishes his evidence."

Another Bank Fails; Charge That Official Wrecked Institution

BOSTON, March 15.—Suspension of the Waldo Trust Company, of Belfast, Maine, with branches in Castine, Brooks and Unity, today led to a grand jury probe here of the activities of Norman H. White, of Brooklin.

Thirty-four banks in Ohio, New York, Boston, Connecticut, Maine and New Hampshire are said to have made loans based on alleged misrepresentations of White.

Loans are said to have varied from $1,000 to $75,000 with the total well up to a million and a half dollars. Both firms have filed voluntary petitions.

Woll's "Report" Apparently "Filed"

All Right to Lie About Fur Workers, But Not Tammany

Mayor Walker's office again stated today that it had no announcement to make on the contents of the report of last year's fur strike which was turned over by the Special Investigating Committee of the American Federation of Labor last Friday.

A copy of this report, in fact the only copy in existence so it is said, was handed to the mayor for his information because, according to President Green, it contained information supplied by members of the Furriers Joint Board relative to payments made to the police during the strike. What use he made of the report was left to his honor.

Tammany's Own Cops!

So far Mayor Walker has made no comment at all upon the report. The rumor is that he is not going to make any, and that this whole graft charge against members of the police department will be quietly shelved.

It is a nasty boomerang, and the sooner it is forgotten, the better.

For, what was intended as a frame-up on members of the New York Joint Board of the Furriers' Union and planned as a means of discrediting them in the eyes of the workers and the public, turned out to be an attack on the city's police department—and not even A. F. of L. officials but Tammany Hall's police and get away with it.

Not Even True.

It is reported that Matthew Woll, head of the investigating committee, acting-president of the National Civic Federation, and the leader of the reactionary forces, wrote the report of what he wanted to find in the investigation of the Furriers Union and that all the other members of the committee signed their names, without reading carefully.

At Least Lose Majesty.

Then Woll went to Florida and out came the newspaper headlines, "A. F. of L. Investigating Committee Charges $100,000 Graft Paid to New York Police." The next morning, on the rumor goes, Inspector Broderick of the Industrial Squad visited Joseph P. Ryan, president of the New York Central Trades and Labor Council and a member of the Investigating Committee, and said:

"Hey, Joe, whatchehell!"

And so Ryan telegraphed Woll, saying:

"Hey Matty, whatchehell!"

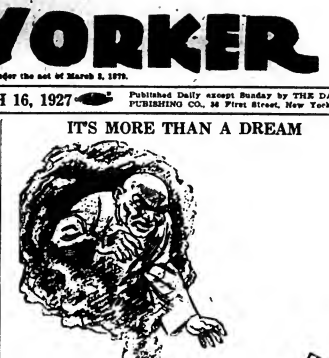
Flat Contradiction.

And then President Green telegraphed back that the American Federation of Labor was a responsible body and stood by its statements. Whereupon Ryan announced that the charges of graft were absolutely not true, and after that things began humming.

The result was that Green did not come to New York right away to see Mayor Walker as was the announced plan. Then the mayor had to go to Havana, and he was busy when he first returned. And finally by the time President Green, et al., reached the New York City Hall last Friday, they "made no charge against the police," and they did not even recollect that there had ever been any charges made at all.

No Money For Cops.

Members of the Furriers Joint Board have denied that they ever made any statements which would indicate that graft had been paid to the police, and they have denied the Investigating Committee, or the officials of the International to hold a public hearing on this and all the other charges made in the report.



Since Mathew Woll, and his committee have shown no desire to turn the light of day on the contents of this report, and since Mayor Walker surely does not wish to use against the police department reported statements which are flatly denied by those quoted, it looks as the the matter would be hushed.

So the forces attacking the progressives in the trade unions once more defeat themselves.

Panic In State Department As Dennis Sails

Brings Letter Involving Kellogg in Diaz Plot

WASHINGTON, March 15. (FP). —Scandal and panic in the state department pious expressions of benevolence toward Nicaragua issuing from the White House, copies of documents, leaking from the American legation in Managua, quoted in the columns of the Washington Post, showing that Secretary Kellogg ordered that all possible effort be made to elect Adolfo Diaz as president.

That's the picture of the Coolidge-Kellogg-Nicaraguan Intrigue presented a week after the adjournment of congress.

Dennis Peeved.

A long letter of complaint by Lawrence Dennis, recent charge d'affairs at Managua, against high-brow and stupid management of state department publicity was the first document quoted in the press. It appears that copies of this letter fell into the hands of press correspondents now watching the Kellogg war in Nicaragua. Dennis roasted the "imitation British" snobbery of the Division of Current Information and the clique of so-called career men who dominate the policy of the department when the secretary is not actively giving orders.

His complaint was inspired by the fact that three of these members of the "club" of wealthy young men in the service had refused to accept appointments to relieve him in his disagreeable post in Nicaragua. They had not been punished for refusal. He had to resign in order to leave to come north.

Had The Evidence.

Up his sleeve Dennis held a trump card which caused the White House and state department to writhe in agony. It was a letter of instructions, which came to him in the diplomatic pouch from Washington, bearing the signature of Secretary Kellogg, instructing him to see that Adolfo Diaz was chosen president of Nicaragua when Chamorro, clone associate of Diaz and author of the military coup that overthrew the constitutional government, should get out.

Saved The Letter.

This letter was to have been burned, it appears, but for some reason of prudence Dennis not only preserved it but made a copy which he is bringing back to Washington. The original is said to be locked up in the legation files. While administration sources have replied by declar-

Pertinency Not For Sinclair Jurymen

Judge Rules He Will Decide; Closing Arguments Next

WASHINGTON, March 15.—Presentation of evidence was concluded today in the trial of Harry F. Sinclair, lessee of Teapot Dome, for contempt of the United States Senate.

The proceeding moved quickly towards its final phase today after a ruling by Justice William Hitz in the supreme court of the District of Columbia sweeping aside the principal motions of the defense.

Overrule Defense.

Justice Hitz overruled the oil man's attorneys on virtually every important point. He denied the admissability of evidence offered as bearing upon the pertinency of questions which Sinclair refused to answer before the senate Teapot Dome investigating committee on March 22, 1924; dismissed abruptly the defense motion for an instructed verdict of acquittal and overruled a motion which would have vitiated the prosecution's case on technical grounds.

In holding that pertinency in such cases was a matter for the court rather than the jury, Justice Hitz handed down a ruling hailed by constitutional lawyers as one of the far reaching implications.

Limits Jury Power.

The defense interpreted the ruling as a violation of the constitutional guarantee of jury trial, in that it removes from the jurors' deliberation a factor essential to the establishment of the crime charged.

The ruling did permit, however, reading to the jurors of Sinclair's statement to the senate committee giving his reasons for declining to answer certain questions.

Court In Wrangle.

After presentation of this statement, the jurors were excused while counsel and court wrangled over the wording of instructions to the jury.

Closing arguments, the next order of procedure and the last before the jury retires to write its verdict, probably will be reached tomorrow.

Conviction would carry a fine of $100 to $1,000 and one month to one year in jail.

Capture of Wuhu Big Victory for Nationalists

Nanking Now Next Objective Of Revolutionary Troops

SHANGHAI, March 15.—The City of Wuhu was reported to have fallen into the hands of the revolutionists.

The fall of Wuhu to the Nationalists would mean the cutting of the these two important cities, Nanking and would probably be the forerunner of the fall of Nanking.

Present maneuvers of the Nationalists appear to be directed towards Nanking, the campaign being based upon a belief that with the fall of Nanking the Shantuneites would find Shanghai untenable.

Private advices and cable dispatches make it appear that the eventual success of the Nationalists is generally anticipated.

General Chang Tsung Chang, who has taken over the defense of Shanghai, is apparently preparing to give up Nanking to the revolutionists. The evacuation of Nanking can only be followed by the surrender of Shanghai to the Cantonese, since Shanghai depends upon Nanking for its defense forces.

Two-Sided Drive

The Nationalists are making a two-sided drive to bring about the fall of these two important cities, Nanking and Shanghai, and unconfirmed reports state they have already captured Wuhu, which would mean the severance of the all important communications between Shanghai and Nanking. On the south they are attacking Sunkiang and on the north their drive is directed at Soochow.

Private advices intimate that General Chang Tsung Chang, the Shanghai defender, knows full well that he can not hold Shanghai or Nanking against the Nationalists and that he is merely maneuvering to secure all possible loot from these cities before the withdraws into his own territory to the north and permits the Nationalists to rule in full sway over Shanghai and Nanking.

Chang Fights Wu

Marshal Chang Tso Lin, who is the actual power behind the northern defenses, remains in Pekin, apparently more interested in a "private battle" against his ancient enemy Wu Pei Fu than in the war against the Nationalists. We Pei Fu has failed to respond to Chang Tso Lin's demand for aid against the southerners, though it is reported that he personally desired to offer himself with change, but his subordinates objected. Chang Tso Lin has therefore sent an expedition of his Fengtien troops into Honan, the province considered nearest to Wu. These troops threaten to capture Chenechow, an important city, and to exact tribute for Chang Tso Lin from a territory heretofore ruled and taxed entirely by Wu Pei Fu.

Feng To Seize Honan

The Nationalists, however, are not prepared to let Honan pass under the Pekin influence without battle. General Feng Yuh Siang is reported in Sianfu, capital of Shensi, with 150,000 well trained troops, ready to march into Honan to attempt to oust the Fengtien troops and take control in the name of the Nationalist Government.

Further south in Yunan a territory which has always been considered loyal to Pekin, there are evidences that the revolutionists have won well and this territory may also prove to the Nationalists at any moment.

The Nationalists at the present moment appear about to win sweeping victories, while the northern war lords wrangle among themselves.

RADIO CZARS GET BUSY TO DECIDE WHO CAN USE AIR

Overlook Ship Stations; Take Up Broadcasters

WASHINGTON, March 15.—Asserting full control over radio despite its lack of funds and equipment, the new federal radio commission today started machinery to rule on who shall broadcast to the nation's 20,000,000 listeners.

Chief steps taken were: Arrangement of a series of public hearings in Washington from March 29 through April 1 on methods of eliminating interference.

A call for new license applications from the 732 existing broadcasting stations. Action on these applications will determine what stations, and how many, shall be permitted to survive.

Requirement that each application be subjected to recommendation by a district radio inspector before coming to the commission.

Sidetracking of 18,000 amateur and ship radio stations by indefinite extension of their licenses, leaving the commission free to grapple with broadcasting.

Exposure of Indian Reservation Steal By Defense Society

LOS ANGELES, Calif., March 15.—In a statement issued by the Indian Defense Association of California, the administration of the Indian Pueblo reservations by the government bureau in charge of Indian affairs is attacked.

The attempts of the notorious Secretary of the Interior Fall, now resigned, to rob the Indians of their land by the crudest methods were described. The bill which was sponsored by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to cancel the inviolable landtitles and to confiscate Pueblo land-grants was defeated, but a new and less obvious line of attack is being adopted now by interfering in the internal religious and tribal customs of the Indians.

It is revealed that the Indian commissioner has autocratic powers to an incredible degree, including its own police system, its so-called court system, and a spy system rivalling that of the former czar.

WATSON-PARKER LAW SINCERITY PUT UNDER TEST

Virginia Railroad Not Recognizing Unions

By LAURENCE TODD (Fed. Press).

WASHINGTON, March 15.—Test of the good faith of the railroad executives of the United States in promoting the enactment of the Watson-Parker railroad labor mediation act is to be made by the shopmen of the Virginian road, at Princeton, W. Va.

Thereupon by officials of the road with loss of their jobs and their homes —for without the jobs they must leave their homes—64 of the 70 shop mechanics and apprentices who recently applied to the International Association of Machinists for a local charter have been advised to go back to their company union, while 6 men have been chosen to make application to the U. S. Board of Mediation to defend the right of the whole group to join the regular trade union. Their mediation application was duly filed with the Board by President Wharton of the I. A. M. on March 14.

Scab Herding Road.

This Virginian railroad is a coal carrier which locked out and crushed its organized employes some years ago, and has furnished scabs to the Western Maryland and other unionized roads since that time. Its president, Hicks, some time ago declared in a speech that he would be glad to see grass growing in the streets of Princeton. This outburst was due to a union organizer's having been given the privileges claimed by his company. Local sentiment against the organization became acutely bitter. Then a number of prominent men in the shop were discharged.

Shopmen on the Virginian Railroad are lodged chiefly below in a Mechanical Department Association company union. The discharged employes asked the committee of this company union to take their grievances to the boss, Hicks' son Sawyer, superintendent of motive power. The committeemen refused to act, saying they did not propose to lose their jobs.

Turn Union.

Some of the bolder spirits then got in touch with a union organizer, and 50 of the 64 men in the shop asked for a union charter. Sawyer, learning of this from his spies, proceeded to inspire or dictate a petition addressed to himself and circulated among the men employed on repairing cars, saying himself to dismiss all agitators for a trade union, since they were "destroying the peace and harmony heretofore existing."

President Hicks sent a general reply to sentiment. Markham, to advise Sawyer, who posted a notice warning all employes to stay out of the I. A. M. or suffer "drastic action" on his part. He then called in the men and threatened to dismiss every one of them, closing the shop if necessary, "rather than the new union. He ordered 30 apprentices to go to the union representative and demand repayment of their $5 initiation fee. These apprentices made affidavit that they were sent on company time and with cash in hand.

Violate Law.

Sawyer's overt acts violate Paragraph 3, Section 2, of the Watson-Parker law, which guarantees freedom to the workers to select their own spokesmen in dealing with grievances.

"Representatives," it says, "for the purpose of this Act, shall be designated by the respective parties in such manner as may be provided in their corporate organization or unincorporated association, or by other means of collective action, without interference, influence, or coercion exercised by either party over the self-organization or designation of representatives by the other."

If this new law is not a fraud on the shopmen of unions, the Virginian Railroad must deal with the Princeton local of the Machinists as an accomplished fact. All other anti-union roads must do likewise when a majority of the men in any shop sign an application for a trade union charter.

Jury Is Picked In Ford-Sapiro Suit

It is felt here that the reluctance of the Detroit business philosophers to appear as Justified as a result of his experience at the hands of opposing attorneys in the last libel suit in which he demanded a million dollars from the Chicago Tribune for calling him an "anarchist." At that time display of Ford's ignorance on social questions was cruelly revealed.

Sapiro's Career Spectacular.

Sapiro's career is as spectacular in his way as Ford's is in his own. He spent the first years of his life in a San Francisco orphan asylum. After working in a newsboy, Sapiro studied law and became a practising attorney of San Francisco. Through the influence of Sen. Hiram Johnson, who was then governor of that state, who had appointed his law partner, Harris Weinstock, to be Agricultural Commissioner, Sapiro became interested in "farmer" marketing problems.

He created quite a furor what later became known as the California Plan, or the "Sunkist plan" of cooperative marketing.

This "Sunkist plan" is comparatively on the surface only. In reality it is a commercial scheme involving wholesale retail selling, with commission merchants and the rest of the parasites from the trading section of web that the business prosperitates.

As advertising angles it found in some of the statements of Ford mystery that Sapiro's activities are "commonistic." Besides being a millionaire, some of his partners in his business enterprises include Fred. C. Company don, of Illinois and other gentleman farmers" of the Middle West. He has also been associated with Julius Rosenwald, the head of Sears, Roebuck Co., and numerous financial enterprises.

Organize the Traction Workers

ARTICLE VI—THE "BEAKY"

By ROBERT MITCHELL.

The company union, the nature and methods of which have already been described, can be understood only in connection with several other such devices which the Interborough uses to suppress its men.

The chief of these is the spy system. Every railroad and practically every large corporation employs a more or less elaborate organization of spying on its employes. The means which are used and the ends to which the spy systems are carried have been too frequently described to warrant any extended description here.

Has District Spies.

In general, it may be said that the Interborough system conforms to the type in that it stops at nothing to secure its ends. It is instructive to note, however, that the Interborough spy system is almost an exact reflection of any character and dealings of the company officials, its president, its vice-president, its chief legal advisor, its superintendents of departments, its company union officials, etc. While it cannot be claimed, for instance, that the snooping tactics employed by the Interborough are more vicious or extreme than the methods practised elsewhere by employers, it is unquestionably true that the local traction corporations hold a record for pettiness and small dealings, "petty larceny" methods, as the men on the road call them.

The "Beakey."

The Interborough spy system is directed from a division which goes by the imposing title of "Intelligence Department." The intelligence department, which is probably the legal department and may, indeed, be considered a part of it. As will be shown later the chief spy and inquisitor is none other than Mr. E. J. Quackenbush, chief counsel of the Interborough.

According to information furnished by Mr. Quackenbush's predecessor, the system was founded a number of years ago by a man called Beakey. The founder, who died but a few years back, nevertheless, did not live to see the full fruits of his labor. His name, however, has passed down as a heritage to his now numerous followers. The term "Beakey" has come to be applied to everyone on the railroad acting in the capacity of informer and stool pigeon.

To do "Beakey" work for the company is to carry out anything from petty espionage, chief of the intelligence department, a position now occupied by a gentleman called Rhatigan, to serving as a petty "Dollar-a-day" man. Of this latter, very interesting brand of informer more will be said presently.

No Brains Needed.

In ordinary times the work of the "Beakey" is not very trying; nor does it require any even ordinary amount of intelligence. The force at such times is relatively small, varying from ten to perhaps twenty men.

But in times of a threatened or actual strike, in a period following a walkout or during a process of active organization such as the present, the force is increased to fifty, sixty or even a hundred. The new circumstances compel the employment of numerous "private" detectives, secret service agents, Burns operatives, etc.

The customary work of the "Beakey" is to "ride the railroad." His business is to keep tabs of the men, to report any violations such as smoking on the job, "speeding" the train, sleeping in "dead" cars, etc.

The penalty for these minor offenses is usually a suspension of several days. As has already been pointed out, it is these petty suspensions which, particularly since the last strike, have become so necessary to the functioning of the company union. For the slightest offense or none at all the men are taken off the job. In the past they would have been sent to the company officials to adjust their grievances. In every case, however, they must now report to Paddy Connolly, who assumes the role of a benevolent Santa Claus returning to Dutch-land of company union tricks the gift of the suspended bread basket. No one is deceived by this cheap trickery. The men need their jobs and they go to Paddy humbly because of the pressure of their needs and not because they have any faith in the company union.

In addition to the job of bringing about these petty suspensions, the "Beakey" must, of course, keep tabs on the agents who collect the money from the turnstiles; he must always be on the look-out for evidences of "agitation," keep his eyo on company union meetings, etc. When business becomes slack, when there is nothing to report and the "Beakey" is faced with the prospect of losing his job, he may resort to chasing up the newsboys who ride the trains. The Interborough is not above prosecuting these victims of the capitalist grinding machine which compels boys of twelve and fourteen years to spend the night hours seeking to make the few pennies which in many cases are the chief support of a family.

Largely Ornamental.

The "Beakey's" work among the men soon makes him known and he is easily recognized. In fact, his part in the elaborate spy system is a very secondary one, and he may be said to act as a sort of smoke screen to hide the more subtle snoopers within the ranks of the men.

One of the chief sources upon which the company relies for information is a group of stool pigeons known as the "Dollar-a-day" men. The name has arisen from the fact that certain of the workers receive a dollar a day in addition to their regular wages for the special service of supplying information to the company. At first the dollar-a-day man was "appointed" from among the workers generally. That is, the particular men who for one reason or another were thought to be suitable were approached and given the "appointment." The crude method was found to be unsatisfactory and the technique has since become more subtle.

To develop a good "Dollar-a-day" man is no mean accomplishment and the resources of all the Interborough intelligences were set to the task.

FRANCE is an ingenuous country as well as a beautiful one. French ambassadors of the old school had trouble in Washington trying to convince Andrew Mellon that their country is almost broke and that it would be quite nice of Mr. Mellon to forget such an indecorous thing as money. But Andy needs all the money he can get hold of to buy powder for the good and welfare of Nicaragua, China and other parts of the world where our bankers have their money invested. And France needs all the money she can collect to hold the Riffians and Syrians in subjection.

FRENCH ambassadors need their grace and polish on the wives of Washington's upper political circles and the female retinue which Gallic envoys brought their charms to bear on the male section of Washington's political elite. But to no avail. Uncle Sam talked money and the old-type ambassadors went home. Now the French government tried a new one. They sent a poet. The next time Mellon talks cash to France's representative the poet may turn a pair of soulful eyes on him and sing "Coming thru the rye," even tho Andy has disposed of his distilleries.

Wealthy Suffragette Glories in Marriage

Dill of Washington.

"I think that since a woman is to be married only once, she might as well have everything associated with the age old ritual of that lovely ceremony," Miss Jones said. RED REVEL FOR CHICAGOESE ON NEXT SATURDAY

The Heavy Ticket Sales Bring Joy to Many

CHICAGO, March 15. Fun will be the main business of the Red Revel which will be held here next Saturday night in Mirror Hall, 1130 North Western Avenue. The affair will gyrate according to the latest whims of Terpsichore to the strains of Kissin's famous Russian orchestra.

Read The Glad Tidings.

The above is an nbbreviated picture of Arnie Swabeck, General Secretary of Dustrict 8, caught in the act of reading reports of ticket sales for the Red Revel which will take place next Saturday. As you may gather from the joyful visage there will be considerable clinking of coin in the district treasury after the faithful make returns for their tickets.

In appealing to the radical workers of Chicago to attend the affair the arrangements committee did not fail for customers to come as a matter of duty, learning from experience that there is nothing more repugnant to the kind of a sensitive soul that likes to dance and make merry than a duty of any kind. On the contrary the committee stressed the enjoyment to be derived from a trifling investment in the price of an admission ticket.

Pennington to Head Legal Liquor Trust

WASHINGTON, March 15.—Prohibition Administrator J. D. Pennington, of Pittsburgh, today appeared definitely slated for the new commissionship of prohibition created by the reorganization law.

Financially strong groups would buy out the small owners, under Andrews' plan.

New York Firm That Moved to St. Louis, Closed by a Strike

(By a Worker Correspondent.)

ST. LOUIS, Mo., March 15.—On Friday morning March 11th, 100 workers of the Western Leather Coat Co. a former New York City firm, went on strike. This firm when in New York employed about 12 workers. In the four years since they have operated their sweat shop in St. Louis the firm has increased their force until now they employ 100 workers.

Several weeks ago the boss of the firm declared that wages would be cut 40%. An organization campaign was started by the Local of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and Wont Recognize Union.

This morning the Committee of the local demanded the return of the wage-cut which had been enforced and recognition of the union. The firm declared that they would return the reduction and even grant an increase if the workers wished, but that under no circumstances would they grant recognition of the union The committee countered that they would not accept the return of the wage-cut unless the firm granted recognition of the union; and the strike was declared.

The workers of this shop are showing the proper spirit and the determination to win this strike. The Amalgamated, Louis being an open-shop town where no union can successfully carry thru a strike is in a fair way to be broken.

RIGHT WINGERS BREAK UP FUR UNION ELECTION

Chicago Meeting Turned Into Riot by Millstein

CHICAGO, Ill., March 15.—At the meeting of the Fur Workers Union Local 45 of Chicago that was held at the Musicians Hall last Friday, to elect another member on the executive committee a riot broke loose. The right wingers, seeing that they could not carry the election, called police.

The chairman, A. Finkelstein, seeing that this meeting was called to elect a new member of the executive committee to replace the seat made vacant by the withdrawal of Morris Liberman who took a withdrawal card as he was in partnership with his employer and was at last to come out in the open with the facts.

Affiliation Brothers.

Then the minutes of the regular executive meeting were read, on which there was a recommendation that this local take up the matter of affiliating to the United Hebrew trades and that this matter be left to the majority to decide as the local was expelled due to the fact that Robert Goldstein was one of the delegates and the United Hebrew Trades did not find any other way of getting rid of Robert Goldstein than to expel the local, thereby not letting Robert Goldstein report the part he or the majority has played in the breaking up of the regular meeting of December 14, 1927 when Brother Ben Gold was here in the city to address us.

The recommendation from the executive was to carry the election and then proceed with the business of taking up the matter of the United Hebrew Trades after the election was over, but Millstein and his clique decided to filibuster the floor. Then Millstein attacked the whole history of each and every member of the union that he had any grievance against.

But fortunately every thing must have its end and so the leather-lungs and the parchel throat of Millstein gave way as did the appeal of Israelism. Every one felt that this was enough and there came a time that a vote was to be taken.

At this junction a motion was made to send a delegate to the United Hebrew Trades in the place of Robert Goldstein. This was ruled out of order as it deprived Robert Goldstein from running as a candidate to fill his vacancy. Then a second motion was made that the Fur Workers Union, Local 45 of Chicago be affiliated with the United Hebrew Trades, this motion carried, no one voting against.

Then Millstein raised the cry that this meant that Robert Goldstein could not run, and demanded, that the International vice president take over the chair. This the President, A. Finkelstein, refused to yield and the right wingers started the riot.

TEXTILE TOILERS FIGHT WAGE CUTS IN NEW ENGLAND

Strikes Spread; 3,000 Out in Woonsocket

PAWTUCKET, R. I., March 15.—New England textile workers are bitterly fighting the savage wage-slashing policy adopted by the mill owners. Strikes are breaking out throughout New England as a result of the attempts of textile manufacturers to lengthen hours and cut wages.

Although strikes are sporadic as yet, it is quite likely that textile workers throughout New England will unite in an effort to resist the latest onslaught of the mill owners.

3,000 Workers Strike.

The Globe and the Social Mills, of Woonsocket, R. I. owned by the Manville-Jenckes Company, which employ about 3,000 operatives, are both completely tied up by strikes. Workers in the Social Mill refused several weeks ago to accept the fifty-four hour week which the Manville-Jenckes Company attempted to force upon them, and operatives in the Globe Mill joined them in a sympathetic walkout.

Determined To Fight.

LAWRENCE, Mass., March 15.—Two hundred working days a week at the Pacific Mills textile plant ordered previously is found to be unsatisfactory to the mill owners.

The strikers walked out a week ago to protest against the installation of a time card system, which cut their wages and increased their work.

Town Hot for Work.

TILTON, N. H., March 15.—One hundred and thirty operatives were thrown out of work when the American Woolen Company closed down for an indefinite period.

Continue Wage Slashing.

MANCHESTER, N. H., March 15.—Despite the recent improvement in the textile industry, mill throughout New England are using their wage-slashing axe.

The New England textile industry is picking up, Robert A. Amory of the Amory-Brown Company said in a look of business men here today.

Small Pox In Brooklyn.

BEACON, N. Y., March 15.—With three cases of small pox reported in Brooklyn, three more coming from state and local authorities were today taking all possible steps to avert a possible epidemic of the disease.

ANTI-IMPERIALIST DELEGATES FORM PERMANENT ORGANIZATION

The article printed below is part of a series written by the delegate of the All-America Anti-Imperialist League to the Brussels Congress Against Colonial Oppression and Imperialism. The congress was made up of delegates from anti-imperialist organizations, peace societies and labor unions in the European, American and other imperialist nations, from labor bodies and nationalist organizations in the colonial countries, and from subjugated races even in countries with full sovereignty.

Important resolutions were passed, for the practical carrying on of the work of freeing conquered peoples from their slavery. A survey of the work of the congress and the personalities attending, which have made it one of the great events of this era, will be found in these articles.

By MANUEL GOMEZ
ARTICLE VI

Brussels, Feb. 16. (By Mail, Delayed)—With the delegates of all nations and races singing, stamping and clasping hands, the first world congress against imperialism came to an end at 1:30 this morning. The congress leaves behind it a permanent organization embracing groups in 40 different countries, which will immediately proceed to take up the practical work of carrying out the decisions of the congress for the coordination and active prosecution of the joint struggle against world imperialism.

Historical Fact.

What direct consequences this congress will have for the liberation of oppressed people - how great a force has been created here at Brussels—it is too early to say, but that, as Edo Fimmen remarked before laying down his gavel, "this congress already belongs to history, cannot be doubted." The "League Against Imperialism and Colonial Rule, and for National Independence," which is the official name of the new organization, has on its general council representatives of the most important national-revolutionary organizations the world has yet seen.

Its Active Committee.

Its active directing committee consists of J. Nehru (Indian National Congress); Lim Khoomintang (Kuomintang party of China); Mohammed Hatta (Sarakat Ravat, Dutch East Indies); Lamine Senghor (Committee for the Defense of the Black Race, Central Africa); Manuel Ugarte (Argentine Republic); George Lansbury (Independent Labor Party of Great Britain); Edo Fimmen (International Federation of Transport Workers); H. Marteaux (Belgium), and Willi Munzenberger (Germany). Lansbury will be chairman, and Fimmen vice chairman. The headquarters of the league will be in Paris.

Alternates for the small directing committee are Henri Barbusse (France); Roger Baldwin (United States); Robert Bridgeman (England) and H. Gibarti (Hungary).

High spots in the last days' sessions were Murray's detailed report on organization and Lansbury's speech against Great Britain's present war moves in China. Other speakers at the closing sessions included Moore and Baldwin of the United States and Ernst Toller, the well known German poet and playwright.

For American Negro.

Moore pointed out that the Negroes in the United States represent a people more than one-tenth of the total population, living in conditions of group-subjection comparable to those of many colonial and semi-colonies. He declares that, as a Negro, he was bound to consider that the fate of the Negro race was to a considerable extent bound up with the world struggle for the emancipation of all colored races and classes.

Baldwin spoke very briefly, giving many little-known facts regarding imperialist rule in Samoa, Guam and the Virgin Islands. He seconded the resolution introduced by the Latin-American delegation, calling for unalterregated struggle against American imperialism.

No less than 500 messages of greeting were received during the course of the congress. It was impossible to read more than three or four of them.

Socialist Leads In Movement to Militarize The French Republic

PARIS, March 15. France won't "arm the nation so that she can breathe the air of peace without thought of danger."

M. Paul Boncour, socialist deputy and ardent advocate of peace, thus explained in an interview today the reasons behind the new military organization bill which the chamber of deputies is now discussing. The bill which aims at commandeering all of the nation's man power and resources in time of war has been criticized by some as incongruous with French participation in the Disarmament conference at Geneva.

Earthquake In Spain.

MATARO, Spain, March 15.—The population of Mataro was thrown into panic today by two earthquake shocks. The first shock, which was slight, alarmed the populace, causing the people to flee their houses. The second shock, several hours later, was much more severe and caused the greatest alarm.

No casualties or serious damage have been reported.

The Daily Worker Every Day

Comrades and Fellow Workers:

After a week's heroic struggle of the Passaic textile workers, the mill barons were forced to submit to a union in the textile industry of Passaic. They are however putting obstacles in the way of maintaining such an organization. Although the strike is almost over, they are taking the workers back very slowly, with the result that thousands of families are without means of existence. Their children are hungry.

There are many families whose sole support in the struggle during the past periods because of their activities in the strike. You must come to their rescue. Relief must go on with full speed!

The General Relief Committee, who is maintaining a few food stores in Passaic, appeals to all those who have taken milk coupons to send in their money as soon as possible, no matter how much you have collected. Send the money immediately to the General Relief Committee, 799 Broadway, Room 225, also ask for more coupons to sell.

The office is open from 9 a. m. to 7 p. m. daily.

Mussolini's Puppets Inflict Savage Jail Terms on Communists

ROME, March 15. — Thirty-six Italian Communists have been sentenced to terms of imprisonment ranging from two to fifteen years with the additional imposition of heavy fines.

Their only crime is opposition to the labor-smashing tactics of Mussolini. They were arrested in the notorious red raids in September, 1925, and the summer of 1926, and were not sentenced until yesterday, when odious sentences were imposed upon them by the special military defense court recently created.

The technical charges lodged against them were "conspiracy against the safety of the state, formentation of class hatred, subversion of the powers of the state and offences against Premier Mussolini."

Poor of All Colors United by a Common Misery in California

By JOHN H. OWENS
(Special to the Daily Worker.)

RIDLEY, Calif., March 15. There is widespread unemployment among the agricultural workers and migratory laborers in the California cotton belt, the Imperial Palo Verde and Salt Lake Valleys.

The slump in cotton and agricultural prices forced many tenants and share croppers into bankruptcy, thus hurling them into the ranks of the agricultural workers and increasing the ranks of the unemployed.

Forced to Relinquish.

Many small proprietors have been forced to relinquish their holdings for the accumulated taxes and excessively high water rates.

The local banks and chambers of commerce are taking advantage of the situation and organizing the cotton here for the purpose of lowering the already painful wages. Were it not for the fact that rural grocers are extending credit to many, actual starvation would face a great number.

The Federated are crowded with the families and the dispossessed; the tenant in Forest on Buckbrush wages—many marks and many are walking, carrying their bedrolls on their backs, men, women and children—Mexicans, whites and Negroes.

There is equality and fraternity in misery. They are organizing with no definite objective in view. The California land barons have the workers just where they want them.

Kitchen Revolution In Lake Forest College

LAKE FOREST, Ill., March 15.—The dean of Lake Forest College is on probation, placed there by the students. At the end of a week, if the dean does not change his tactics from those of previous weeks, then the students will go on strike.

The students contend that the dean is taking too much authority. "He is even attempting to regulate the diet of the co-eds," Earl Le Roy, the president of the student council said.

Springfield Fears Flood.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., March 15. With the Connecticut River rising at the rate of two feet in 24 hours, the city prepared today to start pumps to prevent water from backing up sewers into cellars in the north end. Flood conditions were expected within 48 hours as the river was 10 feet above low water mark.

FRENCH EDITOR DONS OVERALLS FOR U. S. TOUR

Labor Journalist to Study Conditions

By ART SHIELDS, Federated Press.

H. du Bruiel, editor of the official organ of the French Metal Workers Federation, has come to America to tour our industrial centers as a worker. That means that he is donning overalls and will go from job to job, from Philadelphia to Detroit and other large cities, studying conditions from the vantage point of a lathe.

"That is the way to get the facts," says the French observer. It never occurred to him, apparently, to travel through the factories with a Chamber of Commerce guide at his elbow, like the London Daily Mail labor mission to the United States some time ago.

De Bruiel will write his observations in his magazine Le People. He says the daily newspapers of France are filled with propaganda for the American Plan. They tell rosy stories of the high wages and high speed in American factories. So du Bruiel has come to see for himself, and he will give a peak of his life to the job.

Some of the things he will see in the Yankee plants will not seem so strange. For instance, the welfare schemes in vogue in our big open shop plants. Since the war the French industrialists who are fighting the unions have been borrowing many of these devices. There is company housing, company hospital and mutual-aiding service and company sports.

"It is becoming fashionable for high society to take vacations in the factories," said du Bruiel. "In our big steel mill there is an author[illegible] committees on the job."

Meaning that not all committees are authentic [illegible] in America.

Now, at the automatic straight-line production factories in Pennsylvania and Ohio, [illegible] Angeles [illegible] Detroit, [illegible] have been established in French plants of the first rank, and the [illegible] "efficiency" and other terms [illegible] are made to pass for intelligible [illegible] into the French language.

But [illegible] are the [illegible] workers. People [illegible] and the [illegible] about relief. The [illegible] saving in France that before the war the French worker got rich and had to [illegible] giving nothing. He hopes [illegible] the workers [illegible] become [illegible].

Du Bruiel is visiting at Brookwood Labor College on the outskirts of Katonah, before starting his tour of the jobs.

Nor do they explain why the American minister to Guatemala received a cablegram—copy of which exists in Washington official files—instructing him to obtain Guatemala's recognition of Diaz.

Minister Geissler did secure prompt recognition of Diaz by Guatemala, since his instructions had included a hint that unless it were granted the United States might refuse to recognize the newly elected president of Guatemala.

William Green's Pledge to Kerensky.

Kerensky's visit and public activities have served to throw some additional light on the attitude of the leadership of the American Federation of Labor toward the workers' and peasants' government of the Soviet Union, to show that this leadership is not merely negatively opposed to the government of the Soviet Union but that it is prepared to join hands with its enemies in a campaign against it.

Kerensky is here to raise funds and is being piloted by A. J. Sack, long active as an enemy of the Soviet Union and a one-time close associate of Bakhmeteff, the czarist ambassador who held forth in Washington and grafted on the Soviet Union funds held illegally by New York bankers.

There can be little doubt that Kerensky's visit is closely connected with the new imperialist offensive against the Soviet Union in which Great Britain is playing the dual role of provocateur and organizer.

Enter William Green, president of the American Federation. According to the New York Herald Tribune, Green called on Kerensky and gave him, in the name of the A. F. of L., a pledge of sympathy and support.

As reported in the Herald-Tribune, Green said:

The American Federation of Labor will support in every possible and legitimate way those elements in Russia that are striving to free Russia from Bolshevism as they freed her from czarism and will lend particular sympathy to the creation of a free and independent labor movement.

There are more than 9,000,000 workers in the Russian trade unions. The Russian trade union movement is the foundation of the Soviet Government, it is the leader of the work of industrial reconstruction, its chief task at present is the building of a socialist system of society. The Russian trade unionists will indulge in Homeric laughter when they hear that President Green, head of a labor movement which has not as yet even succeeded in abolishing anti-labor injunctions, and which dares not open its mouth to protest to Congress against the massacre of its Cuban brothers, "will lend particular sympathy to the creation of a free and independent labor movement"—in the Soviet Union.

But the ridiculous impudence of President Green should not be allowed to obscure the fact that the leadership of the American labor movement is the sworn enemy of the labor movement of the Soviet Union just as its master, American imperialism, is the class enemy of the workers' and peasants' government of the Soviet Union. The pledge of support given Kerensky will not enable this discredited puppet to play any important role in the imperialist offensive, but it does indicate that the A. F. of L. officialdom stands ready to aid actively the class enemies of the masses for war on the Soviet Union and does not content itself with mere opposition to recognition by the United States.

Henry Ford and the Jews

It is not necessary to lionize Aaron Sapiro, the lawyer who has specialized in organizing wealthy farmers into co-operative marketing associations and who has received fat fees for his services, to be glad that Henry Ford has at last been challenged to show cause why he should be allowed to use his immense wealth to stir up anti Semitism.

Ford is America's foremost Jew baiter. The Dearborn Independent has specialized in putting forth, with the prestige of Ford guaranteeing its authenticity, the most vicious anti-Jewish propaganda ever published in the United States.

The thousands of Ford agencies have been utilized to flood their respective territories with this literature and the harvest of racial and religious hatred that has been reaped is incalculable.

The fact that many Wall Street bankers are Jews seems to have been sufficient to convince the automobile king—a rather stupid child in everything other than the field of industry—that an international conspiracy to establish Jewish hegemony of the world was on foot.

To Ford the class struggle is non-existent. All Jews are simply Jews. There is no conflict between Jewish bankers and bosses and Jewish workers. Judaism comes first. The Russian revolution, which produced such figures as Trotsky, Kameneff, Zinoviev, Pianitsky, etc., the German revolution with its Luxemburg and Liebknecht, and the host of other Jewish leaders of the working class in all countries, to Ford are merely manifestations of the international conspiracy of Judaism.

That Jewish exploiters are the first to feel the wrath of the revolting working class members at their own race means nothing to Henry Ford who says that "history is bunk."

It is true, of course, that the Sapiro libel suit, with Senator Reed on one side and William Galligan on the other, will be one of the finest exhibitions of bunk that the American people have yet read about, that every effort will be made to make the issue one of Communism rather than one of libelling a whole racial group, but nevertheless, the case is important for the American working class in as much as it will expose the extent to which a supposedly brainy billionaire has been duped by his own press agents, and the immense power for evil that unrestricted control of great wealth wrung from the workers gives to one individual under capitalism.

Putting Senators in Their Place

Will the state department order out the marines commanded by General Russell in Haiti to prevent Senator King landing on the island owned by the National City Bank?

Won't this be a glorious sight? Coolidge and Kellogg protecting the "sovereignty" of Haiti against invasion by a United States senator.

Now if the marines will just keep Borah out of Nicaragua perhaps these senators will begin to understand that colonies are run by the armed forces and not by persons who have to suffer the indignity of running for public office.

LONG LIVE THE RUTHENBERG METHOD OF FIGHTING FOR OUR PARTY AND THE FARMERS AND WORKERS

By ALFRED KNUTSON,
Secretary, United Farmers' Educational League.

IN the death of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg the Party and the working class of America and the world has suffered a great loss. We can do no better than to go forward in the spirit of Ruthenberg which is the spirit of Lenin. Only the Lenin spirit is the rock upon which our activities in the future must be based.

Altho I am not as intimately connected with the struggles in the great industrial centers of the country as many of you, I learnt to know Comrade Ruthenberg really well thru personal contact at meetings and conventions as well as by means of regular correspondence with him in relation to the Party work among the farmers.

More than any other figure within the Communist movement of America, since its inception in 1919, Comrade Ruthenberg stands at the very center of its struggles and successes.

His personality and the Party activities were inseparable. Every step and growth of the Party bear the impress of his spirit. His clear analysis of principles and formulation of tactics guided our activities in all our struggles. In struggles to come the Ruthenberg line cannot fail to form the basis of our work.

Intelligent leadership and unflinching devotion to the Party and the working class characterized the work of Comrade Ruthenberg. His severity, good will and genial disposition caught all of us and never failed of results. Considerateness and strength of purpose as well as a clear understanding of the revolutionary goal made him what he was—a real leader.

What shall we say? Historically Comrade Ruthenberg stands in the forefront of the American Communist movement. It is for us now to go forward with our work in his spirit.

Long live the Ruthenberg method of fighting for our Party and the farmers and workers!

Let's go forward in all our work in the Ruthenberg-Lenin spirit.

Must Recruit Thousands of New Members

Statement by Finnish Bureau, Workers (Communist) Party

COMRADE C. E. Ruthenberg, General Secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party of America and leader of the revolutionary workers of America is dead. Together with the Party, the masses of revolutionary workers are overcome with deepest grief over this unexpected occurrence.

But, even the death of our comrad and leader leaves for the present an unfilled vacancy in the Party and in the ranks of the revolutionary American workers, still his life's work will for all time be an exemplar for all Party members and revolutionary workers.

Comrade Ruthenberg sacrificed the best years of his youth and manhood in the strengthening and upbuilding of the revolutionary movement of the working-class. Ever since 1901 Comrade Ruthenberg has been known thruout the country as a revolutionary Marxian, at which time he became known as the most notable figure in the left wing movement of the Socialist Party.

During the critical period of the Great World War, when the capitalistic methods of oppression towards revolutionists raged at their height, Comrade Ruthenberg lead those workers who were loyal to the revolutionary socialism, ridding them from the leadership of socialist traitors.

Comrade Ruthenberg was one of our most outstanding organizers, and from 1919 to the end of his life he was the secretary of the Party, excepting the period when he served his prison sentence.

Comrade Ruthenberg was a most courageous fighter for his Party and for his class. He fought always, at every moment, even when danger was greatest. He sacrificed his entire life and energy to the Party and to his class. As an able speaker, agitator, organizer, writer, theoretician and leader, he was an able spokesman of the revolutionary worker class movement. For this reason he was constantly haunted by the capitalist class and its official officers. With condemnation and persecution those in power tried to crush this American writer, theoretician and leader. Since 1917, within the last 20 years, he was free from prison for pending prison sentences for 5 months, sentences which surrounded him contemptuously.

But Comrade Ruthenberg never gave up, never became disheartened. He always was loyal to his principles, to his class and to his Party. Comrade Ruthenberg was a revolutionary. Comrade Ruthenberg was a Marxian. Comrade Ruthenberg was a true bolshevik.

The Workers (Communist) Party Finnish Bureau urges all Party members and revolutionary workers to hold Comrade Ruthenberg as an example, what a true revolutionist and Communist should be. It urges all Party members and workers to study deeply Comrade Ruthenberg's life work and those principles which he represented. It encourages all workers to express the same kind of loyality, sacrifice, chivalry, diligence, undefatigability and love for the proletarian principles of freedom and struggles, and to work with the same kind of untiring zeal in the spreading of these principles, in their strenethening and realization, as did our gone comrade and leader.

Let us begin to fill that vacancy which Comrade Ruthenberg left in our ranks, by recruiting thousands of new members to the Workers (Communist) Party of America.

Mov Comrade Ruthenberg's memory live forever as an encouraging example to the revolutionary proletarians of America!

Long live the Workers (Communist) Party of America!

Long live the Communist International!

Workers (Communist) Party of America
Finnish Bureau.

Ruthenberg Memorial Meetings Continue

Thousands of workers all over the United States are still gathering almost every night in memorial meetings to pay their last respects to Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg, founder of the American Communist movement.

Last night New Italian Hall, Latrobe, Pa., was packed by coal miners who gathered to hear speakers tell of Ruthenberg's activities in the front ranks of the labor movement. Tonight a meeting is being held in Schenectady, N. Y.

Messages Still Received.

Scores of messages are still being received at this office daily from all over the United States sent by workers, farmers, labor organizations and sections of the Workers Communist Party in which they express their sorrow at the death of Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg, founder of the Workers (Communist) Party.

Lillie Jackson, Oklahoma City, Okla., writes that the death of Comrade Ruthenberg is a severe blow to the working class movement of America."

The German Workingwomen's Association, Chicago, says that "all workers should join the party that Ruthenberg was a member of and fight with us."

Help Sustaining Fund.

The Madison, Ill., Branch of The Workers (Communist) Party, writes: "That in mourning the loss of our comrade, C. E. Ruthenberg, we are sending you herewith $10 for the sustaining fund of The DAILY WORKER."

Central St. Nucleus, Workers Party, Milwaukee, Wisc. "Our task will now be harder to achieve, therefore we pledge ourselves to close our ranks and build the party."

McKeesport, Pa. Nucleus 6, Workers Party.—"We the members of the above nucleus pledge ourselves in the name of the American working class to carry on the fight that Comrade Ruthenberg left. Long live the Workers (Communist) Party!"

From South Slavic Workers.

South Slavic workers attending the Chicago Workers School, in a declaration they adopted state:

"In the death of Comrade Ruthenberg, the workers of the United States of America lost a brave fighter—but not only the workers of the United States, but the workers of other countries. For Comrade Ruthenberg was the fighter against the greatest imperialism in the world, the imperialism of Wall Street. It will be hard to find a leader to take his place, therefore every worker in America must struggle harder against imperialism and must organize in the militant, revolutionary party to which he gave his life."

Memorial Meeting For C. Ruthenberg at Royal Palace, Friday, March 18

The Brooklyn Section of the Workers (Communist) Party will hold a Ruthenberg memorial meeting on Friday, March 18th, at Royal Palace, 16 Manhattan Ave., Brooklyn.

The speakers will be: J. Louis Engdahl, Wm. W. Weinstone, Rebecca Grecht, L. Pruswika and a Jewish speaker.

The famous Lithuanian chorus "Vaila" will sing. Admission free.

Party, Wm. Allis, Wisc. "In the death of Comrade Ruthenberg our party has lost its leader. We pledge ourselves to carry out his words to build the party, close the ranks and fight on."

A Champion of Exploited."

North Workers Section, Workers Party, New York. "With the deepest sorrow in our hearts we mourn the loss of our beloved comrade and great American champion of the exploited masses, Charles E. Ruthenberg."

A membership meeting of the Workers Party, Pa. Local of the Workers (Communist) Party has adopted a resolution on the death of Comrade Ruthenberg. It read in part as follows:

"The passionate membership of the party is grief stricken over the loss of our most outstanding leader; our source of courage. The revolutionary workers of the world, particularly the American working class, has lost its outstanding leader, its courageous and most loyal and devoted champion.

"Comrade Ruthenberg stood firm for the highest ideals of the workers, fought loyally for clarity of vision and adherence to the line laid down by the Communist International, leader of the world proletariat. In strategy, he was shrewd, in theory he was clear and in practice he was vigorous. Before the courts of capitalism our leader stood defiant. Judges, courts and prisons, and every branch of the capitalist state meant to Comrade Ruthenberg only means of oppression and tyranny of the producing masses.

"We close our ranks and face the enemy. Build the mass Communist Party. Stand by the Central Committee and the Communist International."

"General Loss."

Factory District Branch 3, Workers Party, New York. — "Deeply grieves the loss of our Comrade C. E. Ruthenberg general secretary of our party."

Workmens Circle.

Workmens Circle, Branch 192, Buffalo, N. Y., at a regular meeting, adopted a resolution that reads in part: "Whereas death has taken from the midst of the working class movement, one of the ablest, and one of the most fierce fighters in the revolutionary movement, not only here in the United States, but also all over the world in the person of Charles Emil Ruthenberg,

"Resolved that we express our grief and resolve to continue the good work for which Comrade Ruthenberg had sacrificed his life."

From His Former Branch.

Subsection 6 C. New York.—"Comrades of Brownsville remember him well for he was at one time a member of our branch following his incarceration at Sing Sing. We mourn our loss. Comrade Ruthenberg is dead, but we will carry on the victory."

Shop Nucleus, 3, Subsection 6.—New York.—"We grieve at the loss of our fearless revolutionary leader. His death makes us more determined to carry on the fight for the victory of the working class."

Shock to Thousands.

Street Nucleus, New 3, Pittsburgh, Pa.— The news of the death of Comrade Ruthenberg came as a shock to all the members of our nucleus and to thousands of workers in the city of Pittsburgh. Comrade Ruthenberg's courage and devotion to the revolutionary movement served all of us as an inspiration. We feel that the loss of our leader cannot be replaced.

"We pledge ourselves to redouble our efforts to continue the work for which Comrade Ruthenberg lived and died. We pledge ourselves to close our ranks and build a strong Marxian-Leninist section of the Communist International in America."

Hannibal Becomes a Liberal

"The Road to Rome" Is a Shavian Satire on America at War

Reviewed by HARBOR ALLEN.

"The Road to Rome" is the offspring of those shrewd historical comedies Bernard Shaw was writing twenty years ago. Twenty years ago those comedies had something to say. But in the meantime they have grown old; and old ideas, like old people, are apt to bear agenic children.

Rome in 216 B. C., says Robert Emmet Sherwood, the editor of Life and the author of this play, was very much like America in 1917. Its dictator, Fabius Maximus, was a pompous, woolen-minded, paunch-bellied senator who couldn't satisfy his wife. All he could do was make patriotic speeches. Rome itself is pictured as a bullying, narrow-minded city, dull and arrogant and rotten, full of fake morality, impotent men, and frowzy women. Having achieved supremacy, it doesn't know what to do with it and can't hold on to it. The very streets reek with decay.

The one thoughtful person in this Main Street of antiquity is Amytis, the wife of Fabius. Amytis is an Athenian. She is thoughtful. She is liberal and sympathizes with the slaves. She too feels a prisoner in Rome where nobody understands her finer feelings, her philosophic detachment. She may not know who Hannibal is—even though he has camped like that Amytis steals into Hannibal's camp at night and converts him to "the glory of submission." He would have you believe that this Hannibal, driven relentlessly to march his armies across the face of Europe, now with the prize in his hand, will do a right about face and slip off empty-handed. Why? Because war isn't nice. Because men are always killed in vain. Because it isn't worth while.

WILLIAM HANLEY

In "What Anne Brought Home" now playing at Wallack's Theatre.

And so the "Road to Rome" falls far, far short of being a hard, swift satire on a dying society. It is in itself too much a product of that dying society. Together with that dying society it has the same anti-rheumatism and fatty degeneration of the heart. I am willing to believe that a night with a pretty woman may be very pleasant and very useful. But only a society worn out and burned out would tell you that a night with a woman is worth more than conquering the world.

("The Road to Rome" is produced by Brady and Woman at the Playhouse, 48th Street.)

THE CAPITALIST PRESS IS FRANTIC

THE New York Times raises its perpendicular at the deep contempt shown by the tremendous throngs which poured out to the Ruthenberg Memorial Meetings. It chides the workers for not showing greater devotion to such men as Senator Carroll, for instance.

It is this devotion to the revolutionary cause, this wonderful spirit of self-sacrifice, which is the driving force behind our movement. The capitalist press, with all its wealth, with all its resources, with all its hired talent and other advantages, cannot stimulate, and cannot exhibit that unstinted devotion which the workers feel for The DAILY WORKER. No amount of publicity or talent will arouse this asset for the capitalist press. The press can thunder by the hour in particular sheet bags it with the same amount of sentiment as he displays toward a cake of soap. The worker who buys The DAILY WORKER does so with a feeling, that it is HIS paper, flesh of his flesh, and blood of his blood.

The Ruthenberg DAILY WORKER Sustaining Fund is the expression of this sense of devotion and loyalty which our readers feel for The DAILY WORKER. In very tangible form it is a concrete indication that the readers of The DAILY WORKER look upon the paper as their own organ, in whose maintenance and success they are vitally interested. The Ruthenberg DAILY WORKER Sustaining Fund will be a unique monument to Comrade Ruthenberg as well as a tribute to the fact that there is a newspaper in the United States which has succeeded in sweetening the whole-hearted and agitated support of the workers.

PUBLIC HEARING ON EXPULSION OF FURRIERS URGED

Fur Joint Board Wants "Rank and File" Trial

The persistent refusal of the reactionary officials of the International Fur Workers' Union and the A. F. of L. Investigating Committee to hold a public hearing on the charges made against members of the New York Furriers' Joint Board, is ample proof that these charges are false, as Ben Gold, manager of the Joint Board, states in a letter sent yesterday to the International's General Executive Board.

"Although these right wing officials loudly announced that they had proof that the furriers had given graft to the New York police during last year's strike, they have never dared bring us to trial on this or any other of their clumsy, frame-up charges," said Gold. In his letter he accuses the officials of fearing "an exposure of your treacherous acts," if the facts were told in public; and he challenges them to try the Joint Board before a committee of the rank and file.

Expulsion Illegal.

Gold's communication also points out that the constitution of the International Fur Workers' Union states that "no local can be expelled except by the convention itself," yet on March 2nd the officials simply announced that the locals were expelled and the Joint Board dissolved.

Gold also points out the hypocrisy of the International which brings, as a reason for expulsion of the Joint Board officers, the charge that they relinquished during the strike the demand for equal division of work. As the right wing well know this was relinquished by them and President Green when they tried to negotiate a settlement of the strike behind the backs of the Strike Committee and the workers.

Scharhtman Approved.

In answer to another one of the charges the Joint Board concerning the transfer of funds to the General Strike Committee—a procedure which is always customary in every strike—Gold reminds the International that President Oster Schachtman approved this transfer of funds. He was a member of the Strike Committee at the time, and remained one until his mysterious disappearance to participate in the Washington frame-up conference.

Autos For Gangsters.

The charge made yesterday by right wing leaders that the Joint Board pickets were cruising through the fur district in automobiles is absolutely untrue, and was probably made to prepare the way for the International's gangsters to begin operations in the fur market in cars just as the guerillas of the "Bonnakers" right wing have been doing for some time.

Thugs Scared.

Since the International's official gangsters tried to attack fur workers last Wednesday and met with such sorry defeat, they have not been frequenting the district so regularly in their efforts to terrorize workers into registering with the International.

Doubtless, with the protection of automobiles, they will attempt to resume operations. The fur workers' picket committee will be on hand as usual, walking out riding through the market and protecting all workers from the thugs of the "Special Reorganization Committee."

Greek Workers Meet.

Greek fur workers are called to a meeting arranged by the Joint Board of the Furriers' Union at Bryant Hall on Wednesday night, right after work.

There will be a discussion of recent developments in the affairs of the union, especially the right wing International officials' attempt to make use of the Greek workers in the attack upon the Joint Board and all progressive forces in the union.

Los Angeles Discovers Technical Aid — Reds!

LOS ANGELES, Cal. March 15.—Department of justice agents have uncovered the most terrible plot of them all, according to a news story carried in the Los Angeles Daily News. The Technical Aid Society for Social Research, which has been quietly going here for some time, has become overwhelmingly red, it is announced. "An organization under cover of which Russian Communist agents are conducting branch schools in Bolshevism, which have been raised in this country. At that rate, it may take them another five years to ferret out the brain centers of the Technical Aid Society whose meetings and affairs are carried among radicals in cities.

CHICAGO LABOR DEFENSE BAZAAR TEACHES CHILD WELFARE BY ACTUAL CARE OF CHILD

By CARL HAESSLER (Federated Press).

CHICAGO, (FP).—By far the most [illegible] feature of the 3-day carnival and bazaar held last week in Chicago was the model worker nursery school set up in one corner of the big Ashland Auditorium. Here parents checked their children at a charge of 15c and went about their pleasure or business, confident that the trained young women in charge of the nursery would provide better care than the parents could themselves.

Though the age limits for the nursery school were 2 to 7 years scores of older children looked longingly into the brightly decorated and lavishly equipped booth wishing that they might also partake of its privileges. These consisted of a slide, several broad and sturdy kindergarten tables, one with a sandbox and tools on it, Mosher kindergarten chairs, children's tools and toys, dolls, balls, trains and what not.

Left Alone.

In accordance with the most modern scientific nursery school teachings, the youngsters were left practically to their own sufficient resources. Each was allowed to take up the occupation that interested him and if several children wished to cooperate in communal play only enough supervision was given to start the group on its way.

Hardly any policing was needed except to keep out the older children that crowded in spite of the age limit. The supervisors kept their voices pitched low, moved slowly and made their guidance as little obvious as possible. The children responded remarkably to the freedom, some of them playing for an hour or more by themselves or harmoniously in groups. It was a vivid object lesson to adults in the communal use of communal property.

Tools and Pictures.

What distinguished this worker nursery from other nursery schools was its emphasis on tools and its bright provocative placards. A dozen hammers and lots of roofing nails invited a number of cork boards into which the nails were pounded, and then rather easily extracted again. These proved popular even with 2-year olds. Small shovels and other tools gave play to the construction impulses of the children.

What About Lenin?

The placards, painted by a worker artist, aimed at the parents as well as the children. A series of What The Toddler Needs began with a simple portion of sunshine and the words "sun and air; cod liver oil in cloudy weather." It was followed by a decorated poster demanding Toys. Strong, Simple, Beautiful—with the explanation that "toys are the tools of play." Sleep and playmates his own age were the burden of the next one. Then came a more subtle poster showing a child contented in a pen just of Lenin and looking questioningly up at the mother. There bore the demand, "Response to answer his questions—no syllabus." The series led up to a sketch of parents and children over the words, "A father and mother who are workers and class conscious, a child contented in a pen just children and their children's children the better society of the future."

"Chased the Grabbers".

Asking what the truthful answer could be to a child's question about Lenin, I learned that "Lenin is the man who chased the grabbers out of Russia." I learned similarly that George Washington is the man who chased the English grabbers out of this country. Finally I learned that there are a lot of honeygrown grabbers left here who will have to be chased before the better society of the future can be built.

Ruth Pearson, who is a university graduate specializing in child psychology and a former instructor at the University of Minnesota, was in charge of the worker model nursery at the bazaar.

MASS MEETING CONDEMNS LITHUANIAN FASCISTI FOR EXECUTIONS AND OUTRAGES ON WORKERS

CHICAGO, Ill., March 15. A well attended mass meeting several days ago in Northwest Hall here, passed the following resolution:

WHEREAS, the fascist government of Lithuania has sentenced to death the teacher Adamowiski, the two students Chomicke and Swarzbung and the trade union leader Vitzai because of their devotion to the cause of the working class and their active protest against the bloody terrorist regime now reigning in their country, and

WHEREAS, four leaders of the working class have already been executed, and many more have been executed to death and life imprisonment, and

WHEREAS, these and other acts of terror committed by said government signalize the beginning of a drive against all sections of the working class, be it

RESOLVED, that Chicago workers in mass meeting, assembled at North West Hall, enter a vigorous protest and demand the release of these workers, and a cessation of the reign of terror instituted against the working class of Lithuania by the fascist government, and be it further

RESOLVED, that copies of this resolution be sent to the Lithuanian Embassy in Washington, D. C., and to the Labor Press.

Italian Workers Served With Injunction

Pursuing their policy of using the methods of the employers against the workers in their efforts to gain control of the union, the forces of Sigmanism have resorted to another in-ladies served.

The chairladies of the two largest Italian shops have been served with injunctions, obtained by Luigi Antonini, exar of the Italian Local 89, restraining them from collecting the dues of the workers. Ida Isacoff and Maria Costa of the H. Rentner shop at 40 Seventh Avenue and Jenni Grassi of the Sheer Panton shop at 220 West 36th street were the chairladies served.

Injunction Habit Growing.

These injunctions follow closely upon another action in which Antonini attempted to restrain all officers and business agents of the Joint Board from calling meetings, issuing leaflets, collecting dues, or in any way assisting workers in their fight against the corrupt influences of Sigmanism.

"As the revolt within the Italian locals against the mal-administrators in office grows greater, they resort to such means as an injunction to attempt to check it," said Louis Hymna, manager of the Joint Board, and one of those enjoined.

Pickets Arrested.

Louis Rosenthal and Esther Kushner were arrested at 336 West 36th street during picketing early Monday morning and charged with disorderly conduct. They paid a $5 fine in Jefferson Market Court. Rosenthal, who was resisting attack when arrested was beaten by his assailants, according to eye witnesses.

Gingsters were noticably absent from the cloak and dress center at the Monday morning picketing. In the fur district, however, they threatened workers, and C. Yanowitz was attacked at 29th street and Sixth avenue and was later arrested. He is fined $10 in Jefferson Market Court.

Caribbean Picked by Rubber Interests for Yankee Exploitation

Pity the poor unsuspecting natives of "northern tropical America." Better yet, help to organize them to fight the worst foe they've met yet.

The America rubber interests have picked on southern Mexico, Costa Rica, Panama, Colombia, Venezuela and western Ecuador for their plantations to compete with the fiji Islands hellholes of the Straits Settlements and the Dutch inferno of Sumatra and Java. Says the Department of Commerce after a survey of the field.

The initial cost of introducing rubber cultivation in northern tropical America, the report reveals, would be considerably less than in the available lands of Sumatra and Malaya, if jungle land were used and methods similar to those employed in banana cultivation were adopted. While it is probable that rubber ran be brought into bearing in tropical America at less cost than in the middle east, the situation in regard to production rosts presents a more difficult problem. The report states that by lowering the cost of upkeep of plantations to the level practiced by banana operators rubber might be produced at approximately 25 cents per pound as rompared with 18 and 20 cents in the middle east.

The outstanding handicaps to successful rubber growing in the region under discussion are the lark of sufficient labor and the relatively high wage arale prevailing in the districts suitable for rubber planting. The only appreciable surplus of labor in northern tropical America at the present time is in the West Indian Islands which could supply from 30,000 to 40,000 workers. In the low lands of Central America laborers are paid from $1 to $1.50 per day as compared with 35 cents and 40 rents all-in per day in the East Indies. In the highlands Cerna hands receive from 20 to 60 cents per day but the climate of these regions is not favorable to rubber growing.

Dismiss Rutheberg's Case Before Supreme Court; Death Cancels

WASHINGTON, March 15.—The test case of C. E. Ruthenberg was formally dismissed today, following official notification of the supreme court of the United States of the death of C. E. Ruthenberg, General Secretary of the Workers (Communist) Party.

The case was an appeal to the supreme court by Ruthenberg from a conviction of criminal syndicalism in Michigan, following upon the Bridgeman arrests and frame-up.

Police Kill One Wound Another In Fake Church Bombing

By HOWARD HARLAN
(Worker Correspondent)

SAN FRANCISCO, March 15.—Another "wobbly bomb-thrower" has been found in Frisco this week. One of the largest of local churches, the St. Peter and St. Paul, was the edifice affected. It was the fifth explosion in the same church during the past six months. A police alarm sounded as the bomber left the church and he was instantly killed by a volley of shots.

A supposed accomplice across the street became the recipient of a load of buckshot and is now in the hospital in a critical condition. The press, immediately after the shooting, told the public that the wounded man had an I. W. W. card in his pocket and was reaching for a revolver when shot down.

Make Slight Mistake.

This version was later modified when it was found to be a copy of the holy bible and not a revolver that the fellow grabbed when shot. Instead of being a wobbly, he was an outinerant preacher who has spouted on the street corners here for number of years. It is now the consensus of opinion that the wounded man was not connected with the bomb's attack at all, but merely rushed over in the direction of the church when he heard the shots.

See Horrible Conspiracy.

The police, however, sum it up as a deadly organized attempt to ruin the church and that these two men were the tools of higher ups, notwithstanding the fact that the amount of dynamite used was scarce ly sufficient to blow up a pine stump, let alone a massive church.

A new drive is being made on street rorner preachers. The police need to investigate "reds" only when anything violent occurred, but now the radicals are left unmolested while religious meetings are closely watched.

YOUNG HELPERS' REPORT A BLOW AT SHIPLACOFF

But His Machine Keeps It Off Floor

(By Worker Correspondent).

At a meeting of the Helpers Section of the International Pocketbook Workers' Union called for the purpose of electing new officers to the section, Shiplacoff and his "boys" staged a remarkably dramatic showing of how to railroad and "capture" a meeting.

The business agents and organizers and the "klan" together with shop chairmen who do the klan's bidding, stationed themselves in strategic positions throughout the hall, constantly bulldozing and in most instances forcing the workers to vote their way.

Before the meeting opened, the strong-arm gang succeeded in throwing out one of the most capable and militant workers who would have given them plenty of "trouble."

Wouldn't Listen.

It is common procedure that whenever a committee or administration goes out of office that it give an accounting of its work thru a report and make its recommendations to the membership. This the whole right wing machine, including "holy" Shiplacoff prevented, by starting a barrage of objections to the reading of the report of the Helpers Committee.

Criticizes Officials.

The Helpers' Section Committee report which Shiplacoff presented from being read recites that thru pressure by the helpers' section, wages have been fixed at around $30, and some sort of recognition gained. It condemns the union officials for not rendering aid in the hard fight of the young workers on the union, and recommends that they take a real interest in the general helpers and parkers.

It recommends regulations as to the number of learners admitted, and the terms of apprenticeship, and also demands the right to have a sub-committee of helpers meet with the pocketbook makers committee and consult with it over the change of helpers' books and pocketbook makers' books.

Officials Lax.

The helpers' section of this union is composed of young workers. Despite the fact that these young workers pay pretty near as much dues as the adult workers and are supposed to enjoy all the rights of the union, they are terribly exploited.

Modern Looters Scrap Over Pirate Treasure

BALBOA, C. Z., March 15.—Legal tangles have held up the excavators of the English expedition which has been taking treasures from the ruins of old Panama City, believed to have been buried there many years ago by the famous Caribbean pirate Morgan.

Work on the excavations was ordered suspended today until the courts have given a decision as to the title of the lands where the excavation is to progress. The government claims title to the property and a private citizen, who fenced the property two years ago, also claims title. Both parties are willing to aid to the excavations but they claim a share in the proceeds.

The court decision on the title is expected within two days.

Ruthenberg, Agitator, Showed Labor's Knuckles to the Capitalist Class

By J. LOUIS ENGDAHL.

C. E. RUTHENBERG was an agitator among the workers. He seized upon every opportunity to spread a belief in the principles for which he struggled, in the ranks of the working class.

Ruthenberg, for instance, took great pride in a scrap book that contained numerous clippings from various issues of Cleveland's capitalist newspapers of many years ago. Here were the memories of his early days in the revolutionary movement, when he had written "letters" to the capitalist sheets, that they had published, stating the socialist position on the issues before Cleveland's workers at that time. These "letters" covered a multitude of subjects, but they always struck or something that was engaging the attention of labor ot that particular moment, and they brought results.

Ruthenberg's scrap book also contained numerous clippings from the socialist publications of that time, English and foreign-language, but especially the Chicago Daily Socialist. Some of them were announcements of meetings. Others told of routine porty activities. But most of them told of party campaigns that were being waged in the Ohio metropolis, and attracting attention.

* * *

It was no accident that Ruthenberg clashed with the capitalist state in the streets of Cleveland. Ruthenberg, the "Agitator," a word that has often been translated into "soap boxer" in the vocabulary of the revolutionary movement, developed the open air demonstration against capitalism to a high level.

Cleveland has a giant public square that is supposed to be dedicated to "free speech." At least this claim is made on a monument erected in memory of Tom Johnson, former liberal mayor of the city.

Ruthenberg learned that agitators are tolerated in peace times. But when capitalism has a big job to put over, like the world war, when the hostility of the masses becomes n mighty disturbing factor, then it shows its teeth. That is the way capitalism showed its latter hatred of and hostility to the message that Ruthenberg had to deliver to labor. It put the agitator in jail.

Ruthenberg was tolerated up to the time that he made his speech against the war. Since then capitalism has made bitter war against the Communist agitator, fearing him even while dead.

* * *

But even within the socialist movement of the prewar days, the agitator was not looked upon with great favor among big sections of the Party. The warning repeatedly issued was, "Don't go too far." It was urged that the Socialist Party be considered respectable. To the extent that Ruthenberg tried to show the hared knuckles of the working class to the enemy capitalists, to that extent he was anathema even among many so-called "leading Socialists."

It was argued that the revolutionist "scares the votes away." It was declared that "if you go too far" you can't elect anybody.

The state of Ohio, especially Cleveland, was considered one of the reddest spots on the American socialist map. Yet at one time Ohio had mayors and officials in more than a dozen cities, while ultra-social democratic Wisconsin could claim only Milwaukee. When the war broke there were both aldermen and a number of the school board in office, chosen as socialists, to be sure they were all expelled by the 100 per cent patriots. But that was only a tribute to the fact that Ruthenberg was leading a section of the party that was maintaining its loyalty to socialist principle.

When Karl Liebknecht came to the United States in 1910-11, speaking in different sections of the country, he also spoke in Milwaukee. It was on the eve of an election. Victor Berger nearly expired in a fit of hysteria on hearing the revolutionary message that Liebknecht delivered to Milwaukee's workers. He furiously charged that the chances of a socialist electoral victory had been spoiled.

The Milwaukee social-democratic leaders spurned Karl Liebknecht in 1910, just as he was fought by the German social democrats in the war days at home.

But Cleveland, Ohio, gave to the revolutionary movement of this country an American Liebknecht in Ruthenberg, the agitator. Liebknecht defied German capitalism in the streets of Berlin. So did Ruthenberg in the streets of Cleveland.

Capitalism tries to belittle the influence of the Communist agitator. The New York Times declares, in speaking of what it terms the "exaggerated notion of the strength of Communists in the United States," that "the events of the last few years have shown that their (the Communists) power has waned, despite the skillful efforts of Ruthenberg to fan race as well as class hatred."

This editorial utterance is out of harmony with the previous declarations of The Times, in practically the same column. It was The Times that ridiculed the arguments of James Oneal, appearing in his most recent attack on the Communist movement, that the forces of Communism had been considerably weakened. Oneal had arrived at his conclusion by the processes of arithmetic. Although mathematics is an exact science, The Times, in its previous issue, argued that even figures may lie and replied to Oneal accordingly.

Oneal had compared the membership of the Communist Party with the numbers that paid their dues into the socialist party, which mounted to more than 125,000 previous to the war. But The Times said the Communists, the members of the Workers (Communist) Party, were more skilled, energetic and zealous in carrying on the work for Communism than had previously been the case with the membership of the socialist party. Members of the Workers (Communist) Party, therefore, it pointed out, count for more than the type of membership that had been enlisted under the pre-war banners of the socialist party.

This is merely saying that the spirit of Ruthenberg, the agitator, is the spirit of the great percentage of the membership of the Workers (Communist) Party, whereas that same spirit had been bitterly opposed in the socialist ranks, wherever it expressed itself.

It is that same spirit that develops and grows within the broadening left wing of the American labor movement.

Ruthenberg, the agitator, was successful in his struggle for Communism. This is shown in part by the fact that the reaction denounces practically every left wing and opposition movement, no matter in what organization of the workers it is found, as a Communist and Bolshevik. It is an admission by labor's enemy that the class struggle is developing and growing on the side of the workers, and a confession of fear that it will triumph. More agitators among the workers, pressing forward energetically in the spirit of Ruthenberg, will increase that fear of the capitalists, but it will also lift the hopes of the workers for their emancipation.

TIMBERS: A Sketch

By JOSEPH KALAR.

OLSON paused for a moment and rocked dizzily on his feet. With an effort he lifted up a hand to brush away the drops of sweat that beaded his forehead and clung heavily to his eyebrows. His feet, as he looked upon them, seemed dim, distances away from him. They were heavy, plowing through the yellow dung-mixed hog-fuel. Those damned horses . . .

Sweet Jesus but it's hot! Nice place to spend the summer for three bucks and six bits a day. The sun crisps you up, gives you the yellow pups, and then work. Christ!

There before him was the sawmill, like a huge sleek well-fed cat emitting a colossal purr, fed contiously through two shifts with thousands upon thousands of feet of timber and digesting them into lumber. The grinding, monotonous noises of the mill, in themselves a conglomerate overture of industry, merged into a definite rhythm. The shrill buzzing of a saw shining through a water soaked timber . . . the rush and roar of carriages . . . the curaing of teamsters on wagons loaded high with fresh aromatic lumber . . . the thump of timbers sliding down the chute . . . the snoring of the planing mill . . .

Long cool timbers were coming out of the mill with a regularity that in was itself a rhythm, long cool timbers, saturated with water . . .

He climbed on the timber chute and scowled at the peavey that lay awaiting him. Where the hell was Hill, and his partner? This was a hell of a mess for sure. The timbers were jammed to a fearful height on the chute. Well, he'd wait for Bill and his partner. No use tackling it himself, too bad a mess.

Olson and his partner tugged on their peaveys in a furious effort to extricate a timber from the jam and roll it on a wagon. It wouldn't budge. They tugged again, growling. Olson walked to the center of the wedged timber, inserted his peavey, and tugged furiously, cursing. The timber moved. His partner shouted a warning. The timbers began to move in a mass. Olson, paralyzed with fear, attempted to run to one side. The timbers rolled under him, his feet treading. Of a sudden the entire timber jam gave way, and, as Olson dove off head first, slid off the chute, burying him underneath.

Men rushing, streaming forth, going somewhere. A moment before a dead calm, a soothing quiet, men walking about like chilled ants, with bloods in a torpor. A man was killed . . . Jesus! Jesus!

The wagon, on which the timbers were to have been loaded, was tilted over to an alarming angle, being held up on the right side by a huge mass of timbers that had bounded beyond it.

(The horses, untouched, but first deeply frightened, were now breathing quietly. Horse-flies, heavy with blood, crawled drunkenly over their rumps.)

"O Christ! it's no God damn use," said Old Bill, the teamster, "no use fellows, the poor bastard must be ground finer'n the slivers of hell. he must."

The superintendent arrived on the scene, a huge man, with paunch and cheek that trembled like jelly as his heavy feet hit the ground. There was a hint of tears in his voice as he urged the men on, and his fat hands, with short pudgy fingers, thickly covered with reddish hair, clasped and unclasped. He gave a squeal of pain and fright as the removal of a timber brought one leg of Olson to view. A leg perpendicular with the ground, a leg alone, stuck up in the air with such infinite indifference, a leg oblivious to all the hurry and bustle going about it for its own sake. The foot, was in a heavy, slightly worn brown shoe; the over-alls were blue in color, and having slipped down, due to the perpendicular position of the leg, revealed a dirty gray sock gartered with a red rag.

Despite the bungling of the men, the injured man was almost entirely cleared. His head was still covered by a huge 12x12 timber that had rolled down the hypotenuse angle of his body and stopped on the back of his neck, pressing his head into the dirt and hog-fuel. As the timber was removed, a glaring red stain was visible, a stain outlined clearly by the cr.sp-yellow of the timber. The man's face was raw, smeared thickly with clotted blood.

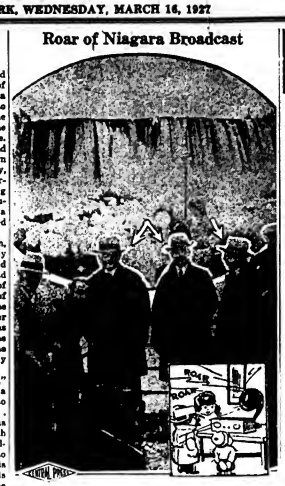
"For Christ's sake boys, hurry," squealed the superintendent, "get a stretcher or something; get him to the hospital, tha poor fellow." . . .

The injured man, apparently, was still alive. He breathed only with great difficulty, a rasping gasp ending in a liquid gurgle. He seemed to breathe through the pores of his whole body, for with each breath his body would rise, his muscles would be convulsed into a hideous distortion, revealing pole gums the color of pork, and teeth clotted with blood, for a moment would remain rigid, then of a sudden seeming to collapse, it would sink into a loose mass of quivering flesh.

A truck removed Olson, with the superintendent standing on the running board and four men steadying the stretcher on which the inert body lay.

"Yessir," said Old Bill, to whoever would listen, "he was standing right here, on the wagon he was standing, I told the damn fool to get off out, no sir, he knew better. Jesus, haven't I worked around this god damn mill ever since it started." I knew what I was talkin' about, let me tell you."

"That reminds me," said one of the oilers, his face smeared brown with oil, "you never know when you're next. I remember once in the lath mill, when a young feller got killed. You see he had . . .



"Shut up," said him. I bet i wasn't fifteen feet from the chute when the timbers gave way. He tried to jump, hot the logs rolled under him and he just dove off. Sure I seen him, wasn't I right here."

The superintendent came back in a hurry. Fat, flabby cheeks, the cheeks of fatty pork, that shook as though made of jelly as the heavy feet were lifted and set down.

"What the hell do you birds think you're doin', anyhow? I've got a good notion to can the whole shootin' match of you. Come on, move on there. One of you fellows go and get an ax and shave the blood off that timber."

(And always the rhythm, an unceasing regularity. The heterogeneous noises of the mill merged into a definite rhythm, and the sawmill, like a huge, sleek well-fed cat sat on its haunches by the river licking its paws. Long, cool timbers were coming out of the mill with a regularity that was in itself a rhythm, long cool timbers saturated with water.)

Roar of Niagara Broadcast

Bowe, Niagara Falls Chamber of Commerce, right arrow—watching the installation of a microphone to broadcast the roar of the falls. Nothing will be allowed to go to waste there apparently; they harnessed the water power, and now they profiteer on the roar.

Better Pugilists for Congress

By WILLIAM PICKENS.

WE have been wondering what to do with our exprize fighters. SEND THEM TO CONGRESS. Harry Wills and Jack Dempsey could certainly make themselves useful in that august body than can the type of representatives whom we have been sending there and who seem not able to hold their own in the great free debates on the floor of that body.

Let us send better athletes to Congress. It would not be an unprecedented thing for in 1842 Abraham Lincoln, then 23 years of age, qualified for his first political race by winning a wrestling championship. In that year he said we'll Jack Armstrong, Champion Wrestler of the District, and ran for the General Assembly of Illinois, on the strength of that achievement. This started his political career.

When Charles Sumner, of Massachusetts, was debating the question of Negro suffrage, some of the gentlemen from the South" who were opposed to it, came forward with hickory sticks to uphold their end of the debate. But now, since "the gentlemen from Texas" and "the gentlemen from New York" have decided to use only the old-fashioned fist, we should nominate and send up our finest in the next congressional elections like Dempsey, Delaney, Greb, Wills, and such others, whose fitness could not be in doubt. It might be well to make Tunney the president of the Senate, to insure general order.

When a fellow is being nominated for any position, we ought to consider the qualities which best fit him to fill that position today in the Congress of the United States we need stout arms, heavy fists and hard skulls.

We hear that the democrats and republicans are considering the opening of training camps, to prepare fit candidates for the championship go of 1928.

Diver "Plugs In" On Sea Floor

Harry L. Paige, deep sea diver of Corpus Christi, Tex., passes many hours alone at the bottom of the Bay of Corpus Christi laying a pipe line, yet he doesn't lack companionship. A radio enthusiast, Page, has installed a receiving set on the barge from which he descends. He plugs one end of a long coil of heavily insulated wire into the radio box and attaches the other to his ear phones, which he wears inside his diver's helmet. Before descending Paige tunes in a favorite station, then climbs down the ladder. "It works and there isn't any static either," is his enthusiastic report. Photos show Paige "tuning in" and descending to his work.

OVERCAPITALIZATION IN FLOUR INDUSTRY SHOWN TO BE RESULT OF CAPITALISM

By LELAND OLDS (Federated Press).

A tremendously overexpanded milling industry is one of the burdens competitive capitalism has placed on the wheat farmer, according to figures compiled monthly by the U. S. department of commerce. The department reports that in January 1927, 1026 of the country's flour mills operated at only 53.3% of capacity and that the average operation of the entire year 1926 represented only 54.1% of capacity.

The barrels of wheat flour produced by the mills reporting to the department and the percent of capacity operated are shown month by month for 1926 as follows:

Flour mill operation in 1926	Wheat flour produced	Percent of capacity
January	8,679,028 bbls.	53.6%
February	7,429,297	50.0
March	8,586,893	47.4
April	7,589,263	44.9
May	7,418,410	44.0
June	8,069,972	47.6
July	9,569,966	57.0
August	10,447,090	62.1
September	10,843,480	67.0
October	10,677,536	63.3
November	9,618,240	58.9
December	8,908,920	53.0
Total	107,474,895	54.1%

The overexpansion of the milling industry has been recently remarked by the food research institute of Stanford University in a study of the American wheat situation. It says: "Overextension has led to excessive competition the world over and tariff policies in many countries are tending further to increase the excess of milling capacity. The American milling industry faces liquidation and readjustment. There is much redundant capacity and equipment that cannot be put into operation or carried indefinitely on the books."

A glance at the financial reports of 3 large milling companies shows that this overexpansion has been reflected in stock dividends and that grain farmers and consumers between them are expected to pay a toll on the resulting excessive capitalization. The Standard Milling Co., producing Hecker's Flour, "H-O" Oats and Force, has given its stockholders 3 stock dividends adding more than 70% to its capitalization. Gold Medal flour has paid stock dividends of 150% and 20% thereby tripling its capitalization. The Washburn-Crosby Co., producers of Gold Medal flour, has increased its capitalization about 50% through stock dividends.

Reorganization of the industry by the bankers will undoubtedly incorporate all the excessive capitalization, with additional water pumped in to give the promoters a generous rakeoff. An approach to monopoly will enable the resulting trusts to make a profit at the expense of farmers and consumers. An alternative would be the milling industry controlled by farmers selling direct to consumer cooperatives.

FOOTNOTES TO THE NEWS

By EUGENE LYONS

"What your column lacks," Bob Dunn writes, "is the solid inspirational stuff—self-help, onward and upward. I submit some verse from the "Association News," organ of the Association of Maintenance of Way and Miscellaneous Foremen, Mechanics and Helpers of the Santa Fe Railroad System, one of our nation's cutest little company unions. As the lines are anonymous I leave it to you to guess whether they were chiselled by a mechanic or a helper."

The lines in question follow:

IT PAYS.

He rang in a little sooner
Than the fellows in his shop;
And he stayed a little longer
When the whistle blew to "Stop"!
He worked a little harder
And he talked a little less;
He seemed but little harried
And showed but little stress,
For every little movement
His efficiency expressed.

Thus his envelope grew just
A little thicker than the rest.
He saved a little money
In a hundred little ways;
He banked a little extra
When he got a little raise.
Now it's very little wonder
That he murmurs with a smile,
As he clips his little coupons;
"Are the little things worth while?"

Coolidge will go west for 12 weeks to learn how the poor farmers live. Pictures of palatial homes where Coolidge may stay during this period are already in the papers.

THE LOW- DOWN ON THE STATUE OF LIBERTY: AN INTERVIEW

By Jake, the Demon Reporter

Miss Liberty is a tragic figure, and no insult intended. Under her hard unruffled surface there beats a heart in anguish.

Her career has been a mistake from the beginning—she was never cut out for the role. Her instincts are all the other way. In her old age—she came to these shores exactly fifty years ago and she was no chicken when she got here—she is friendless, forgotten.

For the first time in her long dull life she consented to lay bare her soul to a reporter. Hers is a case of wrong vocation: the lady on the pedestal never meant the kind of liberty that's been tied to her. On the contrary, she got her notions in the land of her birth, France, and first put them into practice in Paris.

"I am shocked," was her first remark, "that anyone should bother to interview me. Nobody cares—"

"But—" your reporter, who is something of a steeplejack, tried to reassure her as he settled on her under lip.

"Yes, I know, I know," she interrupted. "My picture is on postcards and on the joker in the poker deck. They've got me worked into ash trays, fancy needlework, the masthead of the New York World and any number of trade-marks and advertising displays for candy, laxatives and what have you. I know that my name is mentioned an average of 8,435,008 times annually in July Fourth, Rotary, Kiwanis meetings and the like. I know that there is some vague reference to me at liberal tea parties and the like. But what about me—not my picture or my name, but myself?"

"You mean—" exclaimed your reporter, who has what amounts to a sixth sense in delicate matters touching upon female psychology.

"Exactly," she ejaculated happily, "I knew you would understand. Have you ever been to Paris? Anyhow, what I mean, honey, is that I am a woman after all. Jake, tell them out there that in the name of liberty they have made a prisoner of me. Let them try to imagine, if they can, the horror of being stuck up in the middle of the bay, thinking, thinking, thinking . . . while the breezes waft hither the sounds of jazz bands, booze parties, revivals, debates on monogamy and other forms of entertainment! Was it for this I came all the way across the ocean—and travel wasn't so interesting then, dearie. Nothing then to match the stolen romance on ships nowadays. Sure I overhear things as the big liners pass."

"Then why," the reporter queried as he mounted higher to observe a far-away dreamy look in the old girl's eye, "why did you come?"

"Are you sure you can keep a secret, Jake?" she asked. Before the kind-hearted reporter could stop her, however, she told all. Luckily it is unprintable, which saves the reporter, who is getting thirsty, the job of writing it.

The gist of her confession was that she had to leave Paris. She left, indeed, under a good-sized cloud. She had carried her ideas of liberty a lot too far, even for Paris.

"No, no," she exclaimed, "it wasn't the July Fourth brand. It was the kind—well, its the kind the moral turpitude clause is all about. I came to conquer, full of French wiles—and look what's happened to me' Oh hell, it's just like you Americans to import something foreign and to misunderstand it completely."

After which she sighed, endangering the life of your reporter who luckily has nine of them, and asserted, or at any rate said:

"It's terrible, terrible! One must be made of iron to stand it."

"Of bronze, lady, of bronze," the reporter corrected her gently and jumped into the bay.

Add to the White Man's Burden.—The principal trouble is that savages aren't grateful. They don't know what they're missing and don't seem to care. We bring them civilization on a golden platter, but they just sniff and turn away. Take, for example, the situation in Liberia. There's the Firestone Rubber Company anxious to spend about $100,000,000 in that part of Africa. The Department of Commerce gives this picture of Liberian ingratitude:

"With an uncivilized population of at least 1,500,000, it would seem reasonable to suppose that many thousand laborers might ultimately be obtained for plantation work. . . . Practically all their meager wants are supplied by their own initiative. To induce any considerable number of them to change fully their present mode of living would require great diplomacy on the part of the employers wishing their services.

"Engagements of gangs are made, as a rule, for six months, beyond which period it is difficult to endure the men to remain. When, therefore, it is borne in mind that only toward the latter part of their term of service do the laborers begin to understand or display any aptitude for the somewhat specialized work they are often called upon to perform, it will be seen that the efficient discharge of their duties can only be looked for during the latter portion of their period of engagement. On the arrival of a new gang everything connected with their instruction must be begun all over again."

Agitate For Better Subways!

Editor, Daily Worker: Announcement in the capitalist "Daily News" that John F. Gilchrist, chairman of the Greater New York Transit Commission, has summarily ordered the I. R. T. and the B. M. T. traction interests to keep all subway and elevated stations, including rest rooms and lavatories clean, indicates that the transit commission realizes that the filth in subways is a menace to the health of this city.

If the transit commission is really interested in the health of New York workers it doesn't see to it that the rules which it suggests are really enforced, instead of being content with mouthing phrases and forgetting them promptly.

The workers of New York cannot depend upon the transit commission. The labor movement, especially the Central Trades and Labor Council, should persistently agitate for improved subway conditions.—Marc Stone, New York City.

Sinclair Jury Has Little to Decide

If Found He Didn't Answer Senate, He's Guilty

WASHINGTON, March 16. — The case of Harry F. Sinclair, multi-millionaire oil operator, charged with contempt of the United States Senate was given to the jury today shortly before 2 o'clock. The jury came in shortly after for a ruling and is reported to stand 11 to 1 for conviction.

In his instructions Justice William Hitz, presiding, confused the jurors to a pointed ecasideration of the four basic facts at issue — was Sinclair summoned before the committee, did he appear, was he swarn, did he refuse to answer certain questions?

"If you find these facts, it will be your duty to find the defendant guilty," the court said in conclusion.

The instructions required less than fifteen mlautes.

Closing arguments were finished before noon.

THE days of romance are not over. ORGANIZE FIGHT FOR ANTI-POWER TRUST PROGRAM

Think Publicity Might Control Octopus

WASHINGTON, March 16 (FP) — Meeting in the office of Senator Norris, a group of progressives, senators and congressmen and public-ownership advocates and students of power development decided, on March 10, to challenge the growing political dictatorship of the electric power trust.

Judson King, advocate of the Ontario public-ownership system of handling electric power, was one of the leaders of the gathering. Basil M. Manly of the People's Legislative Service issued the invitations. Senators Norris and Hiram Johnson—the latter as chief advocate of the public development of power at Boulder Canyon on the Colorado River—discussed the situation presented by the triumph of the General Electric trust ia the recent cangress. Others present included Senators Borah, Nye, Frazier, Howell, Norbeck aad Harris of Georgia, and Rep. Swing af California.

For Publicity.

Borah said the conference was held to determine on ways of getting the facts before the people, prior to the next session of congress.

Reference to dictation from the power companies was based on the public statemeat made by Josiah Newcomb in the fight to kill the Boulder Canyon bill in the recent session of congress.

Dictates To Government.

"I represent seven billion dollars of investment in the power industry," said Newcomb, chief power lobbyist. "We will not permit the federal government to go into the power business. If this bill is amended so as to drop the clause which permits the government to build and operate a power plant, it can pass at this session. If it is not amended it cannot pass."

The bill was not amended in that respect, and it did not pass either branch of congress.

Sapiro's Real Associates Senators

Coolidge's Cabinet Member Aided Him, Not Radicals

DETROIT, March 16. — Attorney William Henry Gallagher, appearing for the plaiatiff in Aaron Sapiro's million dollar libel suit against Henry Ford, had his day in court. That is, he did most af the talking today.

His main line of argument consisted of placing jn evidence various articles in the Dearborn Independent, Ford's newspaper, in which charges were brought against Sapiro, that he was part of a "ring" of international Jewish bankers, plotting, with the aid of the Communists, the I. W. W., and the Non-partisan League to reduce the American banker to a servile state, and outlining his refutation of them.

Fuzzy Charges.

Extracts from the articles, read ont in the open and subjected to merciless flaying and dissection by Gallagher, made Ford's accusations seem more comical than ever.

Ford's charges that the Sapiro group fostered Bolshevism in the northwest were discussed at length by Gallagher.

Cooperatives Radical?

The article said that whereven the farmers of Idaho, Washington or Oregon organized a Sapiro cooperative it would be found that "an outbreak of Communism, radicalism or I. W. W ism had occurred in the same community." It further declared that "radicals and even open adherents of Communism and R-l-sevism" were used as "storage arms" to force farmers into the cooperatives. It also said "first there is an outstanding example of the combination of law and radicalism, a clear exposition of the hand-in-hand workings of the notorious Sapiro plan of marketing and the principles of Bolshevism which must be told."

The criticism that radicals of all shades have leveled against Sapiro's "associates" is that they are merc middle class selling agencies, of a corporate commission merchant type, and as far removed from what a Communist or an I. W. W. has in mind as Lowden and Morgan themselves.

Big Politicians.

Gallagher attacked the matter of radicalism, however, from exactly the other side. He offered to introduce evidence to show that Sapiro's real associates were neither radicals nor Jews, but none other than cabinet members and U. S. senators, of gentile blood.
